That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,

And yet are on 't? How are you? or are you aught

That man may question? You seem to understand me,

By each o' once her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips. You should be women,

And yet your bearings forbid me to interpret

That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can,—What are you?

1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!

2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!

3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.

Ban. Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear

Things that do sound so fair?—'T is the name of truth,

Are ye fantastical, or that, indeed,

Which outwardly you shew? My noble partner

Ye greet with present grace, and great prediction

O' noble having, and of royal hope,

That he seems wrapt withal: To me you speak not:

If you can look into the seeds of time,

And say, which grain will grow, and which will not;

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear

Your favours nor your hate.

1 Witch. Hail!

2 Witch. Hail!

3 Witch. Hail!

1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none:

So, all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

1 Witch. Banquo and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:

By Sinel's death, I know, I am thane of Glamis;

But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,

A prosperous gentleman; and, to be king,

Stands not within the prospect of belief,

No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence

You owe this strange intelligence? or why

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way

With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you.

(Witches vanish.)

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,

And these are of them:—Whither are they vanish'd?

Macb. Into the air; and what seem'd corporal, meted

As breath into the wind.—Would they had staid!

Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak about?

Or have we eaten of the insane root,

That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?

Ban. To the self-same tune and words. Who's here?

Enter ROSSE and ANGUS.

Rosse. The king hath happily received, Macbeth,

The news of thy success: and when he reads

Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight,

His wonders and his praises do contend,

Which should be thine, or his: Silenced with that,

In viewing o'er the rest o' the self-same day,

He finds thee in the stout Norwegian ranks,

Nothing afraid o' what thyself didst make,

Strange images of death. As thick as tale,

Came post with post; and every one did bear

Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,

And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,

To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;

To herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.

Rosse. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,

He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:

In which addition, hail most worthy thane!

For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives: Why do you dress

In borrow'd robes! [He]

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet;

But under heavy judgment bears that life,

Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was

Combined with Norway, or did live the rebel

With hidden help and vantage, or that with both

He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;

But treasons capital, confess'd and proved,

Have overthrow'n him.

Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor:

The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains.—

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,

When those, that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,

Promised no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home,

Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,

Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:

And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;

Win us with honest trifles, to betray us

In deepest consequence.—

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,

As happy prologues to the swelling act

Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen.

This supernatural soliciting

Cannot be ill; cannot be good: If ill,

Why hath it given me earnest of success,

Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:

If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,

Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,

And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,

Against the use of nature? Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings:

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,

Shakes so my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,

But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance may

Without my stir. [Crown me,]

Ban. New honours come upon him

Like our strange garments,—cleave not to their mould,

But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what come may;

Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour:—my dull brain was wrought

With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains

Are register'd where every day I turn

The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king.—

Think upon what hath chanced; and, at more time,

The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak

Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough.—Come, friends.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONAL-

BAIN, LENOX, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not

Those on commission yet return'd?

Mal. My liege,

They are not yet come back. But I have spoke

With one that saw him die: who did report,

That very frankly he confess'd his treasons;

Implored your highness' pardon; and set forth

A deep repentance. Nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it: he died
As one that had been stulted in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he owed,
As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face:
He was a gentleman, on whom I built
An absolute trust.—O worst of humors!

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSSE, ANGUS.

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: Thou art so far before,
That swift-winged recompense is slow
To overtake thee. 'Would thou hadst less deserved,
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties; and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children and servants;
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honour.

Dun. Welcome hither:
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserved, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me unfold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fullness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm; whom we name hereafter,
The prince of Cumberland: which honour must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers.—From hence to Inverness,
And bind us farther to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not used for you:
I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach;
So, humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!
Macb. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a step,
On which I must fall down, or else o'erleap, (Aside.)
For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires!
Let not light see my black and deep desires:
The eye wink at the hand! yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see. [Exit.]

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant;
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Re-ent.]

SCENE V.—Inverness. A Room in MACBETH'S Castle.

Enter LADY MACBETH, reading a letter.

Lady M. They met me in the dny of success; and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them farther, they made themselves—air, into which they vanished. Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who nll-boiled me, Thane of Cawdor; by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, Hail, king that shalt be!
This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness, that thou mightst not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be
What thou art promised.—Yet do I fear thy nature;
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
To catch the nearest way: Thou wouldst be great;
Art not without ambition, but without
The illness should attend it. What thou wouldst highly,
That thou dost holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongfully win: thou 'dst have, great Glamis,

That which cries, Thus thou must do, if thou have it:
And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
Than wishest should be undone. Hie thee hither,
That I may pour in spirits in thine ear:
And chastise with the valour of my tongue

All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal.—What is your tidings?

Enter an Attendant.

Atten. The king comes here to-night.
Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it:
Is not thy master with him? who, were't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Atten. So please you, it is true; our thane is coming:
One of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending,
He brings great news.—The raven himself is hoarse,
[Exit Attendant.]

That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell!
'That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor Heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, Hold, hold!—Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!

Enter MACBETH.

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?
Macb. To-morrow,—as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see!
Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters.—To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it. He that's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my despatch;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak farther.
Lady M. Only look up clear;
To alter favour ever is to fear:
Leave all the rest to me. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—The same. Before the Castle.

Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending.

*Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, BANQUO, LENOX, MUCDUFF, ROSSE,
ANGUS, and Attendants.*

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimble and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his loved mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells woonly here; no jutty, frieze, buttress,
Nor coigne of vantage, but this bird hath made
His preud bed, and procreant cradle: Where they Most breed and haunt, I have observed, the air
Is delicate.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Dun. See, see! our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herin I teach you,
How you shall bid God yield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business, to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house: For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We coursed him at the heels, and had a

To be his purveyor : but he rides well ;
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in contempt,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand ;
Conduct me to mine host ; we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him. [Exeunt.
By your leave, hostess.

SCENE VII.—The same. A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter and pass over the stage, a Sevier, and divers Servants with dishes and service. Then enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere
It were done quickly : If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success ; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,—
We'd jump the life to come.—But, in these cases,
We still have judgment here ; that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor : This even-handed justice
Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He 's here in double trust ;
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed ; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off ;
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or Heaven's cherubin, horsed
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other.—How now, what news ?

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd : Why have you left
The chamber ?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me ?

Lady M. Know you not, he has ?

Macb. We will proceed no farther in this business :
He hath honour'd me of late ; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself ? hath it slept since ?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely ? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou art in desire ? Wouldst thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem ;
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage ?

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace :
I dare do all that may become a man ;
Who dares do more, is none.

Lady M. What beast was 't then,
That made you break this enterprise to me ?
When you durst do it, then you were a man ;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place,
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both :
They have made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. I have given suck ; and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me :
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fall,—

Lady M. We fall !
But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we 'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep,
(Whereto the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and vassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason

A limbeck only. When in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan ? what not put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell ?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only !
For thy undaunted metal should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be received,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber, and used their very daggers,
That they have done it ?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death ?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show :
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Court within the Castle.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, and a Servant with a torch before them.

Ban. How goes the night, boy ?

Fle. The moon is down ; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take 't, 'tis later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword.—There 's husbandry in heaven,

Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep. Merciful powers !

Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose !—Give me my sword ;—

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a torch.

Who 's there ?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest ? The king 's a-bed ;
He hath been in unusual pleasure, and
Sent forth great largess to your officers :
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess ; and shut up
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepared,
Our will became the servant to defect ;
Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All 's well.
I dream'd last night of the three weird sisters :
To you they have shew'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them :
Yet, when we can enter an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind 'st leisure

Macb. If you shall leave to my consent,—when 't is,
It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none,
In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsel'd.

Macb. Good repose, the while !

Ban. Thanks, sir ; the like to you ! [Exit Banquo.

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.—
[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand ? Come, let me clutch thee—

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling, as to sight ? or art thou but

A dagger of the mind ; a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain ?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going ;

And such an instrument I was to use.

Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest : I see thee still ;

And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,

Which was not so before.—There 's no such thing :

It is the bloody business which informs

Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the cue half world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep ; now witchcraft celebrates

Pale Hecate's offerings ; and wither'd murder,

Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design
Moves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
The very stones prate of my whereabouts,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it.—Whiles I threat, he lives;
Words to the beat of deeds too cold breath gives.

(A bell rings.)
I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. That, which hath made them drunk, hath made me hold;
What hath quenched them, hath given me fire.—Hark!
—Peace!

It was the owl that shriek'd; the fatal bellman
Which gives the stern'st good-night. He is about it:
The doors are open; and the surfeit'd grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I have dugg'd their possets,

That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live, or die.

Macb. (Within.) Who's there?—what, ho!
Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awaked,
And 'tis not done—the attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us:—Hark!—I laid their daggers ready,
He could not miss them.—Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done't.—My husband!

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. I have done the deed—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets
Dit! not you speak? [cry.]

Macb. When? Now.

Lady M. As I descended?

Macb. Hark!—Who lies i' the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight.

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in his sleep, and one cried, Murder!

That they did wake each other; I stood and heard
But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodged together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and, Amen, the other;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.

Listening their fear, I could not say, Amen,

When they did say, God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce, Amen?

I had most need of blessing, and Amen
Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After these ways; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more!

Macbeth does murder sleep, the innocent sleep;

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care;

Glamis hath murder'd sleep; and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleep no more, Macbeth shall sleep no more!

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane,

You do unhand your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things.—Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: Go, carry them; and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more:

I am afraid to think what I have done;

Look on't again, I dare not.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose!

Give me the daggers: The sleeping, and the dead,
Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood,
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,

I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal,
For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within.]
Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me, when every noise appals me?
What hands are here? Ha! they pluck out mine eyes!
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my band? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green—one red.

Re-enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame
To wear a heart so white. (Knock.) I hear a knocking
At the south entry—retire we to our chamber:
A little water clears us of this deed:
How easy is it then! Your constancy Hath left you unattended.—(Knocking.) Hark! more knocking:

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And shew us to be watchers:—Be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed, 'twere best not know myself. (Knock.)

Wake Duncan with thy knocking! Ay, 'would thou couldst! (Exit.)

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter a Porter. (Knocking within.)

Port. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key.
(Knocking.) Knock, knock, knock! Who's there, i' the name of Belzebub? Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: Come in time; have napkins enough about you; here you'll sweat for't.

(Knocking.) Knock, knock! Who's there, i' the other devil's name? 'Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; yet committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to Heaven: O, come in, equivocator.

(Knocking.) Knock, knock, knock! Who's there?
'Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. (Knocking.) Knock, knock; Never at quiet! What are you?—But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no farther; I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. (Knocking.) Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter.

(Opens the gate.)

Enter MACDUFF and LENOX.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, that you do lie so late?

Port. 'Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock:—and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine.
Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore, much drunk may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets him on,
and it takes him off; it persuades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand too, and not stand to; in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macd. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.

Port. That it did, sir, i' the very throat o' me: but I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macd. Is thy master stirring?—
Our knocking has awaked him; here he comes.

Enter MACBETH.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir!

Macb. Good-morrow, both!

Macb. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macb. He did command me to call timely on him;

I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you;

But yet, 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in, physics pain.

This is the door.

Macd. I'll make so bold to call,

For 'tis my limited service. [Exit Macduff]

Len. Goest the king

From hence to-day?

Macb. He does:—he did appoint it so.

Len. The night has been unruly. Where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say,
Lamentings heard 't the air; strange screams of death;
And prophesying, with accents terrible,
Of dire combustion, and confused events,
New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure hird
Clamour'd the live-long night: some say, the earth
Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor Cannot conceive, nor name thee! [heart,

Macb. Len. What's the matter?

Macd. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece!
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life of the building.

Macb. What is 't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon.—Do not bid me speak;
See, and then speak yourselves.—Awake! Awake!—
[Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.
Ring the alarm-bell.—Murder! and treason!
Banquo, and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeits,
And look on death itself!—up, up, and see
The great doom's image!—Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprights,
To countenance this horror! (Bell rings.)

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Speak, speak,—

Macd. O, gentle lady,
'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear,
Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo!

Enter BANQUO.

Our royal master's murder'd!
Lady M. Woe, alas!

What, in our house?
Ban. Too cruel any where.—
Dear Duff, I pry'thee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Re-enter MACBETH and LENOX.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time; for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality:
All is but toys: renown, and grace, is dead;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter MALCOLM and DONALBAIN.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know it:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. O, by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done 't:
Their hands and faces were all haged with blood,
So were their daggers, which, unwiped, we found
Upon their pillows:
They stared, and were distracted; no man's life
Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you do so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amazed, temperate and Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man: [furious,
The expedition of my violent love
Out-ran the pauser reason.—Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood;
And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature
For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,
Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers
Unmannerly breech'd with gore: Who could refrain,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart
Courage, to make his love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macd. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken here,
Where our fate, hid within an augre-hole,

May rush, and seize us? Let's away; our tears
Are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow on
The foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:—

(Lady Macbeth is carried out.)

And when we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet,

And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it farther. Fears and scruples shake us:

In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence,
Against the undivulged pretence I fight

Of treasonous malice.

Macb. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,

And meet i' the hall together

All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but Mal. and Don.

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them:
To shew an unfeil sorrow, is an office

Which the false man does easy: I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland; I, our separate fortune

Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in mer's smiles; the near in blood,

The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way

Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;

And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away. There's warrant in that theft,

SCENE IV. — Without the Castle.

Enter ROSSE and an old Man.

Old M. Three score and ten I can remember well:
Within the volume of which time, I have seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore night
Hath trifled former knowings.

Rosse. Ah, good father,

Thou seest the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage; by the clock 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:
Is it night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Rosse. And Duncan's horses, (a thing most strange and certain,)

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said, they eat each other.

Rosse. They did so; to the amazement of mine eyes,
That look'd upon 't. Here comes the good Macduff:—

Enter MACDUFF.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Macd. Why, see you not?

Rosse. Is 't known who did this more than bloody Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain. [Heed?

Rosse. Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were suborn'd; Malcolm and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are stolen away and fled, which puts upon them
Suspicion of the deed.

Rosse. 'Gainst nature still;

Thrifless ambition, that will raven up
Thine own life's means!—Then 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.

Macd. He is already named; and gone to Scone,
To be invested.

Rosse. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colmes-kil;

The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.

Rosse. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Rosse. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well, may you see things well done there;—
adieu!—

Let our old robes sit easier than our new!

Rosse. Father, farewell.

Old M. God's benison go with you; and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes!

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Foras. A Room in the Palace.Enter BANQUO.

Ban. Thou hast it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weird women promised; and, I fear,
Thou play'st most foully for't: yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. If these come truth from them,
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,)
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Senet sounded. Enter MACBETH, as King; LADY MACBETH, as Queen; LENOX, ROSSÉ, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to the which, my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have also desired your good advice
(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous)
In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.
Is't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night,
For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: But of that to-morrow;
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us joint'ly. Hie you to horse: Adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. Ay, my good lord: our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift, and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to their backs.
Farewell.— [Exit Banquo.]

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Reunt Lady Macbeth, Lords, Ladies, &c.]

Sirrah, a word: Attend those men our pleasure?

Attend. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.— [Exit Attendant.] To be thus, is nothing;

But to be safely thus.—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature
Reigns that, which would be fear'd. 'Tis much he
And, to that dauntless temper of his mind, [dares;]
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none but he Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My genius is rebuked; as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of King upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings:
Upon my head they placed a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unliken hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If it be so,
For Banquo's issue have I filed my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.]
Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

1 Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now
Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know,
That it was he, in the times past, which held you

So under fortune; which, you thought, had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference—pass'd in probation with you, How you were borne in hand; how cross'd; the instruments;

Who wrought with them; and all things else, that
To half a soul, and to a notion crazed, [might,]
Saw, Thus did Banquo.

1 Mur. You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so; and went farther, which is now

Your point of second meeting. Do you find

Your patience so predominant in your nature,

That you can let this go? Are you so goss-pell'd,

To pray for that good man, and for his issue,

Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,

And beggar'd your hours for ever?

1 Mur. We are men, my liege.

Macb. I did so; and went farther, which is now

As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,

Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cleped

All by the name of dogs: the valved file

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,

The house-keeper, the hunter, every one

According to the gift which bounteous nature

Hath in him closed; whereby he does receive

Particular addition, from the bill

That writes them all alike: and so of men.

Now, if you have a station in the file,

And not in the worst rank of manhood, say it;

And I will put that business in your bosoms,

Whose execution takes your enemy off;

Grapples you to the heart and love of us,

Who wear our health but sickly in his life,

Which in his death were perfect.

2 Mur. I am one, my liege,

Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world

Have so incensed, that I am reckless what

I do, to spite the world.

1 Mur. And I another,

So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,

That I would set my life on any chance,

To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you

Know, Banquo was your enemy.

2 Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance,

That every minute of his being thrusts

Against my near'st of life: And though I could

With bare-faced power sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,

For certain friends that are both his and mine,

Whose loves I may not drop, but will his fall

Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is,

That I to your assistance do make love;

Masking the business from the common eye,

For sundry weighty reasons.

2 Mur. We shall, my lord,

Perform what you command us.

1 Mur. Though our lives—

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour, at most,

I will advise you where to plant yourselves.

Acquaint you with the perfect spy of the time,

The moment on't; for 't must be done to-night,

And something from the palace; always thought,

Tbat I require a clearness: And with him,

(To leave no rubs nor botches in the work,)

Fleance his son, that keeps him company,

Whose absence is no less material to me

Than is his father's, must embrace the fate

Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart;

I'll come to you anon.

2 Mur. We are resolved, my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight; abide within.

It is concluded.—Banquo, thy soul's flight,

If it find heaven, must find it out to-night. [Reunt]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room.Enter LADY MACBETH and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure

For a few words.

Serv. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,

Where our desire is got without content:

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,

Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter MACBETH.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest fancies your companions making?

Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Things without remedy,
Should be without regard; what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it;
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.
But let

The frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams,
That shake us nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him farther!

Lady M. Come on;
Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love; and so, I pray, he you:
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue:
Unsafe the while, that we Must lave our honours in these flattering streams;
And make our faces vizards to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.
Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!
Thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, live.

Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eterne.
Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund: Ere the bath hath flow'd
His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's summons,
The shard-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What's to be done?
Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling night,
Skarf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And, with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cancel, and tear to pieces, that great bond
Which keeps me pale!—Light thickens; and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse;
Whiles night's black agents to their prey do rouse.
Thou marvell'st at my words: but hold thee still;
Things, bad begun, make strong themselves by ill:
So, pry'thee, go with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace.

Enter Three Murderers.

1 Mur. But who did bid thee join with us?
3 Mur. Macbeth.
2 Mur. He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.

1 Mur. Then stand with us,
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the late traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. Hark, I hear horses.

Ban. (Within.) Give us a light there, ho!

2 Mur. Then it is he; the rest
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' the court.

1 Mur. His horses go about.
3 Mur. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate,
Make it their walk.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, a Servant with a torch preceding them.

2 Mur. A light, a light!
3 Mur. This he.

1 Mur. Stand to't.
Ban. It will be rain to-night.
1 Mur. Let it come down.
(Assaults Banquo.)

*Sen. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly;
Thou may'st revenge.—O slave!*

(Disc. Fleance and Servant escape.)

3 Mur. Who did strike out the light?
1 Mur. Was't not the way?
3 Mur. There's but one down; the son is led.
2 Mur. We have lost best half of our affair.
1 Mur. Well, let's away, and say how much is done.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room of State in the Palace. A Banquet prepared.

Enter MACBETH, LADY MACBETH, ROSSE, LENEX, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees, sit down; at first,
And last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
Macb. Ourselves will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state; but, in best time,
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

Enter first Murderer, to the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts'
thanks.

Both sides are even: Here I'll sit i' the mid'st:
Be large in mirth; anon, we'll drink a measure
The table round.—There's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.
Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within.
Is he despatch'd?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats: Yet he's good.

That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,
Fleance is scaped.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been Whole as the marble, founded as the rock;
As broad, and general, as the casing air;
But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe?

Mur. Ay, my good lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that.—
There the grown serpent lies; the worm, that's fled,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone; to-morrow
We'll hear, ourselves again. [Exit Murderers.]

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making;
'Tis given with welcome: To feed, were best at home;
From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!—
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May it please your highness sit?
(The Ghost of Banquo rises, and sits in Macbeth's place.)

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the graced person of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness
Than pity for mischance!

Rosse. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness
To grace us with your royal company?

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here's a place reserved, sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my lord. What is't that moves your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?
Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake
Thy gory locks at me.

Rosse. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends:—my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: 'pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary; upon a thought
He will again be well; if much you note him,
You will offend him, and extend his passion;
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff!

This is the very painting of your fear:

This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,

Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws and starts,

(Impostors to true fear,) would well become

A woman's story, at a winter's fire,

Authorized by her grandam. Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? When all's don

You look but on a stool.

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look! lo! how say you?—

Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.—
If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury, back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. (Ghost disappears.)

Lady M. What! quite unmann'd in folly?
Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.
Macb. I do forget!—
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:—
I drink to the general joy of the whole table,
Ere human statute purged the gentle weal;—
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end; but now, they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: This is more strange
Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.
Macb. I do forget!—
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:—
I drink to the general joy of the whole table,

Ghost rises.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;
Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst,
And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.
Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;
Only it spoli the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhabit thee, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!
(Ghost disappears.)

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so,—being gone,
I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displaced the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admired disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;
Question enrages him: at once, good night:—
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health
Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all!
(Exeunt Lords and Attendants.)

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood:

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;
Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth
The secret'st man of blood.—What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his part at our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send;
There's not a one of them, but in his house
I keep a servant fe'd. I will to-morrow,
(Betimes I will,) unto the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good,
All causes shall give way; I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er:
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;
Which must be acted, ere they may be scan'd.

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange and self-
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use!—
We are yet but young in deed. (Exeunt)

SCENE V.—The Heath. Thunder.

Enter HECATE, meeting the three Witches.

I Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angerly
Hec. Have I not reason, Hecate, as you are,
Saucy, and overbold? How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles, and affairs of death;
And I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part,
Or shew the glory of my art?
And, which is worse, all you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spitful, and wrathful; who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But nuke amends now: Get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' the morning; thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels and your spells provide,
Your charms, and every thing beside:
I am for the air; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal-fatal end.
Great business must be wrought ere noon:
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that, distill'd by magic sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprites,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion:
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear:
And you all know, security
Is mortals' chiefest enemy.

SONG. (Within.) Come away, come away, &c.

Hark, I am call'd; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. (Exit.)

I Witch. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VI.—Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Enter LENOX and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret farther: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne: The gracious
Duncan

Was pitied of Macbeth:—marry, he was dead:—
And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late;
Whom, you may say, if it please you, Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled. Men must not walk too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain,

To kill their gracious father?—damned fact!
How did it grieve Macbeth i' d he not straight,
In pious rage, the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too;
For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive,
To hear the men deny it. So that, I say,
He has borne all things well: and I do think,
That had he Duncan's sons under his key,
(As, an't please Heaven, he shall not,) they should find
What 'twere to kill a father: so should Fleance.
But, peace!—for from broad words, and 'cause he
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear, (fall'd)
Macduff lives in disgrace: Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court; and is received
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, on his aid
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Siward:
That, by the help of these, (with Him above
To ratify the work,) we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives;
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now: And this report
Hath so exasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I,

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, *You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer.*

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some heavenly angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accus'd.

Lord. My prayers with him!
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron boiling. Thunder.

Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whined.
3 Witch. Harper cries:—'Tis time, 'tis time.
1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.—
Toad, that under coldest stone,
Days and nights has thirty-one
Swelter'd venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot!

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adler's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-brn'd hill and bubble.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
Witches' mummy; maw, and gulf,
Of the ravined salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of gnat, and slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,

Make the grael thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chawdron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter HECATE, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains.

And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in

SONG.

*Black spirits and white,
Red spirits and grey;
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mingle may.*

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes:—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight
Whigs? you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess, (Howe'er you come to know it), answer me:
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodged, and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders' heads;
Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.
2 Witch. Demand.
3 Witch. We'll answer
1 Witch. Say, if thou'dst rather hear it from our
Or from our masters? [mouths
Macb. Call them, let me see them.

1 Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten
Her nine farrow; grease, that's sweat'en
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

All. Come, high or low;
Thyself, and office, deftly shew.

Thunder. An Apparition of an armed Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;
Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me:—Enough.

Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy god caution, thanks;
Thou hast harp'd my fear aright:—But one word more,—
1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here's another,
More potent than the first.

Thunder. An Apparition of a bloody Child rises.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!

Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.
App. Be bloody, bold,
And resolute; laugh to scorn the power of man,
For none of woman born shall harm Macbeth.

Macb. Then live, Macduff: what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear, it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.—What is this,

Thunder. An Apparition of a Child crowned, with a tree in his hand, rises.

That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speak not.
App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:
Macbeth will never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him.

Macb. That will never be:
Who can impress the forest; bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? sweet bodements! good!
Rebellious head, rise never, till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-placed Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Yet my heart
Thrills to know one thing: Tell me, (if your art
Can tell so much,) shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know—
Why sinks that cauldron? and what noise is this?

1 Witch. Shew! 2 Witch. Shew! 3 Witch. Shew!
All. shew his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart.

Eight Kings appear, and pass over the Stage in order; the last with a glass in his hand; BANQUO following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo: down
Thy crown does sear mine eye-balls:—And thy hair,
Thou other gold-bound brood, is like the first:—
A third is like the former.—Filthy hags!
Why do you shew me this?—A fourth?—Start, eyes!
What! will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?
Another yet?—A seventh?—I'll see no more:—
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shews me many more; and some I see,
That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry:
Horrible sight!—Ay, now, I see, 'tis true;
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his.—What, is this so?

1 Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so:—But why Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
—Come, sisters, cheer us up his spirits,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antique roud:

That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay.

(Music. The Witches dance, and vanish.)
Macb. Where are they? Gone?—Let this pernicious
Stand awe accursed in the calendar!— [hour
Come in, without there!

Enter LENOX.

Len. What's your grace's will?
Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?
Len. No, my lord.
Macb. Came they not by you?
Len. No, indeed, my lord.
Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride;
And damn'd all those that trust them!—I did hear
The galloping of horse: Who was't came by?
Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word,
Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England?
Len. Ay, my good lord.
Macb. Time, thou anticipatest my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: From this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And even now
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and
The castle of Macduff I will surprize; [done:
Seize upon Fife; give to the edge of the sword
His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
That trace his line. No boasting like a fool;
This deed I'll do, before this purpose cool:
But no more sights!—Where are these gentlemen?
Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Fife. A Room in Macduff's Castle.

Enter LADY MACDUFF, her Son, and Rosse.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?
Rosse. You must have patience, madam.
L. Macd. He had none:
His flight was madness: When our actions do not,
Our fears do make us traitors.
Rosse. You know not,
Whether it was his wisdom, or his fear. [habes,
L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly? He loves us not;
He wants the natural touch: for the poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
All is the fear, and nothing is the love;
As little is the wisdom, where the flight
So runs against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest coz',
I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband,
He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits of the season. I dare not speak much farther:
But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour
From what we fear, yet know not what we fear;
But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way, and move.—I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but I'll be here again:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before.—My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.
Rosse. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort:
I take my leave at once. [Exit Rosse.

L. Macd. Sirrah, your father's dead;
And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.
L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?
Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.
L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor lime,
The pit-fall, nor the gin.
Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.
L. Macd. Yes, he is dead; how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?
L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.
Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.
L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit; and yet
I' faith,

With wit enough for thee.
Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?
L. Macd. Ay, that he was.
Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.
Son. And be all traitors, that do so?
L. Macd. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be hanged.

Son. And must they all be hanged, that swear and lie?

L. Macd. Every one.
Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men.
Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools: for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now God help thee, poor monkey! But how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor prattler! how thou talk'st.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.
I doubt, some danger does approach you nearly:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty,
Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you!
I care abide no longer. [Exit Messenger.

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?
I have done no harm. But I remember now
I am in this earthly world; where, to do harm,
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime,
Accounted dangerous folly: Why then, alas!
Do I put up that womanly defence.
To say, I have done no harm?—What are these faces?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your husband?
L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou mayst find him.

Mur. He's a traitor.
Son. Thou liest, thou shag-eard villain.

Mur. What, you egg? (Stabbing him.)
Young fry of treachery?
Son. He has killed me, mother:
Run away, I pray you. (Dies.)

[Exit: Lady Macduff, crying murder, and pursued by the Murderers.

SCENE III.—England. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
Bestride our down-fall'n birthdom: Each new morn,
New widows howl; new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllable of doleur.

Mal. What I believe, I'll wail;
What know, believe: and, what I can redress,
As I shall find the time to friend, I will.
What you have spoke, it may be so, perchance.
This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,
Was once thought honest: you have loved him well;
He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young; but something

You may deserve of him through me; and wisdom
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.
Mal. But Macbeth is.
A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge. But 'crave your pardon;
That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpouse:
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must still look so.

Macd. I have lost my hopes.
Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife and child,
(Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,)
Without leave-taking?—I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties: You may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think.

Macd. Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,

For goodness dares not check thee! wear thou thy wrongs,

Thy title is affeer'd!—Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended:
I speak not as in absolute fear of you.
I think, our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds: I think, withal,
There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here, from gracious England, have I offer
Of goodly thousands: But, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?
Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compared
With my confineless harms.

Macd. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils, to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Lascivious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name: But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'rbear,
That did oppose my will: Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink.
We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That tulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclined.

Mal. With this, there grows,
In my most ill-compos'd affection, such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I a king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels, and this other's house;
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This avarice
Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeding lust; and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foysons to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: All these are portable,
With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stanchness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them; but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I a power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland! Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!
No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd,
And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king; the queen, that bore thee,
Officer upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived. Fare thee well!
These evils, thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wiped the black scruples, reconciled my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste: But God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsown;
Scurvily have covet'd what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow; and delight
No less in truth, than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country's, to command:
Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Sward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth:
Now we'll together; and the chance, of goodness,
Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?
Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth, I pray you?

Doct. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched souls,
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but, at his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.]

Macd. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the evil;
A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits Heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people,
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 'tis spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter ROSSE.

Macd. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now: Good God, betimes remove
The means that make us strangers!

Rosse. Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas, poor country;
Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot
Be call'd our mother, but our grave: where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks, that rent the air,

Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy; the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. O, relation,
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What is the newest grief?
Rosse. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one.

Macd. How does my wife?

Rosse. Why, well.

Macd. And all my children?

Rosse. Well too.

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?
Rosse. No; they were well at peace, when I did leave them.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech: How goes it?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Do it their comfort,
We are coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward, and ten thousand men;
An older, and a better soldier, none
That Christendom gives out.

Rosse. 'Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words,
That would be how'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind that's honest,
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which will possess them with the heaviest sound,
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Humph! I guess at it.
Rosse. Your castle is surprised; your wife and babes,
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful Heaven!—
What, man! ne'er pull your bat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words: the grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

Macd. My children too?
Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence!
My wife kill'd too?

Rosse. I have said. Be comforted
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?
Did you say, all?—O hell-kite!—All?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man. I shall do so;
Macd. I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me.—Did Heaven look on,
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief
Convert to anger, blunt not the heart, enrage it.
Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And braggart with my tongue!—But, gentle Heaven,
Cut short all intermission; front to front,
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly.
Come, go we to the king; our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above [may;
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you
The night is long, that never finds the day. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic, and a waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doct. A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.—In this slumery agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.
Doct. You may, to me; and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech.

Enter LADY MACBETH, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her; stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light?
Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 'tis her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.
Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.
Doct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here 's a spot.
Doct. Hark, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Ont, damned spot! out, I say!—One;
Two; Why, then 'tis time to do't!—Hell is murky!
—Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?
Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife: Where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—
No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that: you mar all with this starting.

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.
Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here 's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Oh! oh! oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charg'd.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—
Gent. 'Pray God, it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown; look not so pale!—I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out of his grave.

Doct. Even so?
Lady M. To bed, to bed; there 's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand; What's done, cannot be undone: To bed, to bed, to bed. [Exit.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?
Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whisperings are abroad: Unnatural deeds
Do breed unnatural troubles: Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
More needs she the divine, than the physician.—
God, God, forgive us all! Look after her;
Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
And still keep eyes upon her!—So, good night:
My mind she has match'd, and amazed my sight:
I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter with drum and colours, MENTETH, CATH-
NESS, ANGUS, LENOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff.
Revenge burn in them; for their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding, and the grim alarm,
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood
Shall we well meet them: that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knows, if Donalban be with his brother?
Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file
Of all the gentry; there is Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?
Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:

Some say, he 's mad; others, that lessor hate him,
Do call it valiant fury; but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands;
Now minutely revolts up'raid his faith-breach;
Those he commands, move only in command,

Nothing in love : now does he feel his title
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil, and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself, for being there ?

Cath. Well, march we on,
To give obedience where 'tis truly owed ;
Meet we the medicin of the sickly weal ;
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,
To view the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter MACBETH, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports ; let them fly all :
Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,
I cannot taint with fear. What 's the boy Malcolm ?
Was he not born of woman ? The spirits that know
All mortal conceits, pronounced me thus :
*Fear not, Macbeth ; no man, that's born of woman,
Shall e'er have power on thee.*—Then fly, false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures :
The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon !
Where got'st thou that goose look ?

Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Geese, villain ?
Serv. Soldiers, sir.
Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch ?
Death of thy soul ! those linen cheekers of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face ?

Serv. The English force, so please you.
Macb. Take thy face hence.—*Seyton !—I am sick at
When I behold—Seyton, I say !—This push [heart,
Will cheer me ever, or disseat me now.
I have lived long enough : my way of life
Is fall'n into the sear, the yellow leaf ;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have ; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not.
Seyton !—*

Enter SEYTON.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure ?
Macb. What news more ?

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.
Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be Give me my armour. [hack'd.]

Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.

Macb. I'll put it on.
Send out more horses, skir the country round ;
Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine armour.—
How does your patient, doctor ?

Doct. Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies, &
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that :
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd ;
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow ;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain ;
And, with some sweet oblivious antidote,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff,
Which weighs upon the heart ?

Doct. Therein the patient
Must minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs, I'll none of it.—
Come, put mine armour on ; give me my staff :—
*Seyton, send out.—Doctor, the thanes fly from me :—
Come, sir, despatch.—If thou couldst, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud again.—Pull't off, I say.—
What rhubarb,enna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence ?—Hearst thou of
them ?*

Doct. Ay, my good lord ; your royal preparation
Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.—

I will not be afraid of death and bare,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. [Err.]
Doct. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear,
Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Err.]

SCENE IV.—Country near Dunsinane. A Wood in view.

*Enter, with drum and colours, MALCOLM, old
SIVARD and his Son, MACDUFF, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ANGUS, LENOX, ROSSE, and Soldiers, marching.*

Mal. Cousins, I hope, the days are near at hand,
That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.
Siv. What wood is this before us ?

Ment. The wood of Birnam
Mal. Let every soldier here him down a bough,
And bear't before him ; whereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.
Siv. We learn no other, but the confident tyrant Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before't.

Mal. 'Tis his main hope :
For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less hath given him the revolt ;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Siv. The time approaches,
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have, and what we owe.
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate :
Towards which, advance the war.

[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE V.—Dunsinane. Within the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, MACBETH, SEYTON, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls ;
The cry is still, They come : Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn : here let them lie,
Till famine, and the ague, eat them up ;
Were they not forced with those that should be ours,
We might have met them darest, heard to heard,
And beat them backward home. What is that noise ?

(A cry within, of women.)

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.
Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears :
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek ; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
As life were in't : I have supp'd full with horrors ;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.—Wherefore was that cry ?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.
Macb. She should have died hereafter ;
There would have been a time for such a word.—
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time ;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle
Life's but a walking shadow ; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more : it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.—

Enter a Messenger.

Thou comest to use thy tongue ; thy story quickly.
Mess. Gracious my lord,

I shall report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.
Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar, and slave !
(Striking him)
Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not so :
Within this three mile may you see it coming ;
I saw, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,

Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.—
I pull in resolution; and begin
To doubt the equivoication of the fiend,
That lies like truth: *Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunstane*:—and now a wood
Comes toward Dunstane.—Arm, arm, and out!—
If this, which he avouches, does appear,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarr, ing here.
I 'gin to be a-weary of the sun,
And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.—
Ring the alarum bell:—Blow, wind! come, wrack!
At least we'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter with drums and colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, MACDUFF, &c. and their Army, with boughs.

Mal. Now near enough; your leavy screens throw down,
And shew like those you are:—You, worthy uncle,
Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son,
Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, aid we,
Shall take upon 's what else remains to do,
According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well,—
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten if we cannot fight. [breath.]
Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.
[Exeunt. Alarums continued.]

SCENE VII.—The same. Another part of the Plain.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bear-like, I must fight the course.—What's he,
That was not born of woman? Such a one
Am I to fear, or none.

Enter Young SIWARD.

Yo. Siw. What is thy name?
Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth. [title]
Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.
Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

Macb. [They fight, and young Siward is slain.]
Thou wast born of woman.—
But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,
Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is:—Tyrant, shew thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves; either thou, Macboth,
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheathe again undeeded. There thou shouldst be;
By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Seems bruid: Let me find him, fortune!
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarums.]

Enter MALCOLM and Old SIWARD.

Siw. This way, my lord;—the castle's gently ren-
The tyrant's people on both sides do fight; [der'd:]
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.
Siw. Enter, sir, the castle.
[Exeunt. Alarums.]

Re-enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On mine own sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn.
Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee:

But get thee back, my soul is too much charged
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voice is in my sword; thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out! [They fight.]

Macb. Thou loost labour:
As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel, whom thou still hast served,
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accurs'd be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cowl'd my better part of man!
And be these juggling fiends no more believed,
That palter with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.—I'll not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze o' the time.
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a poll; and underwrit,
Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I'll not yield,
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunstane,
And thou opposed, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last: Before my body
I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, Hold, enough.
[Exeunt, fighting.]

Retreat. Flourish. Re-enter, with drum and colours, MALCOLM, Old SIWARD, ROSSE, LENOX, ANGUS, CATHNESS, MENTETH, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe arrived.
Siw. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.
Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man be died.

Siw. Then he is dead?
Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field; your cause of Must not be measured by his worth, for then [sorrow]
It hath no end.

Siw. Had he his hurts before?
Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Siw. Why then, God's soldier be he!
Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow,
And that I'll spend for him.

Siw. He's worth no more;
They say, he parted well, and paid his score:
So, God be with him!—Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter MACDUFF, with Macbeth's head on a poll.

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art: Behold, when
The usurper's cursed head: the time is free: [stands]
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—
Hail, king of Scotland!

All. King of Scotland, hail!
[Flourish.]

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of time,
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,—
As calling home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fed the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen,
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life;—This, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE. — Sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, QUEEN ELINOR, PEMBROKE, ESSEX, SALISBURY, and others, with CHATILLON.

King John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France, In my behaviour, to the majesty, The borrow'd majesty of England here.

Eli. A strange beginning,—borrow'd majesty!

K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island, and the territories; To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine: Desiring thee to lay aside the sword, Which sways usurpingly these several titles; And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights, so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take thy king's defiance from my mouth, The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace: Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;

For ere thou canst report I will be there, The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:

So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath, And sellen presage of your own decay:—

An honourable conduct let him have:— Pembroke, look to't.—Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exeunt Chatillon and Pembroke.]

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said, How that ambitious Constance would not cease, Till she had kindled France, and all the world, Upon the right and party of her son?

This might have been prevented, and made whole, With very easy arguments of love;

Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right, for us.

Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your Or else it must go wrong with you and me: [fright;]

So much my conscience whispers in your ear; Which none but Heaven, and you, and I, shall bear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy, Come from the country to be judged by you, That e'er I heard of: shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach.— [Exit Sheriff.] Our abbays, and our priories, shall pay

Re-enter Sheriff, with ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE, and PHILIP, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you? Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman,

Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son, As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge; A soldier, by the honour-giving hand Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir? You came not of one mother, then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king, That is well known; and, as I think, one father:

But, for the certain knowledge of that truth, I put you o'er to Heaven, and to my mother:

Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy And wound her honour with this diffidence. [mother,

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it; That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;

The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out At least from fair five hundred pounds a year;

Heaven guard my mother's honour, and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow.—Why, being younger Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance? [born,

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land. But once he slander'd me with bastardy;

But where I be as true begot or no, That still I lay upon my mother's head;

But, that I am as well begot, my liege, (Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!) Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.

If old Sir Robert did beget us both, And were our father, and this son like him;—

O old Sir Robert, father, on my knee I give Heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath Heaven lent us Eli. He hath a trick of Cœur-de-lion's face, [here.

The accent of his tongue affecteth him: Do you not read some tokens of my son

In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts, And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak, What doth move you to claim your brother's land?

Bast. Because he hath a half-face like my father;

With that half-face would he have all my land;
A half-faced groat five hundred pounds a-year!
Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father lived,
Your brother did employ my father much;—
Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land;
Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs touching that time;
The advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the meantime sojourn'd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail, I shame to speak:
But truth is truth; large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay,
(As I have heard my father speak himself.)
When this same lusty gentleman was got,
Upon his death-bed he will bequeath'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,
That this, my mother's son, was none of his;
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock hear him;
And, if she did play false, the fault was hers;
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands,
That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?

In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world;
In sooth, he might; then, if he were my brother,
My brother might not claim him; nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him. This concludes,—
My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force,
To dispossess that child, which is not his?

Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.

El. Whether hadst thou rather,—be a Faulcon-
And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land; [bridge]
Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,
And I had his, Sir Robert his, like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-roads,
My arms such eel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,
That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose,
Lest men should say, Look, where three-farthings goes!
And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
'Would I might never stir from off this place,
I'd give it every foot to have this face;
I would not be Sir Noh in any case.

El. I like thee well. Wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance;
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a-year;
Yet sell your face for fivepence, and 'tis gear.—
My land, I'll follow you unto the death.

El. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.

Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun;

Philip, good old Sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bear'st:

Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great;
Arise Sir Richard, and Plantagenet. [hand;

Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your
My father gave me honour, yours gave land.—
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got, Sir Robert was away.

El. The very spirit of Plantagenet.—
I am thy grandame, Richard; call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth: What Something about, a little from the right, [though?

In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:
Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night;

And have is have, however men do catch:
Near or far off, well won is still well shot;

And I am I, however I was begot. [desire,
K. John. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thy
A landless knight makes thee a landed 'squire.—

Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed
For France, for France; for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu: Good fortune come to thee!
For thou wast got 't' the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.
A foot of honour better than I was;
But many a many foot of land the worse.

Well, now can I make any Joan a lady:—
Good den, Sir Richard,—God-a-mercy, fellow:—
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter;
For new-made honour doth forget men's names;
'Tis too respective, and too sociable,
For your conversing. Now your traveller,—
He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess;
And when my knightly stomach is sufficed,
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries:—My dear sir,
(Thus, leaning on mine elbow, I begin,)
I shall beseech you—That is question now;

And then comes answer like an ABC-book:—
O, sir, says answer, at your best command;

No, sir, says question; at your service, sir:—
No, sir, says question, I, sweet sir, at yours:

And so, ere answer knows what question would,
(Saving in dialogue of compliment;
And talking of the Alps and Apennines,
The Pyrenean, and the river Po,)
It draws toward supper in conclusion so.

But this is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit, like myself:
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation;

(And so am I, whether I smack, or no;)
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior form, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth;

Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For, if I shall strew the footsteps of my riving,
But who comes in such haste in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter LADY FAULCONBRIDGE, and JAMES GURNEY.

O me! it is my mother.—How now, good lady?
What brings you here to court so hastily? [he?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is That holds in chase nine honour up and down?

Bast. My brother Robert? old Sir Robert's son?
Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man?

Is it Sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend boy,
Sir Robert's son; why scorn'st thou at Sir Robert?

He is Sir Robert's son; and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave a while?

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip?—sparrow!—James,
There's toys abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.
Madam, I was not old Sir Robert's son;
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me
Upon Good-Friday, and ne'er broke his fast:
Sir Robert could do well: Marry, (to confess!)

Could he get me? Sir Robert could not do it;
We know his handy-work:—Therefore, good mother,
To whom am I beholden for these limbs?
Sir Robert never help to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother 'no,
That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honour?

What means this scorn, thou most unward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basilliseo-like:
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.

But, mother, I am not Sir Robert's son;
I have disclaim'd Sir Robert, and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:

Then, good my mother, let me know my father;
Some proper man, I hope: Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully, as I deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father;
By long and vehement suit I was seduced
To make room for him in my husband's bed:—
Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!—
Thou art the issue of my dear offence,
Which was so strongly urged, past my defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Madam, I would not wish a better father.

Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,— Subjected tribute to commanding love,—
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The awless lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.
He, that perforce robs lions of their hearts,
May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,
With all my heart I thank thee for my father!
Who lives and dares but say, thou didst not well

When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.
Come, lady, I will shew thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin;
Who says it was, he lies; I say, 'twas not.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the ARCHDUKE of AUSTRIA, and Forces; on the other, PHILIP, King of France, and Forces; LEWIS, CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and Attendants.

Lew. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.—
Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave:
Aid, for amends to his posterity,
At our importance hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John:
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.
Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion's death,
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war:
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Lew. A noble boy! Who would not do thee right?
Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indenture of my love;
That to my bome I will no more return,
Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-faced shore,
Whose foot spurrs back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders,
Even till that England, hedged in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,
Eveu till that utmost corner of the west
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.
Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your love.

Aust. The peace of Heaven is theirs, that lift their swords
In such a just and charitable war. [bent
K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be,
Against the brows of this resisting town.—
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantages.
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.
Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,
Lest unadvised you stain your swords with blood:
My lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace, which here we urge in war;
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter CHATILLON.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chatillon is arrived.—
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord.
We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.
Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task.
England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him is come along the mother-queen,
An Até, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king deceased;
And all the unsetled humours of the land,—
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery volunaries,
With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens,
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their hacks,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide,

To do offence and scath in Christendom.
The interruption of their churlish drums

[Drums beat.]

Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand,
To parley, or to fight; therefore, prepare.
K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!
Aus. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion:
Let them be welcome then, we are prepared.

Enter KING JOHN, ELINOR, BLANCH, the Bastard, PEMBROKE, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
Our just and liberal entrance to our own!
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven!
Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beat his peace to heaven.
K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return
From France to England there to live in peace!
England we love; and, for that England's sake,
With burden of our armour here we sweat:
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Outfaced infant state, and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face;—
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his;
This little abstract doth contain that large,
Which died in Geoffrey; and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right,
And this is Geoffrey's: In the name of God,
How comes it then, that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat,
Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France,
To draw my answer from thy articles?
K. Phi. From that supernal Judge, that strds good
In any breast of strong authority. [thoughts
To look into the blots and stains of right.

That Judge hath made me guardian to this boy:
Under whose warrant, I impeach thy wrong;
And, by whose help, I mean to chastise it.
K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.
K. Phi. Excuse it; it is to beat usurping down.
Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?
Const. Let me make answer,—thy usurping son.
Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king;
That thou may'st be a queen, and check the world!
Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband; and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geoffrey,
Than thou and John in manners; being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think,
His father never was so true begot;
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.

Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.
Const. There 's a good grandam, boy, that would Aust. Peace! [blot thee.

Bast. Hear the crier.
Aust. What the devil art thou?
Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An 'a may catch you hide and you alone.
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard;
I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right;
Sirrah, look to't; if faith, I will, if faith.
Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's robe,
That did disrobe the lion of that robe!
Bast. It lles as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass:
But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back;
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What cracker is this same that deafs our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?
K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.
Lew. Women and fools, break off your conference.
King John, this is the very sum of all,—
England and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Will thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?
K. John. My life as soon:—I do defy thee, France
Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand:
And, out of my dear love, I'll give thee more

Than e'er the coward hand of France can win :
Submit thee, boy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child,
Const. Do, child, go to it' grandam, child ;
Give grandam kingdom, and it' grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig ;
There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace !
I would, that I were low laid in my grave ;
I am not worth this coil that 's made for me.

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.
Const. Now shame upon you, wher's she does or no !
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draw those Heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which Heaven shall take in nature of a fee ;
Ay, with these crystal beads Heaven shall be bribed
To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth !
Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth !
Call not me slanderer ; thou and thine usurp
The dominations, roysalties, and rights,

Of this oppress'd boy : This is thy eldest son's son,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee ;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child ;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Remov'd from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done.
Const. I have but this to say,—
That he 's not only plagu'd for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this remov'd issue, plagu'd for her,
And with her plague, her sin ; his injury
Her injury,—the beadle to her sin ;
All punish'd in the person of this child,
And all for her,—a plague upon her !

Eli. Thou unadvis'd scold, I can produce
A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Const. Ay, who doubts that ? a will ! a wicked will ;
A woman's will ; a canker'd grandam's will !
K. Phi. Peace, lady : pause, or be more temperate :
It ill beseems this presence, to cry aim
To these ill-tun'd repetitions.
Some trumpet summon hither to the walls
These men of Angiers ; let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls ?
K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England.
K. John. England, for itself :
You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,—
K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.
K. John. For our advantage :—Therefore, hear us first.—

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endangament :
The cannons have their lowers full of wrath ;
And ready mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls :
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Confront your city's eyes, your winking gates ;
And, but for our approach, these sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
Be this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been disabited, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of us, your lawful king,—
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threatened cheeks,—
Behold, the French, amazed, vouchsafe a parle :
And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smöke,
To make a faithless error in your ears ;
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king ; whose labour'd spirits,
Forwearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.
Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, standeth here the Plantagenet ;
Son to the elder brother of this man
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys ;
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town ;
Being no farther enemy to you,

Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppress'd child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleas'd, then,
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes it ; namely, this young prince :
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up ;
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven ;
And, with a blessed and unwev'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruised,
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the roundure of your old-faced walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war ;
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf, which we have challenged it ?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession ?

Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects ;
For him, and in his right, we hold this town.

K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.
Cit. That can we not ; but he, that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal ; till that time.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the
And, if not that, I bring you witnesses. [singing ?]
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed,— Bast. Bastards, and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many, and as well-born bloods as Bast. Some bastards too. [those,—
K. Phi. Stand in his face, to contradict his claim.

Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We, for the worthiest, hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those souls,
That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king !
K. Phi. Amen, Amen !—Mount, chevaliers ! to arms !
Bast. St George,—that swing'd the dragon, and e'er
Sits on his horse-back at mine hostess' door, [since,
Teach us some fence !—Sirrah, were I at home,
At your den, sirrah, (to Austria,) with your lioness,
I'd set an ox-head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace ; no more.
Bast. O, tremble ; for you hear the lion roar.
K. John. Up higher to the plain ; where we'll set
In best appointment, all our regiments. [forth,
Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.
K. Phi. It shall be so ;—(to Lewis) and at the other hill

Command the rest to stand.—God, and our right !
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Alarums and Excursions ; then a Retreat. Enter a French Herald, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let youug Arthur, duke of Bretagne, in ;
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother.
Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground ;
Many a widow's husband groveling lies,
Coldly embracing the discolour'd earth ;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French ;
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and yours.

Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells ;
King John, your king and England's, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day !
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood ;
There stuck no plume in any English crest,
That is remov'd by a staff of France ;
Our colours do return in those same hands,
That did display them when we first march'd forth ;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Died in the dying slaughter of their foes ;
Open your gates, and give the victors way.
Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might behold,

From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured:
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd blows;
Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted
Both are alike; and both alike we like. [power:
One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither; yet for both.

Enter, at one side, KING JOHN, with his power; ELINOR, BLANCH, and the Bastard; at the other, KING PHILIP, LEWIS, AUSTRIA, and Forces.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast
Sav, shall the current of our right run on? [away?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'er-swell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores;
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.

K. Phi. England, thou hast not saved one drop of
In this hot trial, more than we of France; [blood,
Rather, lost more: And by this band I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,—
Before we will lay down our just-borne arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear,
Or add a royal number to the dead!
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
O, now doth death line his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, moulting the flesh of men,
In undetermined differences of kings.—
Why stand these royal fronts amaz'd thus?
Cry havoc, kings! hark to the stained field,
You equal potent, fiery-kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death!

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?

I Cit. The king of England, when we know the king.
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear possession of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.

I Cit. A greater power than we, denies all this;
And, till it be undoubted, we do lack
Our former scruple in our strong-barr'd gates:
King'd of our fears; until our fears, resolv'd,
Be by some certain king purged and possest.

Bast. By Heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout
you, kings;

And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presences be ruled by me;
Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:
By east and west let France and England mount
Their hattering cannon, charg'd to the mouths;
Till their snul-fearing clamours have brawl'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, discover your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Turn face to face, and bloody point to point;
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy minion;
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Smacks it not something of the policy?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well;—France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?

Bast. And, if thou bast the mettle of a king,—
Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls:
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why, then defy each other; and, pell-mell,
Make work upon ourselves, for heaven, or hell.

K. Phi. Let it be so.—Say, when will you assault?
K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.

Aust. I from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.
Bast. O prudent discipline! From north to south;
Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth;

I Cit. Hear us, great kings! vouchsafe a while to stay,
And I shall shew you peace, and fair-faced league;

Win you this city without stroke, or wound;
Rescue those breathing lives to lie in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field:
Persist not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on, with favour; we are bent to hear.

I Cit. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Blanch,
Is near to England; Look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid:
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete, O, say, he is not she:
And she again wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not, that she is not he:
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such a she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.

O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in:
And two such shores to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union shall do more than battery can,
To our fast-clos'd gates; for, at this match,
With swifter spleen than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide open,
And give you entrance; but, without this match,
The sea cragged is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion; no, not death himself
In mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here's a stay,
That shakes the rotten carcass of old death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas;
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs!
What cannoner begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon, fire, and smoke, and bounce;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his,
But buffets better than a fist of France:
Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father, dad.

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie
Thy now unsecured assurance to the crown,
That yon green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom, that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France;
Mark, how they whisper; urge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition:
Lest zeal, now melted, by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

I Cit. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?

K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward
first

To speak unto this city: What say you?

K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son,
Can in this book of beauty read, I love,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea
(Except this city now by us besieged)
Find fiddle to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed; and make her rich
In titles, honours, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world. [face.

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face.
Lew. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,

The shadow of myself form'd in her eye;
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow:
I do protest, I never loved myself,
Till now infixed I beheld myself,
Drawn in the flattering table of her eye.

(Whispers with Blanch.)

Bast. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye!—
Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow!—
And quarter'd in her heart!—he doth espie
Himself love's traitor: This is pity now, [be,
That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there should
In such a love, so vile a lout as he.

Blanch. My uncle's will, in this respect, is mine:
If he see aught in you, that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will;
Or, if you will, (to speak more properly,)
I will enforce it easily to my love.
Farther I will not flatter you, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Thou this,—that nothing do I see in you, (Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge.)

That I can find should merit any hate.
K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece?

Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do
What you in wisdom shall vouchsafe to say.

K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady?

Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love;
For I do love her most unfeignedly.

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen, Touraine, Maine,

Poictiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin.—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well:—Young princes, close your hands.

Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well assured,
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at Saint Mary's chapel, presently,
The rites of marriage shall be solemnized.—
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?

I know, she is not; for th'is match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much:

Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows?
Lew. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent. [made,

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have
Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own vantage.

K. John. We will heal up all.
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town
We make him lord of.—Call the lady Constance;
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity:—I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlook'd for unprepared camp.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens retire from the walls.]

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!
John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part;
And France, (whose armour conscience buckled on;
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God's own soldier,) rounded in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil;
That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith;
That daily brook-vow; he, that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids;—
Who having no external thing to lose
But the world maid,—cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity,—
Commodity, the bias of the world;
The world, who of itself is peis'd well,
Made to run even, upon even ground;
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent

And this same bias, this commodity,
This hawk, this broker, this all-changing word,
Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid,
From a resolved and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.—
And why rail I on this commodity?
But for because he hath not woo'd me yet:
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But for my band, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, rattleth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say, there is no sin, but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say,—there is no vice, but beggary:
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord! for I will worship thee! [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and SALISBURY.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace
False blood to false blood join'd! gone to be friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch? and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast mis-spoke, mis-heard;
Be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say, 'tis so:
I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man;
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;
I have a king's oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,
For I am sick, and capable of fears;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally horn to fears;
And though thou now confess thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds?
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true as, I believe, you think them false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow, how to make me die;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall and die.—
Lewis marry Blanch! O, hoy, then where art thou?
France friend with England! what becomes of me?
Fellow, begone: I cannot brook thy sight;
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?

Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. If do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. I do, that bid'st me be content, were grim,
Ugly, and slaud'rous to thy mother's womb,
Full of displeasing blots, and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Pate'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content;

For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great:
Of nature's gifts thou may'st with lilies boast,
And with the half-blown rose; but fortune, O!
She is corrupted, changed, and won from thee;
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the hawk to thine.
France is a hawk to Fortune, and King John;
That struopet Fortune, that usurping John—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
Even him with words; or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to under-see.

Sal. Pardon me, madam,
I may not go without you to the kings. [thee :
Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt, I will not go with
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit;
Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

(She throws herself on the ground.)

Enter KING JOHN, KING PHILIP, LEWIS, BLANCH, ELINOR, Bastard, AUSTRIA, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed day
Ever in France shall be kept festival:
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist;
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloudy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day! —
(Kissing.)

What hath this day deserved? what hath it done;
That it in golden letters should be set,
Among the high tides, in the kalendar?
Nay, rather, turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame, oppression, perjury:
Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray, that their ordains may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd:
But on this day let seamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break, that are not this day made:
This day, all things begun come to ill end;
Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change!

K. Ph. By Heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the fair proceedings of this day:
Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguiled me with a counterfeit,
Resembling majesty; which, being touch'd, and tried,
Proves valueless: You are forsworn, forsworn:
You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now in arms you strengthen it with yours:
The grappling vigour and rough frown of war
Is cold in amity and painted peace,
And our oppression hath made up this league:
Arm, arm, you Heavens, against these perjured kings!
A widow cries; be husband to me, Heavens!
Let not the hours of this ungodly day
Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjured kings!
Hear me, O hear me!

Const. Lady Constance, peace.
Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.
O Lymoges! O Austria! thou dost name
That bloody spoil. Thou slave, thou wretch, thou
Thou little valiant, great in villainy! [coward;
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by
'To teach thee safety! thou art perjured too,
And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool! to brag, and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Been sworn my soldier? bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O, that a man should speak these words to me.
Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.
Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life.
Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.
K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDULPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.
Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of Heaven! —
To thee, King John, my holy errand is.
I Pandolph, of fair Milan cardinal,
And from Pope Innocent the legate here,
Do, in his name, religiously demand,
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn? and, force perforce,
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see?
This, in our foresaid holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interatories,
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?

Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous.
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England,
Add thus much more, — That no Italian priest
Shall tithe or toll in our dominions;
But as we under Heaven are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without the assistance of a mortal hand;
So tell the pope; all reverence set apart,
To him, and his usurp'd authority.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this.
K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christen-
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, [dom,
Dreading the curse, that money may buy out;
And, by the merit of vile gold, gross dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself:
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish;
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand cursed, and excommunicate:
And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized, and worship'd as a saint,
That takes away, by any secret course,
Thy hateful life.

Const. O, lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse a while!
Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curses: for, without my wrong,
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.
Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful, that law bar no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here;
For he, that holds his kingdom, holds the law:
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome. [hand]

Elin. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy Const. Look to that, devil! lest that France repent,
And, by disjoining hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.
East. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.
Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs, Because —

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.
K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?
Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?
Lew. Think you, father; for the difference
Is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:
Forego the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.
Const. O Lewis, stand fast; the devil tempts thee
In likeness of a new untrimmed bride. [here,
Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need.

Const. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need:
O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up,
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is moved, and answers not to this.
Const. O, be removed from him, and answer well.
Aust. Do so, King Philip; hang no more in doubt.
Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet lord.
K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.

Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee
If thou stand excommunicate, and cursed? [more,
K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me, how you would bestow yourself.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit;
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before, —
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royal bargain up of peace, —
Heaven knows, they were besmear'd and overstain'd
With slaughter's pencil; where revenge did paint

The fearful difference of incensed kings :
And sh' all these hands, so lately purged of blood,
So newly join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret ?
Play fast and loose with faith ? so jest with Heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm ;
Unswear faith sworn ; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity ? O holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so :
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order ; and then we shall be bless'd
To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.
Therefore, to arms ! be champion of our church !
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou may'st hold a serpent by the tongue,
A cas'd lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So makest thou faith an enemy to faith ;
And, like a civil war, set'st oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow,
First made to Heaven, first be to Heaven perform'd ;
That is, to be the champion of our church !
What since thou swor'st, is sworn against thyself,
And may not be performed by thyself :
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is not amiss, when it is truly done ;
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it :
The better act of purposes mistook
Is, to mistake again ; though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood cures ; as fire cools fire,
Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd.
It is religion, that doth make vows kept ;
But thou hast sworn against religion ;
By what thou swear'st, against the thing thou swear'st ;
And makest an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath : The truth thou art untrue
To swear, swear only not to be forsworn ;
Else, what a mockery should it be to swear ?
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn ;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself :

And better conquest never canst thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions ;
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them : but, if not, then know,
The peril of our curses light on thee ;
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But, in despair, die under their black weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion !
Bast. Will't not be ?

Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine ?

Leo. Father, to arms !
Blanch. Upon thy wedding day ?
Against the blood that thou hast married ?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men ?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud churchful drums,
Clamours of hell,—he measures to our pomp ?
O husband, hear me !—ah, alack, how new
Is husband in my mouth !—even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.

Const. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Forethought by Heaven.

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love ; What motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife ? [holds,
Const. That, which upholdeth him, that thee up-
His honour : O thine honour, Lewis, thine honour !

Leo. I muse, your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do pull you ou.

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need :—England, I'll fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty !

Rh. O foul revolt of French inconstancy !

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour. [time, [next

Bast. Old time the clock-setter, that build
Is it as well ? well, then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood : Fair day,
adieu !

Which is the side, that I must go withal ?
I am with both ; each army hath a hand ;
And, in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou may'st win ;
Uncle, I needs must pray, that thou may'st lose ;
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine ;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive ;
Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose ;
Assur'd loss, before the match be play'd.

Leo. Lady, with me ; with me thy fortune lies.
Blanch. Where where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.—
[Exit Bastard.

France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath ;
A rage, whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearest valued blood, of France.

K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire :

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threatens.—To arms let's hie ! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums ; Excursions. Enter the Bastard with AUSTRIA'S head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot ;
Some airy devil hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Austria's head lie there ;
While Philip breathes.

Enter KING JOHN, ARTHUR, and HUBERT.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy.—Philip make up ;
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescued her ;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not ;
But on, my liege ; for very little pains
Will bring this labour to an happy end. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Alarums ; Excursions ; Retreat. Enter KING JOHN,
ELINOR, ARTHUR, the Bastard, HUBERT, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be ; your grace shall stay behind,
So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad : [To Elinor.]

Thy grandam loves thee ; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O, this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, (to the Bastard) away for England ; haste before !

And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots ; angels imprison'd
Set thou at liberty : the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon ;
Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back
When gold and silver beck me to come on.
I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray
(I ever I remember to be holy)

For your fair safety ; so I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.

K. John. Coz, farewell. [Exit Bastard.
Eli. Come hither, little kinsman ; hark, a word.
(She takes Arthur aside.)

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle
Hubert,

We owe thee much ; within this wall of flesh

There is a soul, counts thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love :

And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath

Lives in this honor, dearly cherished.

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—

But I will fit it with some better time.

By Heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed

To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet :

But thou shalt have ; and creep time ne'er so slow,

Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say,—But let it go :

The sun is so the heaven, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gawds,
To give me audience:—If the midnight bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound one unto the drowsy race of night;
If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had baked thy blood, and made it heavy, thick;
(Which, else, runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion hateful to my purposes;)—
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,
Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words;
Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts;
But ah, I will not:—Yet I love thee well;
And, by my troth, I think, thou lovest me well.

Hub. So well, that what you hid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,
By Heaven, I'd do't.

K. John. Do not I know thou wouldst?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On you young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way;
And, whereso'er his foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me: Dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I will keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.

K. John. Death.

Hub. My lord?

K. John. A grave.

Hub. He shall not live.

K. John. Enough.

I could be merry now: Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember.—Madam, fare you well;
I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty.

Eli. My blessing go with thee!
K. John. For England, cousin:
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter KING PHILIP, LEWIS, PANDULPH, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole Armado of convicted sail
Is scatter'd and disjoint'd from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?

Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?

And bloody England into England zone,

O'erbearing interruption, spite of France?

Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:

So hot a speed with such advice disposed,

Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,

Doth want example: Who hath read, or heard,

Of any kindred action like to this? [praise.]

K. Phi. Well could I bear, that England had this
So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter CONSTANCE.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;

Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,

In the vile prison of afflicted breath.—

I pry thee, lady, go away with me.

Const. Lo, now I now see the issue of your peace!

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Con-

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress, [stance!]

But that, which ends all counsel, true redress,

Death, death!—O amiable lovely death!

Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness!

Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,

Thou hate and terror to prosperity,

And I will kiss thy detestable bones;

And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows;

And ring these fingers with thy household worms;

And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself!

Come, grin on me; and I will think thou smilest,

And buss thee as thy wife! Misery, misery,

O, come to me

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace.

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:—

O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!

Then with a passion would I shake the world

And rouse from sleep that feeble anatomy,
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;

I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;

My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;

Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:

I am not mad,—I would to Heaven, I were!

For then, 'tis like I should forget myself:

O, if I could, what grief should I forget!

'Preach some philosophy to make me mad,

And thou shalt be canonized, cardinal;

For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,

My reasonable part produces reason

How I may be deliver'd of these woes,

And teaches me to kill or hang myself:

If I were mad, I should forget my son;

Or madly think a babe of clouts were he

I am not mad; too well, too well I feel

The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses: O, what love I note

In the fair multitude of those her hairs!

Where by chance a silver drop hath fallen,

Even to that drop ten thousand wifery friends

Do glew themselves in sociable grief;

Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,

Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and whereso'er will I do it:

I tore them from their bonds; and cried aloud,

O that these hands could so redeem my son!

As they have given these hairs their liberty!

But now I envy at their liberty,

And will again commit them to their bonds,

Because my poor child is a prisoner.—

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,

That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:

If that be true, I shall see my boy again;

For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,

To him that did but yesterday expire,

There was not such a gracious creature born.

But now will canker sorrow eat my bud,

And chase the native beauty from my cheek,

And he will look as hollow as a ghost;

As dim and meagre as an ague's fit:

And so he'll die; and, rising so again,

When I shall meet him in the court of heaven

I shall not know him: therefore never, never

Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,

Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;

Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,

Remembers me of all his gracious parts,

Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;

Then have I reason to be fond of grief.

Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,

I could give better comfort than you do.—

I will not keep this form upon my head,

(Tearing off her head-dress.)

When there is such disorder in my wit.

O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!

My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!

My widow-comfort, and my sorrows' cure. [Exit.]

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.

[Exit.]

Lew. There's nothing in this world can make me joy:

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,

Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;

And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,

That thy yields naught but shame and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,

Even in the instant of repair and health,

The fit is strongest; evils, that take leave,

On their departure most of all shew evil;

What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly, you had.

No, no; when fortune means to men most good,

She looks upon them with a threatening eye.

'Tis strange, to think how much King John hath lost

In this, which he accounts so clearly won:

Are not you grieved, that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lew. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as doubtful as your blood.

Now hear me speak, with a prophetic spirit;

For even the breath of that I mean to speak

Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,

Out of the path, which shall direct; lead

Thy foot to England's throne; and, therefore, mark.
John hath seized Arthur; and it cannot be,
That, whilst warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misplaced John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest:
A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd;
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Leo. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?
Pand. You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Leo. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green are you, and fresh in this old world!

John lays you plots: the times conspire with you;
For he that steeps his safety in true blood,
Shall find but bloody safety and untrue.
This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal;
That none so small advantage shall step forth,
To check his reign, but they will cherish it;
No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no custom'd event,
But they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, présages, and tongues of Heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Leo. May he, he will not touch young Arthur's life,
But hold himself safe in his imprisonment.

Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies: and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;
And pick strong matter of revolt and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers'-ends of John.
Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot;
And, O, what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have named!—The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England, ransacking the church,
Offending charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side;
Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon become a mountain. O noble Dauphin,
Go with me to the king: 'Tis wonderful
What may be wrought out of their discentment:
Now that their souls are topfull of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the king.

Leo. Strong reasons make strong actions: Let us go.
If you say, ay, the king will not say, no. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HUBERT and two Attendants.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and, look thou stand
Within the arras: when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth;
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair: be heedful; hence, and watch.

I Attend. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! Fear not you: look to't.
[Exeunt Attendants.]
Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.
Arth. As little prince (having so great a title
To be more prince) as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Methinks, nobody should be sad but I;
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my Christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sleep,
I should be as merry as the day is long.
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me;
He is afraid of me, and I of him:
Is it my fault, that I was Geoffrey's son?
No, indeed, is't not; and I would to Heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate

He will awake my mercy, which lies dead;
Therefore I will be sudden, and despatch. [Aside.]

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day:
In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosom.—
Read here, young Arthur. [Shewing a paper.] How now, foolish rheim! [Aside.]

Turning spiteous torture out of door!
I must be brief, lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears.—
Can you not read it? Is it not writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you? And will you.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkerchief about your brows,

(The best I had, a princess wrought it me,)

And I did never ask it you again;

And with my hand at midnight held your bead;

And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,

Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;

Saying, What lack you? and, Where 's your grief?

Or, What good love may I perform for you?

Many a poor man's son would have lain still,

And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;

But you at your sick service had a prince.

Nay, you may think, my love was crafty love,

And call it cunning: Do, an if you will;

If Heaven be pleased, that you must use me ill,

Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,

So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it;

And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none, but in this iron age, would do it!

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,

Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,

And quench his fiery indignation,

Even in the matter of mine innocence:

Nay, after that, consume away in rust,

But for containing fire to harm mine eye.

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

An if an angel should have come to me,

And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,

I would not have believed no tongue, but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth. [Stamps.]

Re-enter Attendants, with oord, irons, &c.

Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boist'rous-rough?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.

For Heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert! drive these men away,

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,

Nor look upon the iron angrily;

Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,

Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

I Attend. I am best pleased to be from such a deed.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;

He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:—

Let him come back, that his compassion may

Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lace your eyes.

Arth. O Heaven!—that there were but a mote in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,

Any annoyance in that precious sense!

Then, feeling what small things are boist'rous there,

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues

Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:

Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!

Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue;

So I may keep mine eyes; O, spare mine eyes;

Though to no use, but still to look on you!

Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,

And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,

Being create for comfort, to be used

In undeserv'd extremes: See else yourself;
There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, hoy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it bluish,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert!
Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And, like a dog that is coupp'd to fight,
Snatch at his master, that doth tarre him on.
All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy which fierce fire and iron extends Creatures of note, for mercer-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, hoy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! All this while
You were disguis'd.

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu;
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O Heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, crowned; PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleased,
Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,

With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refin'd gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told;
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urg'd at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disguis'd;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about;
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness:
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more, in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breathed our counsel: but it pleased your highness
To overbear it; and we are all well pleased;
Since all and every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;
And more, more strong, (when lesser is my fear.)
I shall endue you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not well;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I, (as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound the purposes of all their hearts,)
Both for myself and them, (but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their best studies,) heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If, what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your fears (which, as they say, attend Steps of wrong) should move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his darts

With harbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no farther ask,
Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal, he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so; I do commit his youth

Enter HUBERT.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?
Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed;
He shew'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does shew the mood of a much troubled breast;
And I do fearfully believe, 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set;
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pem. And, when it breaks, I fear, will issue thence
The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:—
Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead:
He tells us, Arthur is deceased to-night.

Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure.
Pem. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick:
This must be answer'd either here, or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on Think you, I bear the shears of destiny? [me?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul play; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it:
So thrive it in your game! and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forec'd grave.

That blood, which owed the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold: Bad world the while!
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ere long, I doubt,

[Exit Lords.

K. John. They burn in indignation; I repent,
There is no sure foundation set in blood;
No certain life achieved by other's death.—

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast: Where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?

So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather!—How goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England.—Never such a power
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land!

The copy of your speed is leav'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come, that they are all arrived.

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care?
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April, died
Your noble mother: And, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I dly heard; if true, or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleased
My discontented peers!—What! mother dead?
How wildly then walks my estate in France!
Under whose conduct came those powers of France,
That thou for truth'lest out, are landed here?
Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard, and PETER of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be fear'd to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amazed
Under the tide: but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood; and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

Bast. How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express.

But, as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantastied;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day, at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd:
Deliver him to safety, and return,
For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin,

[Exit Hubert with Peter.]

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full
of it:

Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury,
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire,)
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before.

O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!—
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.

[Exit.]

K. John. Spoke like a sprightly noble gentleman.—
Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.]

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-four fix'd; and the fifth did whirl about [night:
The other four in wondrous motion.

K. John. Five moons?

Hub. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously;
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their beads,
And whisp'er one another in the car;
And he, that speaks, doth gripe the hearer's wrist;
Whilst he, that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet.)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattled and rank'd in Kent;
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

Hub. Had none, my lord! why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life:
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humour than advised respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!
How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done! Hadst not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd, to do a deed of shame,

This murder had not come into my mind:
But, taking note of thy abhor'd aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villainy,
Apt, liable, to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death
And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord,—

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a pause,

When I spake darkly what I purpos'd;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face
As bid me tell my tale in express words;
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off,
And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me:
But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with sin;
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And, consequently, thy rude hand to act
The deed, which both our tongues held veiled to name.

Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me; and my state is braved,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my cousin's death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a peace between your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.

Within this bosom never enter'd yet
The dreadful motion of a murder's thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind

Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Dost Arthur live? O, haste thee to the peers,

Throw this report on their incens'd rage,
And make them tame to their obedience!
Forgive the comment, that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O, answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Before the Castle.

Enter ARTHUR on the walls.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down:
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away;
As good to die, and go, as die, and stay.

[Leaps down.]

O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones:—

Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!

[Dies.]

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's-Bury;
It is our safety, and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;
Whose private with me, of the Dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import.

Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er we meet.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords
The king, by me, requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath disposess'd himself of us;
We will not line his thin bestaid cloak
With our p'nr honours, nor attend the foot,
That leaves the print of blood wherever it walks:
Return, and tell him so; we know the worst.

Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason uow.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;

Therefore, 'twere reason, you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison : What is he lies here ?

(Seeing Arthur.)

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely
The earth hath not a hole to hide this deed. [Beauty!]

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,
Doth lay it open, to urge on revenge.

Big. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,
Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you ? Have you beheld,
Or have you read, or heard ? or could you think ?

Or do you almost think, although you see,
That you do see ? could thought, without this object,
Form such another ? This is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,
Of murder's arms : this is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-eyed wrath, or starting rage,
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pem. All murders past do stand excused in this :
And this, so sole, and so unumtabahle,
Shall give a holiness, a purity,
To the yet unbegotten sin of time ;
And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest,
Exemplified by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work ;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand ?—
We had a kind of light, what would ensue :
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand ;
The practice, and the purpose, of the king,—
From whose obedience I forbid my soul,
Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to his breathless excellence
The incense of a vow, a holy vow,
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,
Nor conversant with ease and idleness,
Till I have set a glory to this hand,
By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter HUBERT.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you.
Arthur doth live ; the king hath sent for you.
Sal. O, he is bold, and blishes not at death :—
Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone !

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law ?

(Drawing his sword.)

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir ; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say ;
By Heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours ;
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence ;
Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill ! darest thou brave a nobleman ?

Hub. Not for my life : but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove me so ;
Y-et, I am none : Whose tongue soe'er speaks false,
Not truly speaks ; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury :

If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,

Or teach thy basty spleen to do me shame,

I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword hetime ;

Or I'll so maul you and your toasting-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Big. What will thou do, renowned Faulconbridge ?

Second a villain, and a murderer ?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince ?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well :

I honour'd him, I loved him, and will weep
My date of life out, for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villainy is not without such rheum ;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence.

Away with me all you whose souls abhor
The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house ;
For I am stified with this smell of sin.

Big. Away, toward Bury, to the Dauphin there !

Pem. There, tell the king, he may inquire us out.

(Exit Lords.)

Bast. Here's a good world !— Knew you of this fair work ?

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir.

Bast. Ha ! I'll tell thee what ;
Thou art damn'd as black—say, nothing is so black ;
Thou art doom'd deep damn'd than prince Lucifer :
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,—

Bast. If thou didst but consent
To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou wert'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb,
Will serve to strangle thee : a rush will be [self,
A beam to hang thee on ; or, wouldst thou drown thy—
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stife such a villain up.—
I do suspect thee very grievously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought,
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath,
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me !
I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.—

I am amazed, methinks ; and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.—
How easy dost thou take all England up !
From forth this morsel of dead royalty,
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fed to heaven ; and England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
The unowed inheritance of proud-swelling state.
Now, for the bare-pick'd bonze of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace :
Now powers from home, and discontents at home,
Meet in one line ; and vast confusion waits
(As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast)
The imminent decay of wrested pomp.

Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed ; I'll to the king :
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And Heaven itself doth frown upon the land. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE 1.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, PANDULPH with the crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory.

Pand. Take again
(Giving John the crown.)

From this my hand, as holding of the pope,
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word : go meet the French ;

And from his holiness use all your power
To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflamed.
Our discontented counties do revolt ;
Our people quarrel with obedience ;
Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
'This inundation of mitemper'd humour
Rests by you only to be qualified.
Then pause not ; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
Or overbrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,

Upon your stubborn usage of the pope :

But, since you are a gentle convertite,

My tongue shall bush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blustering land.

On this Ascension-day, remember well,
Upon your oath of service to the pope,

Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit.]

K. John. Is this Ascension-day ? Did not the prophet
Say, that, before Ascension-day at noon,

My crown I should give off ? Even so I have :

I did suppose, it should be on constraint ;
But, Heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded ; nothing there holds out

But Dover castle. London hath received,

Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers :

Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy ;

And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,
After they heard young Arthur was alive?

Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets;
An empty casket, where the jewel of life
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.
Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.

But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?
Be great in act, as you have been in thought;
Let not the world see fear, and sad distrust,
Govern the motion of a kingly eye:
Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire;
Threaten the threat'ner, and outface the brow
Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes,
That borrow their behaviours from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution.

Away; and glister like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field:
Show holdness and aspiring confidence.
What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
O, let it not be said!—Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors;
And grapple with him, ere he comes so nigh.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with me,
And I have made a happy peace with him;
And he hath promised to dismiss the powers
Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O inglorious league!
Shall we, upon the footing of our land,
Send fair-play orders, and make compromise,
Insinuation, parley, and base truce,
To arms invasive? shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:
Purchase, the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or if he do, let it at least be said,
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.
Bast. Away, then, with good courage; yet, I know,
Our party may well meet a prouder foe. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Plain near St Edmund's-Bury.

Enter, in arms, LEWIS, SALISBURY, MELUN, PEMBROKE, BIGOT, and Soldiers.

Lew. My lord Melun, let this be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance:
Return the precedent to these lords again;
That, having our fair order written down,
Both they and we, perusing o'er these notes,
May know wherefore we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal, and unurg'd faith,
To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince,
I am not glad, that such a sort of time
Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt,
And beat the inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many. O, it grieves my soul,
That I must draw this metal from my side,
To be a widow-maker. O, and there,
Where honourable rescue, and defence,
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury:
But such is the infection of the time,
That, for the health and physic of our right,
We cannot deal but with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confus'd wrong.—
And is 't not pity, O my griev'd friends!
That we, the sons and children of this isle,
Were born to see so sad an hour as this;
Wherein we step after a stranger march
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks, (I must withdraw and weep
Upon the spot of this enforced cause.)
To grace the gentry of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours here?
What, here?—O nation, that thou couldst remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clippest thee about,
Would hear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grapple thee unto a Pagan shore;
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

Lew. A noble temper doth thou shew in this;
And great affections, wrestling in thy bosom,
Do make an earthquake of nobility.

O, what a noble combat hast thou fought,
Between compulsion and a brave respect!
Let me wipe off this honourable dew.
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figured quite o'er with burning meteors.
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away this storm:
Commend these waters to those baby eyes
That never saw the giant world enraged,
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity,
As Lewis himself!—so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter PANDULPH, attended.

And even there, methinks, an angel spake:
Look, where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heaven;
And on our actions set the name of right,
With holy breath.

Pand. Hall, noble prince of France!
The next is this,—King John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome:
Therefore thy threat'ning colours now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no farther harmful than in shew.

Lew. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back.
I am too high-born to be proptied,
To be a secondary at control,
Or useful serving man, and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastised kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter, that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which kindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
You acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart;
And, as come you now to tell me, John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome here,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? is 't not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business, and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
Vive le roy! as I have bank'd their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match, play'd for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, on my soul, it never shall be said.

and. You look but on the outside of this work.

Lew. Outside or inside, I will not return,
Till my attempt so much be glorified
As to my ample hope was promised,
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
And call'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.—

(Trumpet sounds.)

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak:
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite,
And will not temperize with my entreaties;
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well!—Now hear our English king;
For thus his royalty doth speak in me

He is prepared ; and reason too, he should :
 This apish and unmanly approach,
 This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel,
 This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
 The king doth smile at ; and is well prepared
 To wpb this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
 From out the circle of his territories.
 That hand, which had the strength, even at your door,
 To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch ;
 To drive, like buckets, in concealed wells ;
 To crouch in litter of your stable planks ;
 To lie, like pawns, lock'd up in chests and trunks ;
 To hug with swine ; to seek sweet safety out
 In vaults and prisons ; and to thrill, and shake,
 Even at the crying of your nation's crow,
 Thinking his voice an armed Englishman ;—
 Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,
 That in your chambers gave you chastisement ?
 No : Know, the gallant monarch is in arms ;
 And like an eagle o'er his airy towers,
 To souse annoyance, that comes near his nest.—
 And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
 You bloody Neroes, ripping up the womb
 Of your dear mother England, blush for shame :
 For your own ladies, and pale-visaged maids,
 Like Amazons, come tripping after drums :
 Their tumbles into armed gauntlets change,
 Their needs to lances, and their gentle hearts
 To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace ;
 We grant, thou canst outcoud us : fare thee well ;
 We hold our time too precious to be spent
 With such a brabber.

Pan. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lew. We will attend to neither :—
 Strike up the drums ; and let the tongue of war
 Plead for our interest, and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry out ;
 And so shall you, being beaten : Do but start
 An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
 And even at hand a drum is ready braced,
 That shall reverberate all as loud as thine ;
 Sound but another, and another shall,
 As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
 And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder : for at hand
 (Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath used rather for sport than need,)
 It warlike John ; and in his forehead sits
 A bare ribb'd death, whose office is this day
 To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lew. Strike up our drums, to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter KING JOHN and HUBERT.

K. John. How goes the day with us ? O, tell me,
 Hubert.

Hub. Badly. I fear : How fares your majesty ?
K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
 Lies heavy on me : O, my heart is sick !

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,
 Desires your majesty to leave the field ;
 And send him word by me, which way you go. [Enter.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey

Mess. Be of good comfort : for the great supply,
 That was expected by the Dauphin here,
 Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands.
 This news was brought Richard but even now :
 The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ah me ! this tyrant fever burns me up,
 And will not let me welcome this good news.—
 Set on toward Swinstead : to my litter straight ;
 Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the same.

Enter SALISBURY, PEMBROKE, BIGOT,
 and others.

Sal. I did not think the king so stored with friends.

Pem. Up once again ; put spirit in the French ;
 If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,

In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. [field.

Pem. They say, King John, sore sick, hath left the Enter MELUN wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold ;

Unthread the rude eye of rebellion,

And welcome home again discarded faith.

Seek out King John, and fall before his feet ;

For, if the French be lords of this loud day,

He means to recompense the pains you take,

By cutting off your heads : Thus hath he sworn,

And I with him, and many more with me,

Upon the altar of Saint Edmund's-Bury ;

Even on that altar, where we swore to you

Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible ? may this be true ?

Mel. Have I not bideous death within my view,

Retaining but a quantity of life,

Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax

Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire ?

What in the world should make me now deceive,

Since I must lose the use of all deceit ?

Why should I then be false ; since it is true,

That I must die here, and live hence by truth ?

I say again, if Lewis do win the day,

He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours

Behold another day break in the east :

But even this night,—whose black contagious breath

Already smokes about the burning crest

Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun,

Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire ;

Paying the fine of rated treachery,

Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,

If Lewis by your assistance win the day,

Commend me to one Hubert, with your king ;

The love of him,—and this respect besides,

For that my grandsire was an Englishman,—

Awakes my conscience to confess all this.

In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence

From forth the noise and rumour of the field ;

Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts

In peace, and part this body and my soul

With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee,—And beshrew my soul

But I do love the favour and the form

Of this most fair occasion, by the which

We will untread the steps of damned flight ;

And, like a bated and retir'd flood,

Leaving our rankness and irregular course,

Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,

And calmly run on in obedience.

Even to our ocean, to our great King John.—

My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence ;

For I do see the cruel pangs of death

Right in thine eye.—Away, my friends ! New fight ;

And bappy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off Melun.]

SCENE V.—The same. The French Camp.

Enter LEWIS and his train.

Lew. The sun of heaven, methought, was loath to set ;

But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush,

When the English measured backward their own in faint retire : O, bravely came we off, [ground,

When with a volley of our needless shot,

After such bloody toil, we bid good night ;

And wound our tatter'd colours clearly up,

Last in the field, and almost lords of it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin ?

Lew. Here :—What news ?

Mess. The count Melun is slain ; the English lords,

By his persuasion, are again fall'n off ;

And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,

Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin sands.

Lew. Ah, foul shrewd news !—Beshrew thy very

I did not think to be so sad to-night, [heart :

As this hath made me.—Who was he, that said,

King John did fly, an hour or two before

The stumbling night did part our weary powers ?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lew. Well ; keep good quarter, and good care to-night ;

The day shall not be up so soon as I,

To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—An open Place, in the neighbourhood of Swinstead-Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and HUBERT, meeting.

Hub. Who's there ? speak, ho ! speak quickly, or

I shoot.

Bast. A friend!—What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee? Why may not I demand

Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought;

I will, upon all hazards, well believe

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well:

Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: and if thou please,

Thou may'st befriend me so much, as to think,

I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless night,

Have done me shame.—Brave soldier, pardon me,

That any accent, breaking from my tongue,

Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Come, come; saucy compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of night,

To find you out.

Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,

Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.

Bast. Shew me the very wound of this ill news;

I am no woman, I'll not weep at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk;

I left him almost speechless, and broke out

To acquaint you with this evil: that you might

The better arm you to the sudden time,

Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolv'd villain,

Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king

Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come back,

And brought Prince Henry in their company;

At whose request the king hath pardon'd them,

And they are all about his majesty.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty Heaven,

And tempt us not to bear above our power!—

I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,

Passing these flats, are taken by the tide,

These Lincoln washes have devour'd them;

Myself, well-mounted, hardly have escaped.

Away, before I conduct me to the king;

I doubt he will be dead, or e'er I come. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The Orchard of Stunstead Abbey.

Enter PRINCE HENRY, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

P. Hen. It is too late; the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain
(Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house)
Doth, by the idle comments that it makes,
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter PEMBROKE.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief,
That, being brought into the open air,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.—
Doth he still rage? [Exit Bigot.

Pem. He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he sang.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes,
In their continuance, will not feel themselves,
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them insensible; and his siege is now
Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;
Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'Tis strange, that death should
I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan, [sing.—
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death;
And, from the organ-pipe of frailty, sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born
To set a form upon that judicest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Re-enter BIGOT and Attendants, who bring in KING JOHN in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room
It would not out at windows, nor at doors.
There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen

Upon a parchment; and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?

K. John. Poison'd,—ill fare;—dead, forsook, cast off;

And none of you will bid the winter come,

To trust his icy fingers in my maw;

Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course

Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north

To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,

And comfort me with cold;—I do not ask you much.

I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait,

And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O that there were some virtue in my tears,

That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt in them is hot.—

Withiu me is a hell: and there the poison

Is, as a fiend, confined to tyrannize

On unreprieveable condemned blood.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see your majesty.

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:

The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd;

And all the shrouds wherewith my life should sail,

Are turned to one thread, one little hair:

My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,

Which holds but till thy woe be utter'd;

And then all this thou see'st, is but a clod,

And module of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward;

Where, Heaven he knows, how we shall answer him:

For, in a night, the best part of my power,

As I upon advantage did remove,

Were in the washes, all unwarily,

Devoured by the unexpected flood. (The King dies.)

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear

My liege! my lord!—But now a king,—now thus.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.

What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,

When this was now a king, and now is clay?

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,

To do the office for thee of revenge;

And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,

As it on earth hath been thy servant still.—

Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,

Where be your powers? Shew now your mended faiths;

And instantly return with me again.

To push destruction, and perpetual shame,

Out of the weak door of our fainting land:

Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;

The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we:

The cardinal Pandolph is within at rest,

Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin;

And brings from him such offers of our peace

As with honour and respect may take,

With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinew'd to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;

For many carriages he hath despatch'd

To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel

To the disposing of the cardinal:

With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,

If you think meet, this afternoon will post

To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so.—And you, my noble prince,

With other princes that may best be spared,

Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be interr'd;

For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then.

And happily may your sweet self put on

The lineal state and glory of the land!

To whom, with all submission, on my knee,

I do bequeath my faithful services

And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make.

To rest without a spot for evermore.

P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you

thanks,

And knows not how to do it, but with tears.

Bast. O let us pay the time but needful woe,

Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs—

This England never did (nor never shall)

Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,

But when it first did help to wound itself.

Now these her princes are come home again,

Come the three corners of the world in arms,

And we shall shock them: Nought shall make us rue,
If England to herself do rest but true. [Exit.

SIR PIERCE OF EXTON.
SIR STEPHEN SCROOP.
Captain of a Band of Welchmen.

QUEEN to King Richard.
DUCHESS OF GLOSTER.
DUCHESS OF YORK.
Lady attending on the Queen.

Lords, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, two Gardeners, Keeper, Messenger, Groom, and other Attendants.

SCENE.—Dispersedly in England and Wales.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING RICHARD, attended; JOHN OF GAUNT, and other Nobles with him.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster, Hast thou, according to thy oath and hand, brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son, Here to make good the boisterous late appeal, Which then our leisure would not let us hear, Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him, If he appeal the duke on ancient malice; Or worthily, as a good subject should, On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument, On some apparent danger seen in him, Aim'd at your highness, no inveterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to face,

And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear The accuser, and the accused, freely speak.—

[Exeunt some Attendants.]
High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire, In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Re-enter Attendants, with BOLINGBROKE and NORFOLK.

Boling. May many years of happy days befall My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

Nor. Each day still better other's happiness; Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap, Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both; yet one but flatters us, As well appeareth by the cause you come; Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.— Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boling. First, (Heaven be the record to my speech!) In the devotion of a subject's love,

Tendering the precious safety of my prince, And free from other mishegotten hate, Come I appellat to this princely presence.—

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee, And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,

My body shall make good upon this earth, Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.

Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant; Too good to be so, and too had to live;

Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky, The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly,

Once more, the more to aggravate the note,

With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat; And wish, (so please my sovereign,) ere I move, What my tongue speaks, my right-hand sword may prove.

Nor. Let not my cold words here accuse my real;

'Tis not the trial of a woman's war, The hither clanour of two eager tongues, Can arbitrate this cause betwix us twain; The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this, Yet can I not of such tame patience boast, As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say: First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me From giving retis and spurs to my free speech, Which else would post, until it had return'd These terms of treason doubled down his throat.

Setting aside his high hood's royalty, And let him be no kinsman to my liege, I do defy him, and I spit at him; Call him—a slanderous coward, and a villain: Which to maintain, I would allow him odds; And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps, Or any other ground inhabitable, Where ever Englishman dare set his foot. Meantime, let this defend my loyalty,— By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage,

Disclaiming here the kindred of a king; And lay aside my high hood's royalty, Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except; If guilty o'read hath left thee so much strength,

As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop; By that, and all the rights of knight-hood else, Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,

What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise. Nor. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear, Which gently lay'd my knight-hood on my shoulder,

I'll answer thee in any fair degree, Or chivalrous design of knightly trial; And, when I mount, alive may I not light, If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!

K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's? It must be great, that can inherit us [charge?] So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boling. Look, what I speak my life shall prove it true;—

That Mowbray hath received eight thousand nobles, In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers; The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments,

Like a false traitor, and injurious villain. Besides I say, and will in battle prove,— Or here, or elsewhere, to the farthest verge

That ever was survey'd by English eye,— That all the treasons, for these eighteen years

Complotted and contrived in this land,
Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.
Farther I say,—and farther will maintain
Upon this bad life, to make all this good.—
That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death;
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;
And, consequently, like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me for justice, and rough chastisement;
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Nor. O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears:

Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
(As he is but my father's brother's son,)

Now by my sceptre's awe I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialise
The unstopping firmness of my upright soul.

He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou;
Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou hast!
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disburs'd I duly to his highness' soldiers;
The other part reserved I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a dear account,

Since last I went to France to fetch his queen:
Now swallow down that lie.—For Gloster's death,—

I slew him not; but to my own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case,—

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,

Once did I lay in ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my griev'd soul;

But, ere I last received the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly begg'd

Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.
This is my fault: As for the rest, appeal'd,

It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor;

Which in myself I boldly will defend;
And interchangeably hurl down my gage

Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman

Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom:
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray

Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be ruled by me;
Let's purge this choler without letting blood:

This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision:

Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed
Our doctors say, this is no time to bleed.—

Good uncle, let this end where it begun;
We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age.—
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, thr. v down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry? when?
Obdience bids, I should not bid agsin.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no bout.

Nor. Myself I throw, dread sovereignty, at thy foot;
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:

The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,)

To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here;

Perced to the soul with slander's venom'd spear;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood,
Which breathed this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood:
Give me his gage:—Lions make leopards tame.

Nor. Yea, but not change their spots: take but my
And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord, [shame,

The purest treasure mortal times afford,
I—spotless reputation; that away,

As now but gilded loam, or painted clay,
A jewel in a ten-times-barr'd-up chest

I— a bold spirit in a loyal breast.
Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;

Take honour from me, and my life is done:
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;

As that I live, and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage; do you begin.

Bolingb. O, God defend my soul from such foul sin!
Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight?
Or with pale hoggar fear impeach my height?
Before this outdared dastard? Ere my tongue
Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong,
Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear;
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exit Gaunt.]

K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command:
Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry upon Saint Lambert's day;
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate:
Since we cannot atone you, we shall see
Justice design the victor's chivalry.—
Marshal, command our officer at arms
Be ready to direct these home-alarms.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter GAUNT, and Duchess of GLOSTER.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gloster's blood
Doth more solicit me, than you exclaim's,

To stir against the butchers of his life.
But since correction lieth in those hands

Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of Heaven;

Who, when he sees the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?

Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven phials of his sacred blood,

Or seven fair branches springing from one root;
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,

Some of those branches by the destinies cut:
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloster,

One flourishing branch of his most royal root,—
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spill'd;

Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.

Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bud, that womb,
That mettle, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,

Made him a man; and though thou liv'st, and breath'st,
Yet art thou slau in him: thou dost consent,

In some large measure, to thy father's death,
In that thou see'st thy wretched brother die,

Who was the model of thy father's life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair:

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,

Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee:
That, which in mean men we entitle—patience,

Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,

The best way is—to 'venge my Gloster's death.
Gaunt. Heaven's is the quarrel; for Heaven's substitute.

His deity anointed in his sight,
Hath caused his death: the which, if wrongfully,

Let Heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm—against his minister.

Duch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?
Gaunt. To Heaven, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.
Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold

Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight:
O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear

That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast!
Or, if misfortune miss the first career,

Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foming, courser's back,

And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A call'd recreant to my cousin Hereford!

Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometime brother's wife,
With her compassion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry:
As which good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more.—Grief boundeth where it falls,

Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun;

For sorrow ends not, when it seemeth done.
Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.

Lo, this is all.—Nay, yet depart not so:

Though this be all, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him—O, what?—
With all good speed at Plashy visit me.
Alack, and what shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones?
And what cheer there for welcome but my groans?
Therefore commend me: let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow, that dwells every where;
Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die;
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Gosford Green, near Coventry. Lists set out, and a Throne; Heralds, &c. attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal, and AUMERLE.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?
Aum. Yes, at all points; and longs to enter in.
Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.
Aum. Why then, the champions are prepared, and
For nothing but his majesty's approach. [stay]

Flourish of trumpets. Enter KING RICHARD, who takes his seat on his throne; GAUNT, and several Noblemen, who take their places. A trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within.
Then enter NORFOLK in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms:
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause. [art.
Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou
And why thou comest, thus knightly clad in arms;
Against what man thou comest, and what thy quarrel:
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oath;
And so defend thee Heaven, and thy valour!
Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk;
Who hither come engag'd by my oath,
(Which, Heaven defend, a knight should violate!)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford, that appeals me;
And, by the grace of God, and this mine arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me Heaven!

(He takes his seat.)

Trumpet sounds. Enter BOLINGBROKE in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plated in habiliments of war;
And formally, according to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause.
Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore comest thou
Before King Richard, in his royal lists? [hither,
Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight, so defend thee Heaven!
Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I, who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove, by Heaven's grace, and my body's valour,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, King Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me Heaven!

Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring-hardy, as to touch the lists:
Except the marshal, and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.
Boling. Lord Marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's
And bow my knee before his majesty. [hand,
For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men
That row a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,
And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.
Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this royal fight!
Farewell, my blood; which if it to-day thou shalt,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear;
As confident, as is the falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.—
My loving lord, (to Lord Marshal,) I take my leave of
Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle:— [you:—
Not sick, although I have to do with death;

But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.—
Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end more sweet:
O thou, the earthly author of my blood, (To Gaunt.)
Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a twofold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,—
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosper-
Be swift like lightning in the execution; [ous!
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy:
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and Saint George to thrive!
(He takes his seat.)

Nor. (Rising.) However Heaven, or fortune, cast my lot,

There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman:
Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontrol'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary.—
Most mighty liege,—and my companion peers,—
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,
Go I to fight: Truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I espy
Virtue with violence wounded in mine eye.—

Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

(The King and the Lords return to their seats.)

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. (Rising.) Stroug as a tower in hope, I cry—
Amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance (to an Officer) to Thomas, duke of Norfolk.

I Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,

On pain to be found false and recreant,

To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,

A traitor to his God, his king, and him,

And dares him to set forward to the fight.

I Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of
On pain to be found false and recreant, [Norfolk,
Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants.
(A charge sounded.)

Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,

And both return back to their chairs again:—
Withdraw with us:—and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.—
(A long flourish.)

Draw near, (To the Combatants.)

And list what with our council we have done.

For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With that dear blood, which it hath fostered;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds, plough'd up with neighbours' swords;
And for we think the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set you on
To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;
Which so roused up with hoisterous untuned drums,
With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,
And make us wade even in our kindred's blood:—
Therefore, we banish you our territories:
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death,
Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall not regret our fair dominions,
But tread the stranger paths of banishment. [be,— Boling. Your will be done: This must my comfort

That sun, that warms you here, shall shine on me;
And thro' his golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The fly-slow hours shall not determinate

The dateless limit of thy dear exile;—
The hopeless word of—never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,
And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth:
A dearer merit, not so deep a maim
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserv'd at your highness' hand.

The language I have learn'd these forty years,
My native English, now I must forego;
And now my tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstring'd viol or a harp;
Or like a cunning instrument cased up,
Or, being open, put into his hands,
That knows no touch to tune the harmony.
Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips;
And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my gaoler, to attend on me.
I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,
Too far in years to be a pupil now;
What is thy sentence, then, but speechless death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?

K. Rich. It boots not to be compassionate;
After our sentence, plaining comes too late.

Nor. Then thus I turn me from my country's light,
To dwell in solemn shades of endless night. [Retiring.]

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.
Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands:
Swear by the duty that you owe to Heaven,
(Our part therein we banish with yourselves,)
To keep the oath that we administer:—
You never shall (so help you truth and Heaven!)
Embrace each other's love in banishment;
Nor never look upon each other's face;

Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile
This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate;

Nor never be advis'd pursue the matter;
To plot, contrive, or contrive any ill,

'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.
Boling. I swear.

Nor. And I, to keep all this.
Boling. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy,—

By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wander'd in the air,
Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this land;
Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm;
Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

Nor. No, Bolingbroke; if ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And I from Heaven banish'd, as from hence!
But what thou art, Heaven, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.—
Farewell, my liege!—Now no way can I stray;
Save back to England, all the world's my way. [Exit.]

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
See thy griev'd heart: thy sad aspect
Hath from the number of his banish'd years
Pluck'd four away:—Six frozen winters spent, Return (to Bolingbroke) with welcome home from banishment.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters, and four wanton springs,
End in a word: Such is the breath of kings.

Gaunt. I thank my liege, that in regard of me,
He shortens four years of my son's exile;
But little vantage shall I reap thereby;
For, ere the six years that he hath to spend,
Cau change their moons, and bring their times about,
My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewasted light,
Shall be extinct with age, and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give;
Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow;
Thou canst help time to furrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage;
Thy word is current with him for my death;
But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice,
Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave;
Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lower?

Gaunt. Things sweet to taste, prove in digestion sour.
You urged me as a judge; but I had rather,
You would have bid me argue like a father:
O, had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
A partial slander sought I to avoid,
And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.

As, I look'd, when some of you should say,
I was too strict, to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
Against my will, to do myself this wrong.

K. Rich. Cousin, farewell!—and, uncle, bid him so;
Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

[Flourish. Exeunt K. Richard and Train.]
Aum. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know,

From where you do remain, let paper shew.

Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride,
As far as land will let me, by your side.

Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words,
That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends?

Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal

To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart.

Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.

Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

Gaunt. What is six winters? they are quickly gone.

Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten.

Gaunt. Call it a travel, that thou takest for pleasure.

Boling. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so,
Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set

The precious jewel of thy home-return.

Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make
Will but remember me, what a deal of world

I wander from the jewels that I love.

Must I not serve a long apprenticeshood
To foreign passages; and in the end, etc.

Having my freedom, hoard of nothing else,
But that I was a journeyman to grief?

Gaunt. All places that the eye of Heaven visits,
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens:

Teach thy necessity to reason thus;
There is no virtue like necessity.

Think not, the king did banish thee;
But thou the king: Woe doth the heavier sit,
Where it perceives it is but faintly borne.

Go, say—I sent thee forth to purchase honour,
And not—the king exiled thee: or suppose,
Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher clime.

Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou comest;

Suppose the singing birds, muscians;
The grass, whereon thou tread'st, the presence store
The flowers, fair ladies; and thy steps, so more
Than a delightful measure, or a dance:

For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mools at it, and sets it light.

Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?

Or clove the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast?

Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?

O, no! the apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse;

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way;

Had I thy youth, and cause, I would not stay.

Boling. Then, England's ground, farewell; sweet soil, adieu;

My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet!
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,— Though banish'd, yet a true-born Englishman. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the King's Chamber.

Enter KING RICHARD, BAGOT, and GREEN
AUMERLE following.

K. Rich. We did observe.—Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next high way, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears we shed?

Aum. Faith, none by me; except the north-east wind,
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awaked the sleeping rheum; and so, by chance,
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?

Aum. Farewell:

And, for my heart disdain'd that my tongue
Should so profane the word, that taught me craft:

To counterfeit oppression of such grief,
That words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.
Marry, would the world farewell have lengthen'd hours,
And added years to his short banishment,
He should have had a volume of farewells ;

But, since it would not, he had none of me.
K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin ; but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.
Ourselves, and Busby, Bagot here, and Green,
Observed his courtship to the common people :—
How he did seem to dive into their hearts,
With humble and familiar courtesy ;
What reverence he did throw away on slaves ;
 wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,
And patient overhearing of his fortune,
As 'twere, to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench ;
A brace of draymen bid—God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With—Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends :—
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he is gone ; and with him go these thoughts.

Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland ;
Expedient manage must be made, my liege ;
Ere farther leisure yield them farther means
For their advantage, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war.
And, for our coffers—with too great a court,
And liberal largess—are grown somewhat light,
We are enforced to farm our royal realm ;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand : If that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters ;
Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants ;
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter BUSHY.

Busby, what news ?

Busby. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord ;
Suddenly taken ; and hath sent post-haste,
To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he ?

Busby. At Ely-house.
K. Rich. Now put it, Heaven, in his physician's mind,
To help him to his grave immediately !
The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—
Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him !
Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late !

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in Ely House.

GAUNT on a couch; the DUKE OF YORK, and others standing by him.

Gaunt. Will the king come ? that I may breathe my last

In wholesome counsel to his unstaid youth.

York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath ;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

Gaunt. O, but they say, the tongues of dying men
Enforced attention like deep harmony :

Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain ;
For they breathe truth, that breaths their words in pain.
He, that no more must say, is listen'd more

Than they, whom youth and ease have taught to gloss ;

More are men's ends mark'd, than their lives before :

The setting sun, and music at the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last ;

Writ in remembrance, more than things long past ;

Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,

My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.

York. No ; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,

As, praises of his state : then there are found

Lascivious metres ; to whose venom sound

The open ear of youth doth always listen :

Report of fashions in proud Italy,

Whose manners still our tardy apish nation

Limps after, in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,

(So it be new, there's no respect how vile,)

That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears ?

Then all too late comes counsel to be heard.

Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard.

Direct not him, whose way himself will choose ;

'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspired ;

And thus, expiring, do foretell of him :

His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last ;

For violent fires soon burn out themselves ;

Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short ;

He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes ;

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder :

Light vanly, insatiate cormorant,

Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.

This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle,

This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,

This other Eden, demi-paradise ;

This fortress, built by nature for herself,

Against infection, and the hand of war ;

This happy breed of men, this little world ;

This precious stone set in the silver sea,

Which serves it in the office of a wall,

Or as a more defensive to a house,

Against the envy of less happier lands ;

This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,

This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,

Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth,

Renowned for their deeds as far from home,

(For Christian service, and true chivalry),

As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,

Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son :

This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,

Dear for her reputation through the world,

Is now leased out, (I die pronouncing it)

Like to a tenement, or pelting farm,

England, bound in with the triumphant sea,

Whose rocky shores beats back the envious siege

Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,

With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds ;

That England, that was wont to conquer others,

Hath made a shameful conquest of itself :

O, how happy then were my ensuing death !

Enter KING RICHARD AND QUEEN: AUMERLE, BUSHY, GREEN, BAGOT, ROSS, and WILLOUGHBY.

York. The king is come : deal mildly with his youth ;

For young hot colts, being aged, do rage the more.

Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Leicester ?

K. Rich. What comfort, man ? How is't with aged Gaunt ?

Gaunt. O, how that name befits my composition !

Old Gaunt, indeed ; and gaunt in being old :

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast ;

And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt ?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd :

Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt :

The pleasure, that some fathers feed upon,

Is my strict fast, I mean—my children's looks ;

And, therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt :

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names ?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself :

Sluce thou dost seek to kill my name in me,

I counsel my name, great to, to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live ?

Gaunt. No, no ; men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a dying, say'st—thou flatter'st me.

Gaunt. Oh ! no ; thou diest, though I the sicker be.

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

Gaunt. Now, He, that made me, knows I see thee ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill. [ill ;

Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land

Wherein thou liest in reputation sick ;

And thou, too careless patient as thou art,

Commit'st thy auncient body to the cure

Of those physicians, that first wounded thee :

A thousand flatters sit within thy crown,

Whose compass is no bigger than thy head ;

And yet, engaged in so small a verge,

The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.

O, had thy grandsire, with a prophet's eye,

Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,

From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame ;

Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd.

Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.

Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,

It were a shame to let this land by lease :

But for thy world, enjoying but this land,

Is it not more than shame, to shame it so ?

Landlord of England art thou now, not king :
Thy state of law is bondslave to the law ;
And thou——

K. Rich. —— a lunatic, lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an auge's privilege,
Darest with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek; chasing the royal blood,
With fury, from his native residence.
Now by my seat's right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
This tongue, that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unreverend shoulders.

Gaunt. O, spare me not, my brother Edward's son,
For that I was his father Edward's son;
That blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly caroused;
My brother Gloucester, plain well-meaning soul,
(Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls!)
May be a precedent and willing good;
That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood:
Join with the present sickness that I have;
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither'd flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!
These words hereafter thy tormentors be!—
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:
Love they to live, that love and honour have.

[Exit, borne out by his Attendants.
K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sickness have;

For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

York. Beseech your majesty, impute his words
To my weak sickness, and say I am thus:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry duke of Hereford, were he here.

K. Rich. Right; you say true; as Hereford's love, so
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is. [his;

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.

K. Rich. What says he now?

North. Nay, nothing; all is said:
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Wards, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be:
So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars;

We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns;
Which live like venom, where no venom else,
But only they, hath privilege to live.

And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables,

Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.

York. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?

Not Gloucester's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke,

About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.

I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first;
In war was never lion rag'd more fierce.

In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman;
His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,

Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;
But, when he frown'd, it was against the French,
Or not against his friends; his noble hand

Did win what he did spend, and spent not that
Which his triumphant father's hand had won:
His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.

O Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?
York. O my liege,

Pardon me, if you please; if not, I pleased
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.

Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?

Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?

Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford's rights away, and take from time
His charters, and his customary rights;

Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;

Be not thyself, for how art thou a king,

But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God, (God forbid, I say true!)

If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patent that he hath
By his attorney's general to sue

His livery, and deny his offer'd homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lo-e a thousand well-dispos'd hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts

Which honour and allegiance cannot think. [hands
K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

York. I'll not be by, while: My liege, farewell!
What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood,
That their events can never fall out good.

[Exit.
K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight;
Bid him repair to us to Ely-house,

To see this business: To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and to-morrow, I trow;
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England,

For he is just, and always loved us well.—
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish.

[*Exeunt King, Queen, Bushy, Aumelle,
Green, and Bagot.*

North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.

Will. Barely in title, not in revenue.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence.

North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.

Will. Barely in title, not in revenue.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence.

ere't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.
North. Nay, speak thy mind, and let him ne'er speak
more,

That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm!
Will. Tends that, thoughst speak, to the duke of
If it be so, out with it boldly, man; [Hereford?

Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all that I can do for him,
Unless you call it good to pity him,
Berest and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore Heaven, 'tis shame such wrongs
In him a royal prince, and many more [are done,
Of noble blood in this declining land.

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in late, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute

'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.
Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,

And lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fined
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts

Will. And daily new exactions are devised;
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what;
But what, o' God's name, doth become of this?

North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath
But basely yielded upon compromise. [not,

That which his ancestors achieved with blows:
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.

Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in form.
Will. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.

North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him.
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burdensome taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

North. His noble kinsman: most degenerate king!
But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest stir,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm;

We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.

Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.

North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of death,
I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

Will. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore be bold.

North. Then thus—I have from Port le Blanc, a bay in Brittany, received intelligence,
That Harry Hereford, Reinhold lord Cobham,
(The son of Richard earl of Arundel,)

That late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Rameton,

Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quaint,—

All these well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp on our drooping country's broken wing,
Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt,
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away, with me, in post to Ravenspur:
But, if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay, and be secret, and myself will go. [fear.]

Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that Will. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN, BUSHY, and BAGOT.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promised, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard: Yet again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at something it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord the king.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shad-
Which shew like grief itself, but are not so: [dows,

For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gazed upon,
Shew nothing but confusion; eyed awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of griefs, more than himself, to wail:
Which, look'd on as it is, is sought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's not
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye, [seen:]
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.

Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: How'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As,—though, in this zing, on no thought I think,—
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less conceit is still derived
From some forefather's grief; mine is not so;
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing, that I grieve at:
'Tis in reversion, that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known; what
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.

Enter GREEN.

Green. God save your majesty!—and well met gentlemen:—

I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.

Queen. Why hopest thou so? 'tis better hope, he is;
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope:
Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?

Green. That he, our hope, might have retired his
And driven into despair an enemy's hope. [power,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravenspurge.

Queen. Now God in heaven forbid!

Green. O madam, 'tis too true: and that is worse,—
The lord Northumberland, his young son Henry Percy,
The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumber-
And all the rest of the revolting faction, [land, Traitors?

Green. We have: whereon the earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
How hath my soul brought forth her prodigy

And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Bushy. Despair not, madam.

Queen. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be at enmity
With envenom'd hope; he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter YORK.

Green. Here comes the duke of York.
Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck;
O, full of careful business are his looks!—
Uncle,
For Heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth.
Where nothing lives but crosses, care, and grief.
Your husband he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:
Here am I left to underprop his land;
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself:—
Now comes the sick hour, that his surfeit mate;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.
York. He was?—Why, so!—go all which way it will!

The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side,— Sirrah,

Get thee to Plashy, to my sister Gloster;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound
Hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
To-day, as I came by, I called there:—
But I shall give you to report the rest.

York. What is it, knave?

Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.
York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woful land at once!
I know not what to do!—I would to God,
(So my untruth had not provoked him to it,)
The king had cut off my head with my brother's,—
What, are there posts despatch'd for Ireland?—
How shall we do for money for these wars?—
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.—
Go, fellow, (to the Servant) get thee home, provide some carts,

And bring away the armour that is there.—

[Exit Servant.]

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? if I know
How, or which way, to order these affairs,
Thus thrust disorderly into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen;—
The one is my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other, again,
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do.—Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you.—Go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkley-castle.
I should to Plashy too:—
But time will not permit.—All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven.

[Exeunt York and Queen.]

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power,
Proportionable to the enemy,
Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love,
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that's the wavering commons; for their love

Lies in their purses; and whose empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally comdemn'd.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king.

Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol castle
The earl of Wiltshire is already there.

Bushy. Thither will I with you: for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us:
Except like curs to tear us all in pieces
Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty
Farewell; if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part, that never shall meet again.

Bushy. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes,
Is—numb'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry;
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.
Bushy. Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.
Green. Well, we may meet again. I fear me, never.
Bagot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Wilds in Glostershire.

Enter BOLINGBROKE and NORTHUMBERLAND, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?
North. Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Glostershire.
These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome;
And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
But, I think me, what a weary way
From Ravenspurge to Cotswold, will be found
In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company;
Which, I protest, hath very much beguiled
The tediousness and process of my travel:
But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
The present benefit, which I possess;
And hope to joy, is little less in joy,
Than you enjoy'd: by this the weary lords
Shall make their way seem short; as mine hath done
By sight of what I have, your noble company.
Boling. Of much less value is my company,
Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter HARRY PERCY.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester, whensoever.—
Harry, how fares your uncle?
Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.
North. Why, is he not with the queen?
Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsok the court,
Broken his staff of office, and dispersed
The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?
He was not so resolved, when last we spake together.
Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor.
But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurge,
To offer service to the duke of Hereford;
And sent me o'er by Berkley, to discover
What power the duke of York had levied there;
Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurge.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy?
Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. [duke.
North. Then learn to know him now; this is the Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service,
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young;
Which elder days shall ripen, and confirm
To more approv'd service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure,
I count myself in nothing else so bappy,
As in a soul rememb'ring my good friends;
And, as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love's recompense:
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkley? And what stir
Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?
Percy. There stands the castle, by yon tuft of trees,
Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard;
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour;
None else of name, and noble estimate.

Enter ROSS and WILLOUGHBY.

North. Here comes the lords of Ross and Willoughby,
Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.
Boling. Welcome, my lords: I wot, your love pursues
A banish'd traitor; all my treasury
Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompense.
Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.
Willou. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.
Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor;
Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter BERKLEY.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.
Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.
Boling. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster;
And I am come to see that name in England;
And I must find that title in your tongue,
before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord: 'tis not my meaning
To raze one title of your honour out:—
To you, my lord, I come, (what lord you will,)
From the most glorious regent of this land,
The duke of York; to know, what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time,
And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter YORK, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you;
Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle!

York. Shew me thy humble heart, and not thy face,
Whose duty is deceivable and false.
Boling. My gracious uncle!
York. Tut, tut!

Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word—grace,
In an ungracious mouth, is but profane.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Dared once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But then more why,—Why have they dared to march
So many miles upon her peaceful bosom;
Frighting her pale-faced villages with war,
And ostentation of despis'd arms?
Comest thou, because the anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French;
O, then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,
And minister correction to thy fault!

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault;
On what condition stands it, and wherein?
York. Even in condition of the worst degree,—
In gross rebellion, and detested treason:
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come,
Before the expiration of thy time,
In braving arms against thy sovereign.

Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for methinks, in you
I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father!
Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd
A waud'ring vagabond; my rights and royalties
Pluck'd from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifts? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster.

You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman:
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongs, and chase them to the hay
I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters patent give me leave;
My father's goods are all distraint'd, and sold;
And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd;
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And challenge law: Attorneys are denied me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much abused.
Ross. It stands your grace upon, to do him right.
Willou. Base men by his endowments are made great,

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this,
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong.—It may not be;
And you, that do abet him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and, for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy, that breaks that oath.

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left;
But, if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But, since I cannot, be it known to you,
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace to go with us

To Bristol-castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed, and pluck away.
Fork. It may be, I will go with you;—but yet I'll pause;

For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things, past redress, are now with me past care.

[Exeunt.]SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter SALISBURY, and a Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have staid ten days,
And hardly kept our countrymen together,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman;
The king reposeth all his confidence
In thee.

Cap. 'Tis thought the king is dead: we will not stay.
But the trees in our country are all wither'd,
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven;
The pale-faced moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,—
The one, in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other, to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.—
Farewell; our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured, Richard their king is dead.

[Exit.]

Sal. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest:
Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes;
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes.

[Exit.]

ACT III

SCENE I.—Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.

Enter BOLINGBROKE, YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, WILLOUGHBY, ROSS: Officers behind with BUSHY and GREEN, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.—
Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls
(Since presently your souls must part your bodies)
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here, in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your death.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigured clean.
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him;
Broke the possession of a royal hed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.
Myself—a prince, by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,—
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Disparag'd my parks, and sell'd my forest woods;
From my own windows torn my household coat,
Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign,—
Save men's opinions, and my living blood,—
To shew the world I am a gentleman.
This, and much more, much more than twice all this,
Condemns you to the death:—See them deliver'd over
To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me,
Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is,—that Heaven will take our souls,
And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My lord Northumberland, see them despatch'd.
[Exeunt Northumberland and others, with Prisoners.]

Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house;
For Heaven's sake, fairly let her be entreated:
Tell her, I send to her my kind commends;
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.
York. A gentleman of mine I have despatch'd
With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle. Come, lords, away;
To fight with Glendower and his complices,
Awhile to work, and, after, holiday.

[Exeunt]SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in View

Flourish: Drums and Trumpets. Enter KING RICHARD, BISHOP OF GARLISLE, AUMERLE, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barkloughly-castle, call you this at hand?
Aum. Yes, my lord: How looks your grace the air,
After late tossing on the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well; I weep for joy,
To stand upon my kingdom once again.—
Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:
As a long parted mother with her child
Fishes fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favour with my royal hands.

Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense:
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way;

Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies:
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder;
Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—
Mock not my senseless conjuration, lords;
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones,
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall alter under foul rebellious arms.

Bishop. Fear not, my lord; that Power, that made
you kings,
yourselves,

Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.
The means, that Heaven yields, must be embraced,
And not neglected; else, if Heaven would,
And we will not, Heaven's offer we refuse;
The proffer'd means of succour and redress.
Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends;

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not,
That when the searching eye of Heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, bloody here;

But when, from under this terrestrial ball,
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pinns,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detested sins,
The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,
Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes,—
Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king:
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:
For every man, that Bolingbroke hath press'd
To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,
God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight,
Weak men must fall; for Heaven still guards the right.

Whist Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends;

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not,
That when the searching eye of Heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,

So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,
Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes,—
Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.

Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king:
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:

Weak men must fall; for Heaven still guards the right.

Enter SALISBURY.

Welcome, my lord. How far off lies your power?

Sal. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,
Than this weak arm. Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,
Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth:
O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men!
To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
For all the Welchmen, hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispersed, and fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege. Why looks your grace so
K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
And, till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead?

All souls, that will be safe, fly from my side;
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege: remember who you are.
K. Rich. I had forgot myself. Am I not king?
 Awake, thou slugard majesty! thou sleepest.
 Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
 Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
 At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
 Ye favourites of a king:—Are we not high?
 High be our thoughts: I know, my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turu. But who Comes here?

Enter SCROOP.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege,
 Than can my care-tuned tongue deliver him.

K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepared;
 The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold.
 Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care;
 And what loss is it, to be rid of care?
 Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
 Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
 We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so:
 Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend;
 They break their faith to God, as well as us:
 Cry, woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay:
 The worst is—death, and death will have his day.

Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd
 To bear the tidings of calamity.

Like an unseasonable stormy day,
 Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
 As if the world were all dissolved to tears;
 So high above his limits swells the rage
 Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
 With hard bright steel: his hearts harder than steel.
 White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
 Against thy majesty; boys, with women's voices,
 Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints
 In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown:
 Thy very headmen learn to bend their bows
 Of double-fatal yew against thy state;
 Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills
 Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
 And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill.
 Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
 What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
 That they have let the dangerous enemy
 Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
 If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.
 I warrant, they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord. [tion]

K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without redemp-
 Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!
 Snakes in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart!
 Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!
 Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
 Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

Scroop. Sweet lord, I see, changing his property,
 Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate:
 Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made
 With beads, and not with hands; those whom you curse,
 Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
 And lie full low, grav'd in the hollow ground. [dead?]

Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, Scroop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power?

K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man speak:
 Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
 Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
 Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.

Let's choose executors, and talk of wills;
 And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
 Save our deposed souls to the ground?
 Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
 And nothing can we call our own, but death;
 And that small model of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones,
 For Heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
 And tell sad stories of the death of kings:
 How some have been deposed, some slain in war;
 Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed;
 Some poison'd—by their wives, some sleeping kill'd:
 All murder'd.—For within the hollow crown,
 That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
 Keeps death his court; and there the antic sits,
 Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
 Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
 To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
 Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—
 As if his flesh, which walls about his life,
 Were brass impregnable, and, humour'd thus,
 Comes at the last, and with a little pin
 Bores through his castle wall, and—farewell, king!

Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
 With solemn reverence; throw away respect.

Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,
 For you have but mistook me all this while:
 I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief,
 Need friends.—Subjected thus,
 How can you say to me—I am a king?

Car. My lord, wise men en'er wait their present
 But presently prevent the ways to wail. [woes,
 To fear the foe, since fear oppresth strength,
 Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
 And so your follies fight against yourself.

Fear, and be slain; no worse can come, to fight—
 And fight and die, is death destroying death,
 Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath.

Aum. My father hath a power, inquire of him;
 And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou chidest me well.—Proud Boling-broke, I come

To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
 This age-fit of fear is over-blown;
 An easy task it is, to win our own.—

Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
 Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
 The state and inclination of the day:
 So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
 My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.

I play the torturer, by small and small,
 To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:—
 Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke;
 And all your northern castles yielded up,
 And all your southern gentlemen in arms
 Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
 Besrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth
 (To Aumerle,

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
 What say you now? what comfort have we now?
 By Heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
 That bids me be of comfort any more.

Go, to Flint-castle; there I'll pine away:
 A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe obey.
 That power I have, discharge; and let them go
 To ear the land, that hath some hope to grow,
 For I have none.—Let no man speak again
 To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Aum. My liege, one word.

K. Rich. He does me double wrong.
 That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
 Discharge my followers, let them hence.—Away,
 From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Wales. Before Flint Castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, BOLINGBROKE, and Forces; YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, and others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
 The Welshmen are dispersed; and Salisbury
 Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
 With some few private friends, upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair and good, my lord;
 Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head.

York. It would beseem the lord Northumberland,
 To say—King Richard—Alack the heavy day,
 When such a sacred king should hide his head!

North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
 Left I his title out.

York. The time hath been,
 Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
 For taking so the head, your whole head's length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, farther than you should.
York. Take not, good cousin, farther than you should.
 Let you mis-take: The heavens are o'er your head.

Boling. I know it, uncle: and oppose not Myself against their will.—But who comes here?

Enter PERCY.

Well, Harry; what, will not this castle yield?
Percy. The castle royally is man'd, my lord,
 Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally!
 Why, it contains no king?

Percy. Yes, my good lord,
 It doth contain a king: King Richard lies
 Within the limits of yon lime and stone:
 And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury, Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
 Of holy reverence; who, I cannot learn.

North. Belike, it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord, (To North.)
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parole
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:
Harry Bolingbroke
On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's hand;
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person; hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,
And lands restored again, be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:
The which how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair King Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall shew.
Go, signify as much; while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.

(Northumberland advances to the castle, with a trumpet.)

Let's march without the noise of threating drum,
That from the castle's totter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perused.
Methinks, King Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
Is he the fire, I'll be the yielding water;
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.
March on, and mark King Richard how he looks.

*A parle sound, and answered by another trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls KING
RICHARD, the Bishop of CARLISLE, AUMERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY.*

*York. See, see, King Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east;
When he perceives the envious clouds are hent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.
Yet looks he like a king; behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Controlling majesty. Alack, alack, for woe,
That any harm should stain so fair a show!* [stood
K. Rich. We are amazed; and thus long have we
To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,

(To Northumberland.)

Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, shew us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship:
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think, that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,
And we are barren, and bereft of friends;—
Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent,
Is mustering in his clouds, on our behalf,
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head
And threaten the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke, (for you'd), methinks, he is,)
That every stride he makes upon my land,
Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mother's sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face;
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.

North. The King of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon thy royal grandsire's bones;
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents, that spring from one most gracious head;
And by the hurried hand of warlike Gaunt;
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,—
His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,

His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.
K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king returns;
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.—
We do debase ourself, cousin, do we not,

(To Aumerle.)

To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words.

Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.
K. Rich. O God! O God! that'er this tongue of
That laid the sentence of dread banishment [mine,
On you proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! O, that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been!
Or not remember what I must be now! [beat,
Sweet'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke, K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he submit?

The king shall do it. Must he be deposed?
The king shall be contented. Must he lose
The name of king? O God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels, for a set of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown;
My figured gowls, for a dish of wood;
My sceptre, for a palmer's walking-staff;
My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave:—
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head:
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live;
And buried once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou weep'st; my tender-hearted cousin!—
We'll make foul weather with despis'd tears:
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus:—To drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth: and, therein laid, *There lies
Two kinsmen, digg'd their graves with weeping eyes!*
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me.—
Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live, till Richard die?

North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend
To speak with you; may't please you to come down?

K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. [Phaeton,
(North, retires to Boling.)

In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down court! down
king!

For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing. [Aumerle from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?
North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter KING RICHARD, and his Attendants below

Boling. Stand all apart,
And shew fair duty to his majesty.
My gracious lord,— (Kneeling)

K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee.
To make the base earth proud with kissing it;
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, (touching his own head,) although your knee be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.

K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.

Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord, As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. Rich. Well you deserve.—They well deserve to have,

That know the strongest and surest way to get.—

Uncle, give me your hand : nay, dry your eyes,

Tears shew their love, but want their remedies.—

Cousin, I am too young to be your father,

Though you are old enough to be my heir.

What you will have, I'll give, and willing too ;

For do we must, what force will have us do.—

Set on towards London.—Cousin, is it so ?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.

K. Rich. Then I must not say, no.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Langley. The Duke of York's Garden.

Enter the QUEEN and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this gar-

To drive away the heavy thought of care ? [Enter]

1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

Queen. 'Twill make me think,

The world is full of rubs, and that my fortune

Runs 'gainst the bias.

1 Lady. Madam, we will dance.

Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,

When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief :

Therefore, no dancing, girl ; some other sport.

1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.

Queen. Of either, madam. Of sorrow, or of joy ?

1 Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither, girl :

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,

It doth remember me the more of sorrow ;

Or if of grief, being altogether had,

It adds more sorrow to my want of joy :

For what I have, I need not to repeat ;

And what I want, it boots not to complain.

1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.

Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause ;

But thou shouldst please me better, wouldst thou weep.

1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.

Queen. And I could weep, would weeping do me good,

And never borrow any tear of thee.

But stay, here come the gardeners :

Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.

Me wretchedness unto a row of pins,

They'll talk of state ; for every one doth so

Against a change : Woe is forerun with woe.

[Queen and Ladies retire.]

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon' dangling apricocks,

Which, like unruly children, make their sire

Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight :

Give some suppittance to the bending twigs.—

Go thou, and, like an executioner,

Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays,

That look too lofty in the commonwealth :

All must be even in our government.—

You thus employ'd, I will go root away

The noisome weeds, that without profit suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

1 Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,

Keep law, and form, and due proportion,

Shewing, as in a model, our firm estate ?

When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,

Is full of weeds ; her fairest flowers choked up,

Her fruit-trees all unpruned, her hedges ruin'd,

Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs

Swarming with caterpillars ?

Gard. Hold thy peace :

He, that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,

Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf :

The weeds, that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,

That seem'd in sitting him to hold him up,

Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke ;

I mean, the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

1 Serv. What, are they dead ?

Gard. They are ; and Bolingbroke

Hath seized the wasteful king.—Oh ! what pity is it,

That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,

As we this garden ! We at time of year

Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees ;

Least, being over-proud with sap and blood,

With too much riches it confound itself :

Had he done so to great and growing men,

They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste

Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches

We lop away, that bearing boughs may live :

Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,

Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

1 Serv. What, think you then, the king shall be deposed ?

Gard. Depress'd he is already ; and deposed,

'Tis doubt, he will be : Letters came last night

To a dear friend of the good Duke of York's,

That tell black tidings.

Queen. O, I am press'd to death,

Through want of speaking !—Thou, old Adam's likeness, [Coming from her concealment.]

Set to dress this garden, how darest

Thy harsh-rude tongue sound this unpleasing news ?

What Eve, what serpent, hath suggested thee

To make a second fall of cursed man ?

Why dost thou say, King Richard is deposed ?

Darest thou, thou little better thing than earth,

Divine his downfall ? Say, where, when, and how,

Camest thou by these ill-tidings ? speak, thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me, madam : little joy have I,

To breathe this news ; yet, what I say, is true.

King Richard, he is in the mighty hold

Of Bolingbroke ; their fortunes both are weigh'd :

In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,

And some few vanities, that make him light ;

But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,

Besides himself, are all the English peers,

And with that odds he weighs King Richard down.

Post you to London, and you'll find it so ;

I speak no more than every one doth know.

Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,

Doth not thy embassy belong to me,

And am I hast that knows it ? O, thou think'st

To serve me last, that I may longest keep

Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go,

To meet at London London's king in woe.—

What, was I born to this ! that my sad look

Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke ?

Gardener, for telling me this news of woe,

I would, the plants thou graft'st, may never grow.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.]

Gard. Poor queen ! so that thy state might be no worse,

I would, my skill were subject to thy curse.—

Here did she drop a tear ; here, in this place,

I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace :

Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,

In the remembrance of a weeping queen. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall. The Lords

spiritual on the right side of the throne ; the Lords temporal on the left : the Commons below.

Enter BOLINGBROKE, AUMERLE, SURREY,

NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, FITZWATER,

another Lord, BISHOP OF CARLISLE, ABBOT

OF WESTMINSTER, and Attendants. Officers behind with BAGOT.

Boling. Call forth Bagot :—

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind ;

What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death ;

Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd

The bloody office of his timeless end,

Bagot. Then set before my face the lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue

Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.

In that dead time, when Gloucester's death was plotted,

I heard you say,—Is not my arm of length,

That reacheth from the resifful English court

As far as Calais, to my uncle's head ?

Amongst much other talk, that very time,

I heard you say, that you had rather refuse

The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,

Than Bolingbroke's return to England ;

Adding withal, how blest this land would be,

In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords,

What answer shall I make to this base man ?

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,

On equal terms to give him chastisement ?

Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd

With the attainer of his slanderous lips.—

There is my gaze, the manual seal of death,

That marks thee out for hell : I say, thou liest,

And will maintain what thou hast said is false,

In thy heart-blood, thou being all too base

To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence, that hath moved me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathies,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine;
By that fair sun, that shews me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death.
If thou den'st it, twenty times thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest: his honour is as true,
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust:

And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee, to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing; seize it, if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Lord. I take the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle:
And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be holla'd in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun: there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Aum. Who sets me else? by Heaven, I'll throw it
I have a thousand spirits in one breast, [all:
'To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surrey. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitz. My lord, 'tis true; you were in presence then;
And you can witness with me this is true.

Surrey. As false, by Heaven, as Heaven itself is true.

Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy!

That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge,
Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull.

In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!

If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies,
And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,

To tie thee to my strong correction.—
As I intend to thrive in this new world,
Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:

Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
To execute the noble duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage,
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage,
Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restored again
To all his land and signories; when he's return'd,
Against Aumerle we will enforce this trial.

Car. That honourable day shall ne'er be seen.—

Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ: in glorious Christian field,
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross,
Against black Pagans, Turks, and Saracens:
And, toll'd with works of war, retired himself
To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain, Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Car. As sure as I live, my lord. [bosom

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the
Of good old Abraham!—Lords appellants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter YORK, attended.

York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marry, God forbid!—
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeching me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any hit this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard; then true nobles would Learn his own forbearance from his own wrong.

What subject can give sentence on his king?

And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?

Thieves are not judged, but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them.

And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judged by subject and inferior breath,

And he himself not present? O forbid it, God,

That, in a Christian climate, souls refined

Should shew so heinous, black, obscene a deed!

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,

Stirr'd up by Heaven thus boldly for his king.

My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:

And if you crown him, let me prophesy,—
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act;

Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars

Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's skulls.

O, if you rear this house against this house,
It will the woefullest division prove,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth:

Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child, child's children, cry against you—woe!

North. Well have you argued, sir; and, for your
Of capital treason we arrest you here— [pains,

My lord of Westminster, be it your charge

To keep him safely till his day of trial.—

May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit?

Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. [Exit.

Boling. Lords, you that are here under our arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer:—
Little are we beholden to your love, [To Cartivie.)
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter YORK, with KING RICHARD, and Officers bearing the crown, &c.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:—
Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I will remember
The favours of these men: Were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, All hail I to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve,
Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand,
God save the king!—Will no man say Amen? [none.

Am I both priest and clerk? well then, Amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, Amen, if Heaven do think him me.—
To do what service am I sent for hither?

York. To do that office, of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,—
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke. [The crown;

K. Rich. Give me the crown!—Here, cousin, seize Here, on this side, my hand; on that side, thine.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
The bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. My crown I am; but still my griefs are
You may my glories and my state depose, [mine:
But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares, set up, do not pluck my cares
My care is—loss of care, by old care done; [down.
Your care is—pain of care, by new care won:

The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?

K. Rich. Ay, no—no, ay—no—for I must nothing but;
Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.

Now mark me how I will undo myself:—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my crown,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,

With mine own breath release all duteous oaths :
 All pomp and majesty I do forswear :
 My manors, rents, and revenues, I forego ;
 My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny :
 God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me !
 God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee !
 Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd ;
 And thou with all possid, that hast all achiev'd !
 Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
 And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit !
 God save King Henry, unking'd Richard says,
 And send him many years of sunshine days !—
 What more remains ?

North. No more, but that you read
 (Offering a paper.)
 These accusations, and these grievous crimes,
 Committed by your person, and your followers,
 Against the state and profit of this land ;
 That, by confessing them, the souls of men
 May deem that you are worthily depos'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so ? and must I ravel out
 My weaved-up follies ? Gentle Northumberland,
 If thy offences were upon record,
 Would it not shame thee in so fair a troop,
 To read a lecture of them ? If thou wouldst,
 There shouldst thou find one heinous article,—
 Containing the deposing of a king,
 And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,— Mark'd with a blot, dam'd in the book of heaven :—
 Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,
 Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself,—
 Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
 Shewing an outward pity ; yet you Pilates
 Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
 And water cannot wash away my sin.

North. My lord, despatch ; read o'er these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see ;
 And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
 But they can see a sort of traitors here.
 Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
 I find myself a traitor with the rest :
 For I have given here my soul's consent,
 To undo the pompous body of a king ;
 Make glory, base ; and sovereignty, a slave ;
 Proud majesty, a subject ; state, a peasant.

North. My lord,— [man.]

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught, insulting
 Nor no man's lord ; I have no name, no title,—
 No, not that name was given me at the font,—
 But 'tis usurp'd.—Alack the heavy day,
 That I have worn so many winters out,
 And know not now what name to call myself !
 O, that I were a mockery king of snow,
 Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
 To melt myself away in water-drops !—
 Good king,—great king,—(and yet not greatly good,)
 An if my word be sterling yet in England,
 Let it command a mirror hither straight ;
 That it may shew me what a face I have,
 Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass
 [Exit an Attendant.]

North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come. [Bell.]

K. Rich. Fiend ! thou torment'st me ere I come to Boling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.
North. The commons will not then be satisfied.
K. Rich. They shall be satisfied ; I'll read enough,
 When I do see the very book indeed
 Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself.

Re-enter Attendant, with a glass.
 Give me that glass, and therein will I read.—
 No deeper wrinkles yet ? Hath sorrow struck
 So many blows upon this face of mine,
 And made me deeper wounds ?—O battering glass,
 Like to my followers in prosperity,
 Thou dost beguile me ! Was this face the face,
 That every day under his household roof
 Did keep ten thousand men ? Was this the face,
 That, like the sun, did make beholders wink ?
 Was this the face, that faced so many follies,
 And was at last out-faced by Bolingbroke ?
 A brittle glory shineth in this face :
 As brittle as the glory is the face ;

(Dashes the glass against the ground.)
 For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.—
 Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport,—
 How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd
 The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.
 The shadow of my sorrow ? Ha ! let's see—

'Tis very true, my grief lies all within ;
 And these external manners of lament
 Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
 That swells with silence in the tortured soul ;
 There lies the substance : and I thank thee, king,
 For thy great bounty, that not only givest
 Me cause to weep, but teachest me the way
 How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
 And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
 Shall I obtain it ?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich. Fair cousin ? Why, I am greater than a
 For, when I was a king, my flatterers [King]
 Were then but subjects ; being now a subject,
 I have a king here to my flatterer.
 Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask.
K. Rich. And shall I have ?
Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.
Boling. Whither ?
K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.

Boling. Go, some of you, convey him to the Tower.
K. Rich. O, good ! Convey ?—Conveyers are you all,
 That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.

[Exit K. Richard, some Lords, and a Guard.]
Boling. On Wednesday next, we solemnly set down
 Our coronation : lords, prepare yourselves.
 [Exit all but the Abbot, Bishop of Carlisle, and Aumerle.]

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.
Car. The woe's to come ; the children yet unborn
 Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.

Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
 To rid the realm of this pernicious blot ?
Abbot. Before I freely speak my mind herein,
 You shall not only take the sacrament
 To bury mine intents, but to effect
 Whatever I shall happen to devise.—
 I see your brows are full of discontent,
 Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears ;
 Come home with me to supper ; I will lay
 A plot, shall shew us all a merry day. [Exit all]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower

Enter QUEEN and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come ; is this the way
 To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
 To whose flint bosom my condemn'd lord
 Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke :
 Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
 Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter KING RICHARD, and Guards.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
 My fair rose wither. Yet look up ; behold ;
 That thou in pity may dissolve to dew,
 And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—
 Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand ;
 Thou map of honour ; thou King Richard's tomb,
 And not King Richard ; thou most heinous sin,
 Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodged in thee,
 When triumph is become an alouseh guest ?
K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,
 To make my end too sudden : learn, good soul,
 To think our former state a happy dream ;
 From which awaked, the truth of what we are Shews us but this : I am sworn brother, sweet,
 To grim necessity ; and he and I
 Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,
 And cloister thee in some religious house :
 Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
 Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind
 Transform'd, and weaken'd ? Hath Bolingbroke
 Deposed thine intellect ? Hath he been in thy heart ?
 The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
 And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
 To be o'erpower'd ; and witt thou, pupil-like,
 Take thy correction mildly ? kiss the rod ;
 And fawn on rage with base humility,
 Which art a lion, and a king of beasts ?

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed ; if aught hit
 I had been still a happy king of men. [Hearts,
 Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France ;
 Think, I am dead ; and that even here thou takest,
 As from my death-bed, my last living leave.
 In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire
 With good old folks ; and let them tell thee tales

Of woeful ages, long ago betid:
 And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,
 Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
 And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
 For why, the senseless brands will sympathize
 The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
 And, in compassion, weep the fire out:
 And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
 For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, attended.

North. My lord, the mid of Bolingbroke is changed;
 You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
 And, madam, there is order ta'en for you;
 With all swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder, wherewithal
 The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,—
 The time shall not be many hours of age
 More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,
 Shall break into corruption; thou shalt think,
 Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
 It is too little, helping him to all;
 And he shall think that thou, which know'st the way
 To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
 Being ne'er so little urged, another way
 To pluck him headlong from the usurp'd throne.
 The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
 That fear, to hate; and hate turns one, or both,
 To worthy danger, and deserv'd death.

North. My guilt he on my head, and there an end.
 Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.

K. Rich. Doubly divorced?—Bad men, ye violate
 A woeful marriage,—twixt me and me,
 And that betwixt me and my married wife.—
 Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me;
 And yet not so, for a kiss 'twas made.—
 Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,
 Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime;
 My wife to France; from whence, set forth in pomp,
 She came adorned hither like sweet May,
 Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day.

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.

North. That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe.
 Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
 Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near!
 Go, count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans.
 Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,
 And piece the way out with a heavy heart.
 Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief,
 Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.
 One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;
 Thus give I mine, and thus I take thy heart.

Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good
 To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart. [part (Kiss again.)

So, now I have mine own again, begone,
 That I may strive to kill it with a groan.

K. Rich. We make wo wanton with this fond delay;
 Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter YORK, and his DUCHESS.

Duch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest.
 When weeping made you break the story off
 Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,
 Where rude misgovern'd hands, from window's tops,
 Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
 Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
 Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—
 With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course,
 While all tongues cried—God save thee, Bolingbroke!
 You would have thought the very windows spake,
 So many greedy looks of young and old
 Through casements darted their desiring eyes
 Upon his visage; and that all the walls,
 With painted images, had said at once,
 Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!
 Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,
 Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,

Bespoke them thus,—I thank you, countrymen:
 And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,
 After a well graded actor leaves the stage,
 Are idly bent on him that enters next,
 Thinking his prattle to be tedious:
 Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
 Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him;
 No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home;
 But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
 Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—
 His face still combating with tears and smiles,
 The badges of his grief and patience,—
 That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
 The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
 And barbarism itself have pittied him.
 But Heaven hath a hand in these events;
 To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
 To Bolingbroke we are sworn subjects now,
 Whose state and honour I for aye allow.

Enter AUMERLE.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was
 But that is lost, for being Richard's friend,
 And, madam, you must call him Rutland now;
 I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
 And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Duch. Welcome, my son. Who are the violets now,
 That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not:
 God knows, I had as lief be none, as one.

York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of time,
 Lest you be clogg'd before you come to prime.
 What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God seal it not; I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?
 Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.

Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.

York. No matter then who sees it.

I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me;

It is a matter of small consequence,

Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear,— What should you fear?

'Tis nothing out some bond that he is enter'd into

For gay apparel, 'gainst the triumph day.

York. Bound to himself? what doth he with a bond

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.—

Boy, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not shew

York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say. [It (Snatches it, and reads.)

Treason! foul treason!—villain! traitor! slave!

Duch. What is the matter, my lord?

York. He! who is within there? (Enter a Servant.)

Saddle my horse.

God for his mercy! what treachery is here!

Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?

York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse:

For by mine honour, by my life, my troth,

I will impeach the villain. [Exit Servant]

Duch. What's the matter?

York. Peace, foolish woman.

Duch. I will not peace.—What is the matter, son?

Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more

Than my poor life must answer.

Duch. Thy life answer!

Re-enter Servant, with boots.

York. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.

Duch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art amazed.—

Hence, villain; never more come in my sight.—

(To the Servant.)

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?

Have we more sons? or are we like to have?

Is not my teeming date drunk up with time?

And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,

And rob me of a happy mother's name?

Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?

York. Thou fond mad woman,

Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?

A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,

And interchangeably set down their hands,

To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall be none ;
We'll keep him here : Then what is that to him ?

York. Away,
Fond woman ! were he twenty times my son,
I would appeach him.

Duch. Hadst thou groan'd for him,
As I have done, thou'dst be more pitiful.
But now I know thy mind : thou dost suspect,
That I have been disloyal to thy bed,
And that he is a bastard, not thy son ;
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind :
He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, or any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman.

Duch. After, Aumerle ; mount thee upon his horse ;
Spur, post ; and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I'll not be long behind ; though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York :
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee : Away ;
Begone.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Enter BOLINGBROKE as King ; PERCY, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell of my unthrifty son ?
Tis full three months since I did see him last :—
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be found :
Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions ;
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers ;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour, to support
So dissolute a crew.

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the
And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling. And what said the gallant ?

Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stew's ;
And from the common's creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour ; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

Boling. As dissolute, as desperate ; yet, through
I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here ?

Enter AUMERLE, hastily.

Aum. Where is the king ?

Boling. What means
Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly ?

Aum. God save your grace ! I do beseech your majesty,

To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.— [Exit Percy and Lords.]

What is the matter with our cousin now ?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
(Kneels.)

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault ?

If but the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave, that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. Have thy desire. (Aumerle locks the door.)
York. (Within.) My liege, beware ; look to thyself ;
Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. (Drawing.)
Aum. Stay thy revenging hand ;
Thou hast no cause to fear.

York. (Within.) Open the door, secure, fool-hardy
Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face ? [king ;
Open the door, or I will break it open.
(Bolingbroke opens the door.)

Enter YORK.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle ? speak ;

Recover breath ; tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me shew.

Aum. Remember as thou read'st thy promise past ;
I do repent me ; read not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

York. 'Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—

I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king ;
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence ;
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy !—
O loyal father of a treacherous son !

Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath held his current, and defiled himself !
Thy overflow of good converts to bad ;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd ;
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame.
As thriftless sons their scraping father's gold,
Mine honour lives, when his dishonour dies,
Or my shamed life in his dishonour lies ;
Thou kill'st me in his life ; giving him breath.
The traitor lives, the true man's 'put to death.

Duch. (Within.) What ho, my liege ! for God's sake let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voiced suppliant makes his cager cry ?

Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king ; 'tis I.
Speak with me, pity me, open the door ;
A heggar hegs, that never hegg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is alter'd,—from a serious thing,
And now changed to The Beggar and the King.—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in ;
I know she's come to pray for your foul sin.

York. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray.
More sins, for this forgiveness, prosper may.
This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rests sound ;
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man,
Love, loving not itself, none other can.
York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here ?
Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear ?
Duch. Sweet York, be patient : Hear me, gentle liege. (Kneels.)

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.
Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech
For ever will I kneel upon my knees,
And never see day, that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy ; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee.
(Kneels.)
York. Against them both, my true joints be healed be (Kneels.)

Ill may'st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace !
Duch. Pleads he in earnest ? look upon his face ;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest ;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast
He prays but faintly, and would be denied ;
We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside ;
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know ;
Our knees shall kneel, till to the ground they grow ;
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy ;
Ours, of true zeal, and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his ; then let them have
That mercy which true prayers ought to have.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up,
Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up ;
But pardon, first ; and afterwards, stand up.
An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now ;
Say—pardon, king ; let pity teach thee how ;
The word is short, but not so short as sweet ;
No word like, pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king ; say, Par donnez moy.

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy ?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That sett'st the word itself against the word !—
Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land ;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there :
Or, in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear ;
That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee, pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.
Duch. I do not sue to stand,
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.
Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.
Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee !
Yet am I sick for fear ; speak it again ;
Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.

Bo'ing. With all my heart
I pardon him.
Duch. A god on earth thou art.
Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law, and the abbot,
With all the rest of that consorted crew,—
Destruction straight shall god them at the heels,—
Good uncle, help to order several powers
To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are:
They shall not live within this world, I swear,
But I will have them, if I once know where.
Uncle, farewell,—and cousin too, adieu:
Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.
Duch. Come, my old sou;—I pray God make thee
new. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Enter EXTON, and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?
Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?
Was it not so?
Serv. Those were his very words. [twice.
Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he; he spake it
And urged it twice together; did he not?
Serv. He did.
Exton. And, speaking it, he wistfully look'd on me;
As who should say,—I would, thou wert the man,
That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go;
I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.

Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
This prison where I live, unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it.—Yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father; and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In humours, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,—
As thoughts of things divine,—are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the world itself
Against the word:
As thus,—Come, little ones; and then again,—
*It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a needle's eye.*
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely wonders; how these vain weak nails
May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
Thoughts tending to content, flatter themselves,—
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,
That many have, and others must sit there:
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endured the like.
Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: Sometimes am I king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: Then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again: and, by and by,
Think, that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing.—But, whate'er I am,
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall he pleased till he be eased
With being nothing.—Music do I hear? (Music.)
Ha, ha! keep time:—How sour sweet music is,
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives.
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But, for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke,
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
For now hath time made me his numbring clock:
My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar
Their watches to mine eyes, the outward watch,
Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now, sir, the sound, that tells what hour it is,
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,

Shew minutes, times, and hours—but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock.
This music mads me, let it sound no more;
For, though it have holpe madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart, that gives it me.
For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!
K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
Where no man ever comes, but that sad dog
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?
Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king; who travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime master's face.
O, how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London streets that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid;
That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd!
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary! Tell me, gentle friend,
How went he under him?
Groom. So proudly, as if he disdain'd the ground.
K. Rich. So proud, that Bolingbroke was on his back
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall,) and break the neck
Of that proud man, that did usurp his back?
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be awed by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd, and tired, by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper with a dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.
(To the Groom.)
K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.
Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit.]
Keep. My lord, wilt please you to fall to?
K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.
Keep. My lord, I dare not: sir Pierce of Exton, who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.
K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!
Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.
(Beats the Keeper.)
Keep. Help, help help!

Enter EXTON and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now? what means death in this rude assault?
Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's instrument.
(Snatching a weapon, and killing one.)
Go thou, and fill another room in hell.
(He kills another, then Exton strikes him down.)
That hand shall burn in never quenching fire,
That stagers thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce hand
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high;
Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward here to die.
(Dies.)
Exton. As full of valour, as of royal blood:
Both have I spilt; O, would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me—I did well,
Says, that this deed is chronicle in hell.
This dead king to the living king I'll bear;—
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE and YORK, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is,—that the rebels have consumed with fire
Our town of Cicester in Gloucestershire;
But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Welcome, my lord: What is the news?
North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness,
The next news is,—I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:

The manner of their taking may appear
At large discours'd in this paper here.

(Presenting a paper.)

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter FITZWATER.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Seely,
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter PERCY, with the Bishop of CARLISLE.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster
With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
But here is Carlisle living, to abide
Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life:
So, as thou livest in peace, die free from strife:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter EXTON, with Attendants bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear; herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought

A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,
Upon my head, and all this famous land. [dead.]

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this Boling. They love not poison, that do poison heed,

Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead,

I hate the murderer, love him murdered.

The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,

But neither my good word, nor princely favour:

With Cain go wander through the shade of night,

And never shew thy head by day nor light.—

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,

That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow:

Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,

And put on sullen black incontinent;

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,

To wash this blood off from my guilty band:—

March sadly after; grace my mournings here,
In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, WESTMORELAND, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenced in strouds afar remote.
No more the thirsty Erinys of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which—like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred—
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual, well-beseating ranks,
March all one way; and be no more opposed
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,

(Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impress'd and engaged to fight.)
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy;
Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' womb,
To chase these pagans, in those holy fields,
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose is a twelve-month old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you—we will go;
Therefore we meet not now:—Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear experience.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight: when, all atwart, there came
A post from Wales, laden with heavy news;
Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
And a thousand of his people butchered:
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shameless transformation,
By those Welshwomen done, as may not be,
Without much shame, re-told or spoken of.

K. Hen. It seems, then, that the tidings of this broil
Brake off our business for the Holy Land.

West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious
lord;

For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north, and thus it did import.
On Holy-rod day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approv'd Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody bourn;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelibeod, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

K. Hen. Here is a dear and true-industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil,
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake the earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beate Douglas; and the earls of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not?

West. In faith,
It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.

K. Hen. Yea, there thou makest me sad, and makest me sin.

In envy, that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father of so blest a son:
A son who is the theme of honour's tongue;
Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride;
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O, that it could be proved,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged
In cradle-clothes our children, where they lay,
And call'd mine, Percy—his, Plantagenet!
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
But let him from my thoughts.—What think you, coz,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none; but Mordake earl of Fife.

West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
Which makes him prune himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.

K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this:
And, for this cause, awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.

Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords:
But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will, my liege.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter HENRY, Prince of Wales, and FALSTAFF.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?

P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thy head after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldst truly know.
What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day?
Unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping horses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-colour'd taffeta; I see no reason why thou shouldst be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, you come near me, now, Hal; for we, that take purses, go by the moon and seven stars, and not by Phœbus,—he, that wandering knight so fair.
Aid, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—as, God save thy grace, (majesty, I should say, for grace thou wilt have none.)—

P. Hen. What! none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. Hen. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be—Diana's forcers, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; And let men say, we be men of good government; being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we—steal.

P. Hen. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too: for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: A purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by;
and spent with crying—bring in: now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder; and, by and by, in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my bossess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

P. Hen. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou bast called her to a reckoning, many a time and oft.

P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

P. Hen. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my erecht.

Fal. Yea, and so used it, that were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent,—But, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobbed as it is, with the rusty curb of old father antic the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. No; thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave
judge.

P. Hen. Thou judgest false already; I mean, thou shalt have the hangings of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits: whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Shlood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat, or a lugged bear.

P. Hen. Or an old lion; or a lover's lute.

Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

P. Hen. What say'st thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascalist,—sweet young prince,—But, Hal, I pr'ythee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought: An old lord of the council raten me the other day in the street about you, sir; but I marked him not: and yet he talked very wisely; but I regarded him not: and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration; and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal,—God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and haffle me.

P. Hen. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying to purse-taking.

Enter POINS, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins!—Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in bell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever cried, Stand, to a true man.

P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Sack-and-Sugar?
Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last, for a cup of Mallica, and a cold capon's leg?

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs, he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill: There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves; Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night at Eastcheap; we may do it as secure as sleep: If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. Hear me, Yedward, if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chaps?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

P. Hen. Wilt, I rob? I a thief? not I, by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood royal, if thou darrest not stand for ten shillings.

P. Hen. Well then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor thou, when thou art king.

P. Hen. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pr'y thee, leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, methinks thou have the spirit of persuasion, and he the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true price may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: You shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. Farewell, thou latter spring! Farewell, All-hallow summer! [Exit Falstaff.]

Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow; I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill, shall rob those men that we have already way-laid; yourself, and I, will not be there: and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

P. Hen. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves: which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. Hen. Ay, but, 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our visors will change after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to inmask our noted outward garments.

P. Hen. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and, in the reproof of this, lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee; provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap, there I'll sup. Farewell.

Poins. Farewell, my lord. [Exit Poins.]

P. Hen. I know you all, and will a while uphold The unyok'd humour of your idleness: Yet herein will I imitate the sun;

Who doth permit the base contagious clouds To smother up his beauty from the world, That, when he please again to be himself, Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at, By breaking through the foul and ugly mists Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him. If all the year were playing holidays, To sport would be as tedious as to work;

But when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come, And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents. So, when this loose behaviour I throw off, And pay the debt I never promis'd,

By how much better than my word I am, By so much shall I falsify men's hopes; And, like bright metal on a sullen ground, My reformation, glittering o'er my fault, Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes, Than that which hath no foil to set it off. I'll so offend, to make offence a skill; Redeeming time, when men think least I will. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, NORTHUMBERLAND, WORCESTER, HOTSPUR, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate, Unapt to stir at these indignities,

And you have found me; for, accordingly, You tread upon my patience; but, be sure,

I will from henceforth rather be myself, Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition

Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down, And therefore lost that title of respect,

Which the proud soul ne'er pays, but to the proud.

Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves The scourge of greatness to be used on it;

And that same greatness too, which our own hands Have help to make so poorly.

North. My lord,—
K. Hen. Worcester, get thee gone, for I see danger

And disobedience in thine eye: O sir, Your presence is too bold and peremptory,

And majesty might never yet endure The moody frontier of a servant brow.

You have good leave to leave us; when we need Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.—

[Exit Worcester. (To North.)]
You were about to speak.

North. Yea, my good lord, Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,

Which Harry Percy here at Ilmoleton took, Were, as he says, not with such strength deny

As is deliver'd to your majesty: Either envy, therefore, or misprision

Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners. But, I remember, when the fight was done,

When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil, Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,

Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd, Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reap'd,

Shew'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home; He was perfum'd like a milliner;

And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held A pouncet-box, which ever and anon

He gave his nose, and took't away again;— Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,

Took it in snuff;—and still he smiled, and talk'd;

And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by, He call'd them—untaught knaves, unmannerly,

To bring a slovenly unhandsome course Betwixt the wind and his nobility.

With many holiday and lady terms He question'd me; among the rest demanded

My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf. I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,

To be so pester'd with a popinjay, Out of my grief and my impatience,

Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what; He should, or he should not;—for he made me mad,

To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet, And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman,

Of guns, and drums, and wounds, (God save the mark And telling me, the sovereign'st thing on earth

Was punctions, for an inward bruise; And that it was great pity, so it was,

That villainous saltpetre should be digg'd Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,

Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,

He would himself have been a soldier. This bald disjointed chat of his, my lord,

I answer'd indirectly, as I said;

And, I beseech you, let not his report Come current for an accusation,

Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord, Whatever Harry Percy then had said,

To such a person, and in such a place, At such a time, with all the rest re-told,

May reasonably die, and never rise To do him wrong, or any way impeach

What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners;
But with proviso, and exception,—
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd
The lives of those, that he did leave to fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower;
Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
Be emptied, to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for a penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war:—To prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severus's sedy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breathed, and three times did they drink.

Upon agreement, of swift Severus's flood;
Who, then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did bare and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. Hen. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie
He never did encounter with Glendower;
I tell thee,

He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.

Art not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth

Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you.—My lord Northumberland,
We license your departure with your son:—
Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.

[Ereunt King Henry, Blunt, and Train.]

Hot. And if the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them:—I will after straight,
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.

North. What, drunk with choler? stay, and pause awhile;

Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter WORCESTER.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer!
Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop 'till the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high 'till the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.

Hot. Who struck this heat up after I was gone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners;
And when I urged the ransom once again
Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale;
And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Hot. I cannot blame him: Was he not proclaim'd,
By Richard, that dead is, the next of blood?

North. He was; I heard the proclamation:
And then it was, when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!) did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition;
From whence he, interceded, did return
To be deposed, and shortly, murdered.

Hot. And for whose death, we in the world's wide mouth

Live scandalized, and foully spoken of.

Hot. But, soft, I pray you: Did King Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
Heir to the crown?

North. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king
That wish'd him on the barren mountains starv'd

But shall it be, that you,—that set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man;
And, for his sake, wear the detested blot
Of murd'rous subornation,—shall it be,
That you a world of curses undergo;
Being the agents, or base second means,
The cords, the ladder, or the hanganman rather?—
O, pardon me, that I descend so low,
To shew the line, and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king.
Shall it, for shame, be spoken in these days,
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility and power,
Did 'gage them both in an unjust behalf,—
As both of you, God pardon it! have done,—
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke?
And shall it, in more shame, be farther spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off
By him, for whom these shames ye underwent?
No; yet time serves, wherein you may redeem
Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves
Into the good thoughts of the world again:
Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud king; who studies, day and night,
To answer all the debt he owes to you,
Even with the bloody payments of your deaths.

Therefore, I say,—
Wor. Peace, cousin, say no more:

And to your quick-conceiving discontents
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril, and advent'rous spirit,
As to o'er-walk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Hot. If he fall in, good night!—or sink or swim:—
Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honour cross it from the north to south,
And let them grapple.—O! the blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.

North. Imagination of some great exploit
Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By Heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-faced moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks;
So he, that doth redeem her hence, might wear,
Without corruption, all her dignities:
But out upon this half-faced fellowship!

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here,
But not the form of what he should attend.—
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

Hot. I cry you mercy.
Wor. Those same noble Scots,

That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I'll keep them all;
By Heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not:
I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes.—
Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat—
He said, he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him, when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!

Nay,
I'll have a startling shall be taught to speak
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you,
Cousin, a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke:
And that same sword-and-buckler prince of Wales—
But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Wor. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you,

When you are better temper'd to attend.
North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool
Art thou, to break into this woman's mood;
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own?

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourged with rods,

Nettled, and stung with pismires, when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?

A plague upon't—it is in Gloucestershire:—
'Twas where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept;
His uncle York:—where I first how'd my knees

Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,
When you and he came back from Ravenspurg.

North. At Berkley Castle.

Hot. You say true:—

Why, what a cunndy deal of courtesy
This fawning greyhound then did proffer me!
Look,—when his infant fortune came to age,
And,—gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin,—
O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive me!—
Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done.

Wor. Nay, if you have not, to 't again;

We'll stay your leisure.

Hot.

I have done, I'faith.

Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners,
Deliver them up without their ransom straight,
And make the Douglas' son your only mean
For powers in Scotland; which,—for divers reasons,
Which I shall send you written,—he assured,
Will easily be granted.—You, my lord,—

(To Northumberland.)

Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,—
Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble prelate, well beloved,
The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, is 't not?

Wor. True; who bears hard
His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation,

As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
And only stays but to behold the face
Of that occasion, that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well.

North. Before the game's a-foot, thou still let'st slip.

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot:—
And thou the power of Scotland, and of York,—
To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor.

And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head:

For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
The king will always think him in our debt;

And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
Till he hath found a time to pay us home.

And see already, how he doth begin
To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does; we'll be revenged on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell!—No farther go in this,
Thou I by letters shall direct your course.

When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly,)
I'll steal to Glendower, and lord Mortimer;

Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once,
(As I will fashion it,) shall happily meet,

To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I
Hot. Uncle, adieu!—O, let the hours be short,
Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport!

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rochester. An Inn Yard.

Enter a Carrier, with a lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Heigh ho! An't be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

Ost. (Within.) Anon, anon.

1 Car. I pr'ythee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flacks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess.

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Pease and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots;
this house is turned upside down, since Robin oster died.

1 Car. Poor fellow! never joy'd, since the price of osters rose; it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fens: I am stung like a teach.

1 Car. Like a teach? by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us u'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.

1 Car. What, ostler! come away, and be hanged, come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross.

1 Car. 'Odsbody! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved.—What, ostler!—A plague on thee!
hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear?
An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hanged:—Hast no faith in thee?

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

1 Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye: I know a trick worth two of that, I'faith.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thine.

2 Car. Ay, when? canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a?—marry, I'll see thee hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah, carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Nugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge. [Exeunt Carriers.]

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. (Within.) At hand, quoth pick-purse.

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking purse, than giving direction doth from labouring;
thou lay'st the plot bow.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good-morrow, master Gadshill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight. There's a franklin in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him home: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what.
They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know, thou worship'st Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows: for, if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me; and, thou knowest, he's no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreatest not of, the which, for sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers, no long-staff, sixpenny strikers; none of these mad, mustacho purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility, and tranquillity; burgomasters, and great oneyers; such as can hold in; such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray.
And yet I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but prey on her; for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her.
We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fen-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith; I think you are more beholden to the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; Homo is a common name to all men.
Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable.
Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Road by Gadshill.

Enter PRINCE HENRY, and POINS; BARDOLPH and PETO, at some distance.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter; I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.

P. Hen. Stand close.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Poins! Poins, and be hanged! Poins!
P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal. What a bawling dost thou keep?

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?

P. Hen. He is walked up to the top of the hill; I'll go seek him. (Pretends to seek Poins.)

Fal. I am accursed to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the square farther afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty years; and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else: I have drank medicines.—Poins!—Hal!—a plague upon you both!—Bardolph!—Peto.—I'll starve ere I'll rob a foot farther. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threescore and ten miles afoot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon 't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! (Gives whistle.) Whew!—A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues, give me my horse, and be hanged.

P. Hen. Ponce, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

P. Hen. Thou liest, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I pry'thee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse; good king's son.

P. Hen. Out, you rogue! I shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Go, hang thyself in thy own hair-apprant garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison. When a jest is so forward, and afoot too, I hate it.

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Stand!

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, case ye: on with your visors; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Peto. How many be there of them?

Gads. Some eight, or ten.

Fal. Zounds! will they not rob us?

P. Hen. What a coward, Sir John Faunch?

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grand father; but yet no coward, Hal.

P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Poins. Sirran Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou need'st him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

P. Hen. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by; stand close.

[Exeunt P. Henry and Poins.]

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business.

Enter Travellers.

I Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand!

Trav. Jesu bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: Ah! whorson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth; down with them; fleece them.

I Trav. O, we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

Fal. Haug ye, gorbellied knaves! Are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would, your store were here! On, bacous, on! What, ye knaves? young men must live: You are grand-jurors, are ye? We'll jure ye, I' faith.

[Exeunt Fals. &c. driving the Travellers out.]

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true man: Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close, I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more rature in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money. (Rushing out upon them.)

Poins. Villains!

(As they are shaving, the Prince and Poins set upon them. Falstaff, after a blow or two, and the rest, run away, leaving their booty behind them.)

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse: The thieves are scatter'd, and posses'd with fear. So strongly, that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along; Were 't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roar'd! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HOTSPUR, reading a letter.

—But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.—He could be contented.—Why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shews in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake is dangerous—Why, that's certain; 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord, fool, out of this nettles, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself, unsolved; and your whole plot too light, for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant; a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of York commends the plot, and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, beside, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month? and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this? an infidel? Hal! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action! Haug him! let him tell the king. We are prepared: I will set forward to-night.

Enter LADY PERCY.

How now, Kate? I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I, this fortnight, been A hanish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't, that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth; And start so often, when thou sit'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks; And given my treasures, and my rights of thee, To thieft-eyed musing, and cursed melancholy? In thy faint slumbers, I by thee have watch'd; And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars; Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed; Cry, Courage! to the field! And thou hast talk'd Of sallies, and retreats; of trenches, tents, Of palisades, frontiers, parapets; Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin; Of prisoners' ransome, and of soldiers' elsin, And all the 'currents of a heady fight. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war, And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in the sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream: And in thy face strange motions have appear'd, Such as we see, when men restrain their breath On some great sudden haste. O, what portents art these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hol. What, no! is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hol. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hol. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hol. That roan shall be my throne.

Vol. I will back him straight: O esperance!—
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

[Exit Servant.]

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hol. What say'st, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hol. My horse,
My love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape!

A vessel hath not such a deal of spleen,

As you are toss'd with. In faith,

I'll know your business, Harry, that I will.

I fear, my brother Mortimer doth stir

About his title; and hath sent for you,

To line his enterprise: But if you go—

Hol. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you parquoit, answer me
Directly to this question that I ask.

In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry,

As if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hol. Away,

away, you trifler!—Love?—I love thee not,

I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world,

To play with mamets, and to tilt with lips:

We must have bloody noses, and crack'd crowns,

And pass them current too.—Gods me, my horse!—

What say'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have with me?

Lady. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?

Well, do not then; for, since you love me not,

I will not love myself. Do you not love me?

Nay, tell me, if you speak in jest or no.

Hol. Come, wilt thou see me ride?

And when I am of horse-back, I will swear

I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate;

I must not have you henceforth question me

Whither I go, nor reason whereabout:

Whither I must, I must; and to conclude,

This evening must I leave you, gent'e Kate.

I know you wise; but yet no farther wise,

Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are,

But yet a woman: and for secrecy,

No lady closer; for I well believe,

Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;

And so far will I trust thee, gent'e Kate!

Lady. How! so far?

Hol. Not an inch farther. But hark you, Kate:

Whither I go, thither shall you go too;

To as will I set forth, to-morrow you.—

Will this content you, Kate?

Lady. It must, of force. [Exit Hol.]

SCENE IV.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Prince HENRY and POINS.

P. Hen. Ned, prythee, come out of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where has been, Hal?

P. Hen. With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hogheads. I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers; and can call them all by their Christian names, as,—Tom, Dick, and Francis.
They take it already upon their salvation, that, though
I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy;
and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff;
but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy.—by the Lord, so they call me; and when I am king of England,
I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call—drinking deep, dying scarlet; and when you breathe in your watering, they cry—hem! and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, elap'd even now into my hand by an under-sinker;
one that never spake other English in his life, than—

Eight shillings and sixpence, and—You are welcome; with this shrill addition,—Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon, or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I prythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my pury drawer, to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I'll shew thee a precedent.

Poins. Francis!

P. Henry. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis!

[Exit Poins.]

Enter FRANCIS.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the Pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five year, and as much as to—

Poins. (Within.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenture, and to shew it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

Fran. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart—

Poins. (Within.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis?

Fran. Let me see,—About Michaelmas next I shall be—

Poins. (Within.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir.—Pray you, stay a little, my lord.
P. Hen. Nay, but hark you, Francis: for the sugar thou gavest me,—'twas a pennyworth, was't not?

Fran. O lord, sir! I would it had been two.

P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pounds ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. (Within.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon.

P. Hen. Anon, Francis? No, Francis: but tomorrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis—

Fran. My lord?

P. Hen. Wilt thou rob thy leathern-jerkin, crystal-button, nott-pated, axate-ring, puke-stocking, caldiss garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,—

Fran. O lord, sir, who do you mean?

P. Hen. Why then, your hrown bastard is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully; in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What, sir?

Poins. (Within.) Francis!

P. Hen. Away, you rogue; dost thou not hear them call? (Here they both call him; the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.)

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit Hen.]
My lord, old Sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door; shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poins!

Re-enter POINS.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff, and the rest of the thieves are at the door: Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye;
What cunning watch have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

P. Hen. I am now of all humours, that have shew'd themselves, as winks, since the old days of goodman Adain, to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.

Re-enter FRANCIS, with wine.

What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman!—His industry is—up stairs, and down stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he, that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife,—Fy upon this quiet life! I want work. O my sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou killed to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, Some fourteen, an hour after; a trife, a trife. I prythee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play some Mortimer his wife. Ritoe, says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter FALSTAFF, GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, and PETO.

Poins. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew neither-stocks, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extant? (He drinks.)

P. Hen. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun? if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too: There is nothing but roquery to be found in villainous man: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt; if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhanged in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! I had world, I say! I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing: A plague of all cowards, I say still.

P. Hen. How now, wool-sack? what mutter you? Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales!

P. Hen. Why, you whoreson round man! what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that; and Poins there?

P. Hen. 'Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack:—I am a rogue, if I drunk to-day.

P. Hen. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunk'st last.

Fal. All's one for that. A plague of all cowards, still say I. (He drinks.)

P. Hen. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there he four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this morning.

P. Hen. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. Hen. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four, through the hose; my huckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw, ecce signum. I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak: if they speak more of less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. Hen. Speak, sirs; how was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen,——

Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,——

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. Hen. What, fought ye with them all?

Fal. All? I know not what ye call, all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

Poins. Pray God, you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: for I have peppered two of them: two, I am sure, I have paid; two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward;—here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,——

P. Hen. What, four? thou said'st but two, even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Poins. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. Hen. Seven? why, there were but four, even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Poins. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. The nine in buckram, that I told thee of,——

P. Hen. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,——

Poins. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground: But I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal green, came at my back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

P. Hen. These lies are like the father that begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts; thou knotty-pated fool; thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-keech,——

Fal. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. Hen. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? come, tell us your reason; what sayest thou to this?

Poins. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion: if reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bed-popper, this horse back-breaker, this huge hill of flesh;——

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neat's-tongue, bull's-pizzle, you stock-fish,——O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck;——

P. Hen. Well, breathe a while, and then to it again: and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. We two saw you four set on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth.—Mark now, how plain a tale shall put you down.—Then did we two set on you four; and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can shew it you here in the house.—And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bullicalf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Poins. Come, let's hear, Jack: What trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: Was it for me to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest, I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, hoys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be toy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. My lord the prince,——

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess? what say'st thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door, would speak with you: he says he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he ?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight ?—Shall I give him his answer ?

P. Hen. Pr'ythee do, Jack.

Fal. 'Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.

P. Hen. Now, sirs ; by'r lady, you fought fair ;—so did you, Peto ;—so did you, Bardolph ; you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the lion prince ; no, — fy !

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. Tell me now in earnest, How came Falstaff's sword so hacked ?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger ; and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight ; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass, to make them bleed ; and then to beslobber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven years before, I boshed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore : Thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ranst away : what instinct hadst thou for it ?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors ? do you behold these exhalations ?

P. Hen. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend ?

P. Hen. Hot livers and cold purses.

Bard. Cholera, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter FALSTAFF.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast ? How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee ?

Fal. My own knee ? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist ; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring : A plague of sighing and grief ! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad : here was Sir John Bracy from your father ; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the North, Percy ; and he of Wales, that gave Amalaim the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook,—What, a plague, call you him ?

Poins. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen ; the same ;—and his son-in-law, Mortimer ; and old Northumberland ; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

P. Hen. He, that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him ; he will not run.

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running ?

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckoo ! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yea, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mortlake, and a thousand blue-caps more : Worcester is stolen away to-night ; thy father's beard is turned white with the news ; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

P. Hen. Why then, 'tis like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundreds.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true : it is like, we shall have good trading that way.—But, tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afraid ? thou being heir-apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower ? Art thou not horribly afraid ? doth not thy blood thrill at it ?

P. Hen. Not a whit, 'faith ; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father ; if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I ? content :—This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy gollen sceptre for a lenden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful hald crown !

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept ; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambyse's vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech.—Stand aside, nobility.

Host. This is excellent sport, 'faith. [Exit.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are Host. O, the father, how he holds his countenance !

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my trustful queen,

For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O rare ! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players, as I ever see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot ; peace, good tickle-brain.

—Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied : for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion : but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If, then, thou be son to me, here lies the point—Why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at ? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher, and eat blackberries ? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses ? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch : this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile ; so doth the company thou keepest : for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears ; not in pleasure, but in passion ; not in words only, but in vows also :—And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like your majesty ?

Fal. A good portly man, 'faith, and a corpulent ; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage ; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or by'r lady, inclining to threescore ; and now I remember me, his name is deceiveth me ; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If, then, the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff ; him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month ?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king ? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me ? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker, or a poultier's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand :—judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry ? whence come you ?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false :—nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, 'faith.

P. Hen. Swarest thou, ungracious boy ? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace : there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man : a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swain parcel o' drowsies, that huge bombard of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years ? wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it ? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it ? wherein cunning, but in craft ? wherein crafty, but in villainy ? wherein villainous, but in all things ? wherein worthy, but in nothing ?

Fal. I would, your grace would take me with you : Whom means your grace ?

P. Hen. That villainous shominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-headed Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

P. Hen. I know, thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, (the more the pity,) his white hairs do witness it ; but that he is (saving your reverence) a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked ! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damned : If to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord ; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company; banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will. (A knocking heard.)
[Exeunt Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.]
Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

Bard. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!

Fal. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlerstick: What's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house: Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Fal. I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope, I shall as soon be strangled with a halter, as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee behind the arras;—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and a good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exeunt all but the Prince and Poins.]

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master Sheriff; what's your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

P. Hen. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord; A gross fat man.

Car. As fat as butter.

P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here;

For I myself at this time have employ'd him.

And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee,

That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,

Send him to answer thee, or any man,

For any thing he shall be charged withal;

And so let me entreat you leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen

Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

P. Hen. It may be so; if he have robb'd these men,

He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

P. Hen. I think it is good morrow: Is it not?

Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Exeunt Sheriff and Carrier.]

P. Hen. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth.

Poins. Falstaff!—fast asleep behind the arras, and snoring like a horse.

P. Hen. Hark, how hard he fetches breath. Search his pockets. (Poins searches.) What hast thou found?

Poins. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. Hen. Let's see what they be: read them.

Poins. Item, a capon, 2s. 2d.

From Sauce, 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons, 5s. 6d.

Item, Anchovies and sack after supper, 2s. 6d.

Item, Bread, a halfpenny.

P. Hen. O monstrous, but one half-pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack.—What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage; there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning; we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good morrow, Poins.

Poins. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, MORTIMER, and GLENDOWER.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer,—and cousin Glendower.— Will you sit down?—

And, uncle Worcester—A plague upon it! I have forgot the nap.

Glen. No, here it is. Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur: For by that name as oft as Lancaster Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale; and with A rising sigh, he wisheth you in Heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativity, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cressets; and, at my birth, The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shaked like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done At the same season, if your mother's cat had But kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.

Glend. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say, the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose, as fearing you it shok.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on And not in fear of your nativity. [Sic.]

Diseas'd nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of cholick pinch'd and vex'd

By the imprisoning of unruly wind Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving, Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down Steeples, and moss-grown towers. At your birth, Our grandam earth, having this distemperature, In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men I do not hear these crossings.— Give me leave

To tell you once again,—that at my birth, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes;

The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do shew, I am not in the roll of common men.

Where is he living,—clipp'd in with the sea That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales, Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?

And bring him out, that is but woman's son, Can trace me in the tedious ways of art, And hold me pæc in deep experiments.

Hot. I think there is no man speaks better Welsh. I will to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I; or can any man? But will they come, when you do call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command The devil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil, By telling truth. Tell truth, and shame the devil.—

If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither. And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence: O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil.

Mort. Come, come, No more of this unprofitable chat. [head]

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wye, And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent him, Bootless home, and weather-beaten back.

Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too! How comes he agues, in the devil's name?

Glend. Come, here's the nap. Shall we divide our According to our three-fold order ta'en? [right.]

Mort. The archdean hath divided it Into three limits, very equally:

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, By south and east, is to my part assign'd;

All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore, And all the fertile land within that bound,

To Owen Glendower;—and, dear coz, to you The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.

And our indentures tripartite are drawn: Which being sealed interchangeably,

(A business that this night may execute,) To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I,

And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth To meet your father, and the Scottish power,

As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.

My father Glendower is not ready yet, Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days:

Within that space, (to Glend.) you may have drawn together,

Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords,

And in my conduct shall your ladies come:
From whom you now must steel, and take no leave;
For there will be a world of water shed,
Upon the parting of your wives and you.

Hot. Methinks, my moiety, north from Burton here,
In quantity equals not one of yours:
See, how this river comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cattle out.
I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly:
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

Glend. Not wind? 'tis shall, it must; you see it doth.

Mort. Yes.
But mark, how he bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side;
Gelding the oppos'd continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you.

Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here,
And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so; a little charge will do it.

Glend. I will not have it alter'd.

Hot. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hot. Who shall say me nay?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hot. Let me not understand you then,
Speak it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you;
For I was train'd up in the English court;
Where, being but young, I fram'd to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament;
A virtue that was never seen in you.

Hot. Marry, and I'm glad of it with all my heart;

I had rather be a kitten, and cry—mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-nongers:

I had rather hear a brazen cack'land turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on an axle-tree;

And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry;

'Tis like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.

Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.

Hot. I do not care: I'll give thrice so much land
To any well-deserving friend;

But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.

Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?

Glend. The moon shines fair, you may away by night:

I'll haste the writer, and, withal,
Break with your wives of your departure hence:

I am afraid, my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer.

Mort. Fy, cousin, Percy! who you cross my father!

Hot. I cannot choose: sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies;

And of a dragon and a flesh fish,
A clip-wing'd griffin, and a moulten raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,—
He held me but last night, at least nine hours,
In reckoning up the several devils' names,
That were his lackeys: I cried, humph,—and, well,— go to,—

But mark'd him not a word. O, he's as tedious
As is a tired horse, a railing wife;

Worse than a smoky house,—I had rather live
With cheese and garlic in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
In any summer-house in Christendom.

Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman;
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange conceivements; valiant as a lion,
And without affable; and as hountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect.
And curbs himself even of his natural scope,
When you do cross his humour; 'faith, he does:
I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might so have tempted him as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof;
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Wor. In faith, my lord, you are too wilful blame;
And since your coming hither have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault:
Though sometimes it show greatness, courage, blood,

(And that's the dearest grace it renders you,)
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain;
The least of which, haunting a nobleman,
Loseth men's hearts; and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Begetting them of commendation.

Hot. Well, I am school'd; good manners to your speed!

Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter GLENDOWER, with the ladies

Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers me,—
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you.

She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

Mort. Good father, tell her,— that she, and my aunt
Percy,

Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

(Glendower speaks to his daughter in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.)

Glend. She's desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry,

One no persuasion can do good upon.

(Lady M. speaks to Mort. in Welsh.)

Mort. I understand thy looks; that pretty Welsh
Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
In such a parley would I answer thee.

(Lady M. speaks.)

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,
And that 's a feeling disputation;
But I will never be a truant, love.

Till I have learn'd thy language; for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as dittles highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division to her lute.

Glend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.

(Lady M. speaks again.)

Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this.

Glend. She bids you,

Upon the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your eye-lids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Marking such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly-harness'd team
Begins his golden progress in the east.

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing;
By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.

Glend. Do so;

And those musicians, that shall play to you,
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down:

Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose.

(Glendower speaks some Welsh words, and then the music plays.)

Hot. Now I perceive, the devil understands Welsh;
And 'tis no marvel, he 's so humorous.

By 'r lady, he 's a good musician.

Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical;
for you are altogether governed by humours. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Irish.

Lady P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady P. Then he still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.

Lady P. New God help thee!

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady P. What 's that?

Hot. Peace! she sings.

(A Welsh Song, sung by Lady M.)

Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart, you swear like a comfit-maker's wife! Not you, in good sooth; and, As true as I live; and, As God shall mend me;
and, As sure as day:

And givest such sarce net surety for thy oaths,
As if thou never walk'dst farther than Finsbury.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling oath, and leave in sooth,
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,
To velvet-guards, and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I'll allow within these two hours; and so come in when you will. [Exit.]

Glend. Come, come, lord Mortimer; you are as slow, As hot lord Percy is on fire to go. By this our book's draw; I'll but seal, and then To horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE OF WALES, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I Must have some conference: But he near at hand, For we shall presently have need of you.—

[Exeunt Lords.]

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done,
That in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
But thou dost, in the passages of life,
Make me believe,—that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of Heaven,
To punish my mis-treadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would, I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse,
As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge
Myself of many I am charged withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,

As, in reproof of many tales devised,—
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,—
By smiling pick-thanks and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Hen. God pardon thee!—yet let me wonder,
Harry,

At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man
Prophetically does fore-think thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company;
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood,
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at:

That men would tell their children, This is he;
Others would say,—Where? Which is Bolingbroke?
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck audience from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, showed like a feast;
And won, by rareness, such solemnity.

The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd: carded his state;
Mingled his royalty with capering fools;
Had his great name profan'd with their scorn;
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative:
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himself to popularity:
That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey; and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo in his June,

Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and hunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty,
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:
But rather drowsed, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries;
Being with his presence glutted, gorged, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou:
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation; not an eye,
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desired to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
As thou art to this hour, was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspur;
And even as I was then is Percy now.
Now by my sceptre, and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state,
Than thou, the shadow of succession;
Far, of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm;
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on,
To bloody battles, and to bruising arms.
What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital,

Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ?
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing clothes,
This infant warrior in his enterprizes
Discomfited great Douglas; taken him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,
And shake the peace and safety of our throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,
Capitulate against us, and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my near'st and dearest enemy?
Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start or spleen,—
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dog his heels, and courtsey at his frowns,
To show how much degenerate thou art.

P. Hen. Do not think so, you shall not find it so;
And God forgive them that have so much sway'd you!
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!

I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And, in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your son;
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favours in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, when'er it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-of Harry, chance to meet:
For every honour sitting on his helm,
'Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which if he be pleased, I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, my salute.
The long-grown wounds of my interpenance;
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:—
Thou shalt have charge, and sovereign trust herein.

Enter BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.

Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,
That Douglas, and the English rebels met,

The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury:
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
If promises be kept on every hand,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. Hen. The earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day;
With him my son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old:—
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set
Forward; on Thursday, we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you
Shall march through Gloucestershire; by which account,
Our business valued, some twelve days hence
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
Our hands are full of business; let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat, while men dola. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Bear's Head Tavern.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown;
I am wrung'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking;
I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church! Company, villanous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it:—come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given, as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; dined, not above seven times a week: went to a bawdy-house, not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: Thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the use of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn: I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a memento mori:
I never see thy face, but I think on hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, By this fire: but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou ran'st up Gads-hill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern; but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap, at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire, any time this two-and-thirty years; Heaven reward me for it!

Bard. 'Shlood, I would my face were in your belly!
Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet the hen? have you inquired yet, who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, Sir John! what do you think, Sir John?
Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tittle of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked: Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who, I? I defy thee; I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.
Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John:
I know you, Sir John; you owe me money, Sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I tought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowls, filthy dowls: I have given them away to bakcers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four-and-twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.
Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face. What call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks;
I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup; and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so.

*Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS, marching.
FALSTAFF meets the Prince, playing on his truncheon, like a fife.*

Fal. How now, lad? is the wind in that door, is' faith?
must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What say'st thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house, they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said, I heard your grace say so. And, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said, he would cudgel you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn fow;
and for womanhood, maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it; I am an honest man's wife; and setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Fal. What beast? why, an otter.

P. Hen. An otter, Sir John? why an otter?

Fal. Why? she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; you or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou!

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said, he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea; if he said my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, 'tis copper. Darest thou he as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man,
I dare; but, as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion.
Dost thou think, I'll fear thee as I fear thy father?
nay, an I do, I pray God, my girlie break!

P. Hen. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is filled up with guts, and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whorson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdyhouses, and one poor pennyworth of sugar-candy to make these long-winded, if the pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong: Art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest, in the state of innocency, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villainy? thou seest, I have more flesh than another man; and therefore more frailty.—You confess then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast: love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest, I am pacified.—Still?—Nay, pry'these, he gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, I said,—How is that answered?

P. Hen. O my sweet beef, I must still be good answer'd to thee. The money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou doest, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I laud them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph—

Bard. My lord?

P. Hen. Go hear this letter to lord John of Lancaster, My brother John; this is my lord of Westmoreland.—Go, Poins, to horse, to horse; for thou, and I, Have thirty miles to ride ere dinner time.—Jack,

Meet me to-morrow 't the Temple-hall
At two o'clock 't the afternoon:
There shalt thou know thy charge; and there receive
Money, and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high;
And either they, or we, must lower lie.

[Exeunt Prince, Poins, and Bardolph.]

Fal. Rare words! brave world!—Hostess, my breakfast; come!—
O; I could wish this tavern were my drum. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, and DOUGLAS.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: If speaking truth, In this fine age, were not thought flattery, Such attribution should the Douglas have, As not a soldier of this season's stamp Should go so general current through the world. By Heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy The tongues of soothers; but a braver place In my heart's love hath no man than yourself: Nay, task me to the world; approve me, lord.

Doug. Thou art the king of honour: No man so potent breathes upon the ground, But I will heard him.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well.—

Enter a Messenger, with letters.

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father.—

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievously sick.

Hot. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick, In such a justling time? Who leads his power?

Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.

Wor. I ur'three, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth; And at the time of my departure thence, He was much fear'd by his physicians.

Wor. I would the state of time had first been whole, Ere he by sickness had been visited; His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect The very life-blood of our enterprise; 'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.—

He writes me here, that inward sickness— And that his friends by deputy could not So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet, To lay so dangerous and dear a trust On any soul removed, but on his own. Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,— That with our small conjunction, we should on, To see how fortune is disposed to us: For, as he writes, there is no quailing now; Because the king is certainly possess'd Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us. Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off: And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want Seems more than we shall find it: Were it good, To set the exact wealth of all our states All at one cast? to set so rich a main On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour? It were not good; for therein should we read The very bottom and the soul of hope; The very list, the very utmost bound Of all our fortunes.

Doug. 'Faith, and so we should; Where now remains a sweet reversion: We may boldly spend upon the hope of what is to come in:

A comfort of retirement lives in this. Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto, If that the devil and mischance look big Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Wor. But yet, I would your father had been here. The quality and hair of our attempt Brooks no division: It will be thought By some, that know not why he is away, That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence; And think, how such an apprehension May turn the tide of fierce faction, And breed a kind of question in our course: For, well you know, we of the offering side Must keep aloof from strict abatement: And stop all sight-holes, every loop, from whence The eye of reason may pry in upon us: This absence of your father's draws a curtain, That shews the ignorant a kind of fear Before not dream of.

Hot. You strain too far. I, rather, of his absence make this use.— It lends a lustre, and more great opinion, A larger dare to our great enterprise, Than if the earl were here: for men must think, If we, without his help, can make a head To push against the kingdom; with his help, We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.— Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole. Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word Spoke of in Scotland, as this term of fear.

Enter SIR RICHARD VERNON.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul. Ver. Pray God, my news be worth a welcome, lord. The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong, Is marching hitherwards; with him, Prince John.

Hot. No harm: What more?

Ver. And farther, I have learn'd,— The king himself in person is set forth, Or hitherwards intended speedily, With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son, The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales, And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside, And hid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms, All plumed like estridges that wing the wind; Bated like eagles having lately bathed; Glittering in golden coats, like images; As full of spirit as the month of May, And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer; Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls. I saw young Harry,—with his beaver on, His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,— Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury, And vaulted with such ease into his seat, As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds, To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus, And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March, This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come; They come like sacrifices in their trim, And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war, All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them: The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit, Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire.

To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh,
And yet not ours!—Come, let me take my horse,
Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,
Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one grow down a course.
O, that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news;
I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along;
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.

Hol. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?
Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hol. Forty let it be;
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us make a muster speedily:
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A public Road near Coventry.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiers shall march through:
we'll to Sutton-Colfield to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage.
Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell. [Exit.]

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the king's press dam-nably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press the none but good householders, yeomen's sons: inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the hais; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lief bear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver, worse than a stuck fowl, or a hurt wild duck. I pressed me none but such toasts and butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores; and such as, indeed, were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen: the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourably ragged than an old-faced ancient; and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think, that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draft and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had undeaded all the gibbets, and pressed the dead bodies.
No eye hath seen such scare-crows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat: Nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company; and the half-shirt is two napkins, tacked together, and thrown over the shoulders, like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-nose inkeeper of Daintry. But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and WESTMORELAND.

P. Hen. How now, blown Jack? how now, quill?
Fal. What, Hal? How now, mad wag? what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—M. good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already: The king, I can tell you, looks for us all; we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy theft bath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such plentiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better;

tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, in thinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. Faith, for their poverty,—I know not where they had that: and for their bareness,—I am sure, they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste:
Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, Sir John; I fear, we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well,

To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast,
Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON.

Hol. We'll fight with him to-night.

It may not ho.

Doug. You give him then advantage.

Ver. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Hol. So do we.

Hol. His certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advised; stir not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug. You do not counsel well;

You speak it out of fear, and cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas; by my life,

(And I dare well maintain it with my life,) I

If well-respected honour bid me on,

I hold as little counsel with weak fear,

As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:

Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle,

Which of us fears.

Doug. Yea, or to-night.

Content.

Hol. To-night, say I.

Ver. Come, come, it may not be.

I wonder much, being men of such great leading,

That you foresee not what impediments

Drag back our expedition: Certain horse

Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up:

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,

Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,

That not a horse is half the half himself.

Hol. So are the horses of the enemy

In general, journey-hated, and brought low;

The better part of ours is full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours:

For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

(The trumpet sounds a parley.)

Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king,

If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect.

Hol. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God,

You were of our determination!

Some of us love you well: and even those some

Envy your great deserving, and good name;

Because you are not of our quality,

But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend, but still I should stand so,

So long as, out of limit, and true rule,

You stand against anointed majesty:—

But to my charge. The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs; and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility, teaching his dutiful land

Audacious cruelty: If that the king

Have any way your good deserts forgot,—

Which he confesseth to be manifold,—

He bids you name your griefs; and, with all speed,

You shall have your desires, with interest;

And pardon absolute for yourself and these,

Herein mislead by your suggestion.

Hol. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.

My father, and my uncle, and myself,

Did give him that same royalty he wears:

And,—when he was not six and twenty strout,

Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,

A poor unmind'd outlaw sneaking home,—

My father gave him welcome to the shore:

And,—when he heard him swear, and vow to God,

He came but to be duke of Lancaster,

To sue his livery, and beg his peace,

With tears of innocence, and terms of zeal,—

My father, in kind heart and pity moved,

Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.
 Now, when the lords and barons of the realm
 Perceived Northumberland did lean to him,
 The more and less came in with cap and knee;
 Met him in boroughs, cities, villages;
 Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
 Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
 Gave him their heirs; as pages follow'd him,
 Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
 He presently—as greatness knows itself—
 Steps me a little higher than his vow
 Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
 Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurg;
 And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
 Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,
 That lie too heavy on the commonwealth:
 Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
 Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
 This seeming brow of justice, did he win
 The hearts of all that he did angle for.
 Proceeded farther; cut me off the heads
 Of all the favourites, that the absent king
 In reputation left behind him here,
 When he was personal in the Irish war.
Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.
Hot. Then, to the point—
 In short time after, he deposed the king;
 Soon after that, deprived him of his life;
 And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state:
 To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March
 (Who is, if every owner were well placed,
 Indeed his king,) to be engaged in Wales,
 There without ransom to lie forfeited:
 Disgraced me in my happy victories;
 Sought to entrain me by the absent king's Ratels my uncle from the council-board;
 In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
 Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong;
 And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
 This head of safety; and, withal, to pry
 Into his title, the which we find
 Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?
Hot. Not so, Sir Walter; this we'll withdraw awhile.
 Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd
 Some surety for a safe return again,
 And in the morning early shall mine uncle
 Bring him our purposes; and so farewell.
Blunt. I would, you would accept of grace and love.
Hot. And, may be, so we shall.
Blunt. Pray Heaven, you do!
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—York. A Room in the Archbishop's House.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK, and a Gentleman.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this scaled brief,
 With winged haste, to the lord marshal;
 This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest
 To whom they are directed: If you knew
 How much they do import, you would make haste.
Gent. My good lord,
 I guess their tenor.
Arch. Like enough, you do.
 To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day,
 Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
 Must 'bide the touch: For, sir, at Shrewsbury,
 As I am truly given to understand,
 The king, with mighty and quick-raised power,
 Meets with lord Harry: and I fear, Sir Michael,
 What with the sickness of Northumberland,
 (Whose power was in the first proportion,)
 And what with Owen Glendower's absence, thence,
 (Who with them was so rated sinew too,
 And comes not in, o'er-ruled by prophecies,)—
 I fear the power of Percy is too weak
 To wage an instant trial with the king.
Gent. Why, good my lord, you need not fear; there's And Mortimer. [Douglas]
Arch. No, Mortimer's not there.
Gent. But there is Mordake, Vernon, lord Harry
 Percy,
 And there's my lord of Worcester, and a head
 Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.
Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn
 The special head of all the land together,—
 The Prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,
 The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt;
 And many more co-rivals, and dear men
 Of estimation and command in arms.
Gent. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well opposed.

Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
 And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed:
 For, if lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
 Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,—
 For he hath heard of our confederacy.—
 And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him;
 Therefore, make haste: I must go write again
 To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.
 [Exeunt severally]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above you busky hill! the day looks pale
 At his distemperature.

P. Hen. The southern wind
 Doth play the trumpet to his purposes;
 And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves,
 Foretells a tempest, and a blustering day.
K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympathize;
 For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

(Trumpet.) Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

How now, my lord of Worcester? 'tis not well,
 That you and I should meet upon such terms
 As now we meet: You have deceived our trust;
 And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
 To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:
 This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
 What say you to 't? will you again unknot
 This churlish knot of all-aborred war?
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and natural light
 And be no more an exhaled meteor,
 A prodigy of fear, and a portent
 Of broached mischief to the unborn times?
Wor. Hear me, my liege:
 For mine own part, I could be well content
 To entertain the lag-end of my life
 With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
 I have not sought the day of this dislike. [then?]
K. Hen. You have not sought for it! how comes it
 That Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it?
P. Hen. Peace, chewet, peace.
Wor. It pleased your majesty to turn your looks
 Of favour, from myself, and all our house;
 And yet I must remember you, my lord,
 We were the first and dearest of your friends.
 For you, my staff of office did I break
 In Richard's time; and posted day and night
 To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
 When yet you were in place, and in account
 Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
 It was myself, my brother, and his son,
 That brought you home, and boldly did outdare
 The dangers of the time: You swore to us,—
 And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,—
 That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state;
 Nor claim no farther than your new-fall'n right,
 The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
 To this we swore our aid. But, in short space,
 It rain'd down fortune showering on your head;
 And such a flood of greatness fell on you,—
 What with our help, what with the absent king,
 What with the injuries of a wanton time,
 The seeming offences that you had borne,
 And the contrarious winds that held the king
 So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
 That all in England did repute him dead.
 And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
 You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
 To gripe the general sway into your hand;
 Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
 And being fed by us, you used us so
 As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
 Useth the sparrow: did oppress our nest;
 Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
 That even our love durst not come near your sight,
 For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
 We were enforced, for safety sake, to fly
 Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
 Whereby we stand opposed by such means
 As you yourself have forged against yourself;
 By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
 And violation of all faith and troth
 Sworn to us in your younger enterprises.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulated,
 Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches;
 To face the garment of rebellion
 With some fine colour, that may please the eye
 Of fickle changelings, and poor discontents,
 Which gape and rub the elbow, at the news
 Of hurly burly innovation:
 And never yet did insurrection want
 Such water-colours, to impart his cause;
 Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
 Of pell-mell havoc and confusion.

P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul
 Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
 If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
 The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
 In praise of Henry Percy: By my hopes,—
 'This present enterprise set off his head,—
 I do not think, a braver gentleman,
 More active, valiant, or more valiant-young,
 More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
 To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
 For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
 I have a truant been to chivalry;
 And so, I hear, he doth account me too:
 Yet this before my father's majesty,—
 I am content that he shall take the odds
 Of his great name and estimation;
 And will, to save the blood on either side,
 Try fortune with him in a single fight. [Thee.]

K. Hen. And, Prince of Wales, so dare we venture
 Albeit, considerations infinite
 Do make against it. No, good Worcester, no,
 We love our people well; even those we love,
 That are misled upon your cousin's part:
 And, will they take the offer of our grace,
 Both he, and they, and you, yes, every man
 Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his.
 So tell your cousin, and bring me word
 What he will do. But if he will not yield,
 Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
 And they shall do their office. So, be gone;
 We will not now be troubled with reply:
 We offer fair, take it advisably.

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon.]

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life:
 The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
 Are confident against the world in arms.

K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;
 For, on their answer, will we set on them:
 And God befriend us, as our cause is just!

[Exeunt King, Blunt, and Prince John.]

Fat. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and beside me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fat. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death. [Exit.]
Fat. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loath to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter: Honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg?
 No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then?
 No. What is honour? A word. What is in that word honour? What is that honour? Air. A tripe reckoning!—Who hath it? He that died 'o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it? No.
 Is it insensible then? Yes, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it:—therefore I'll none of it: Honour is a mere scutcheon, and so ends my catechism. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard,
 The liberal kind offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere best, he did.

Wor. Then are we all undone,
 It is not possible, it cannot be,
 The king should keep his word in loving us;
 He will suspect us still, and find a time
 To punish this offence in other faults:
 Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes;
 For treason is but trusted like the fox,
 Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up,
 Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
 Look how we can, or sad or merry,
 Interpretation will misquote our looks;
 And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
 The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.

My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,
 It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood;
 And an adopted name of privilege,—
 A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen:
 All his offences live upon my head,
 And on his father's,—we did train him on;
 And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
 We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
 Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
 In any case, the offer of the king.

Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so.
 Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPUR and DOUGLAS; and Officers and Soldiers, behind.

Hol. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up
 My lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Doug. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.

Hol. Lord Douglas, so you and tell him so.

Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. [Exit.]

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

Hol. Did you beg any? God forbid!

Wor. I told him gently of your grievances,
 Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,—
 By now forswearing that he is forsworn:
 He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
 With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen; to arms! for I have thrown
 A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
 And Westmoreland, that was engaged, did bear it;
 Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stepped forth before the king,

And, nephew, challenged you to single fight.

Hol. O, 'would the quarrel lay upon our heads;

And that no man might draw short breath to-day,

But I, and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,

How shew'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urged more modestly,

Unless a brother should a brother dare

To gentle exercise and proof of arms.

He gave you all the duties of a man;

Trimmi'd up your praises with a princely tongue;

Spoke your deservings like a chronicle;

Making you ever better than his praise,

By still disparaging praise, valued with you:

And, which became him like a prince indeed,

He made a blushing child of himself;

And chid his truant youth with such a grace,

As if he master'd there a double spirit,

Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.

There did he pause: But let me tell the world,—

If he outlive the envy of this day,

England did never owe so sweet a hope,

So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

Hol. Cousin, I think thou art enamour'd

Upon his follies; never did I hear

Of any prince, so wild, at liberty:—

But, be he as he will, yet once ere night

I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,

That he shall shrink under my courtesy.—

Arm, arm, with speed:—And, fellows, soldiers, friends,

Better consider what you have to do,

Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
 Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you.

Hol. I cannot read them now.—

O gentlemen, the time of life is short;

To spend that shortness basely, were too long,

If life did ride upon a dial's point,

Still ending at the arrival of an hour,

As if we live, we live to tread on kings;

If die, brave death, when princes die with us!

Now for our conscience,—the arms are fair,
 When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace.

Hol. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale.

For I profess not talking; only this,—

Let each man do his best: and here draw I

A sword, whose temper I intend to stain

With the best blood that I can meet withal:

In the adventure of this perilous day.

Now,—Exeunt—For: I and set on:—
 Sound all the lofty instruments of war,

And by that music let us all embrace :
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtsey.

[The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Plain near Shrewsbury.

Excursions, and parties fighting. Alarm to the battle.
Then enter DOUGLAS and BLUNT, meeting.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thou Thou crossest me? What honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Doug. Know, then, my name is Douglas;
And I do haunt thee in the battle thou,
Because some tell me, that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.
Doug. The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;
And thou shalt find a king, that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death. (They fight, and Blunt is slain.)

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the Hot. Where? [Exit.]

Doug. This, Douglas? no, I know this face full well:
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Sensibly furnish'd like the king himself.

Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear.
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats.
Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away;
Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exeunt.]

Other Alarums. Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here; here's no scoring, but upon the plate.—Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt;—there's honour for you. Here's no vanity!—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too. God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels.—
I have led my razzamuffins where they are peppered:
there's but three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here?

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy
Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [sword]
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are unrevenged. Prythee, lend thy sword.

Fal. O Hal, I prythee, give me leave to breathe awhile.—Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee.—
Lend me thy sword, I prythee.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou gav'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Hen. Give it me. What, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city. (The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.)

P. Hen. What, is't a time to jest and dally now?
[Throws it at him, and exit.]

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his, willingly, let him make a carbonado of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath. Give me ill: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's 'an end. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the KING, PRINCE
HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, and WESTMORELAND.

K. Hen. I prythee,
Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much!—
Lord John of Lancaster, go on with him.

P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up,
Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Hen. I will do so.

My lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.
West. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent.

P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help!
And Heaven forbid, a shallow seratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this;

Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on,
And rebels' arms triumph in massacres! [moreland,
P. John. We breathe too long.—Come, cousin West-

Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come.

[Exeunt Prince John and Westmoreland.]
P. Hen. By Heaven, thou hast deceived me, Lan-
I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: [caster,
Before, I loved thee as a brother, John;

But now, I do respect thee as my soul;

K. Hen. I saw him hold lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance than I did look for
Of such an ungrown warrior.

P. Hen. O, this boy
Lends mettle to us all. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Another king? they grow like hydra's beads
I am the Douglas, fatal to all those

That wear those colours on them.—What art thou,
That counterfeits't the person of a king?

K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves
So many of his shadows thou hast met, [at heat,
And not the very king. I have two boys,
Seek Percy and thyself, about the field;

But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee; so defend thyself.

Doug. I fear, thou art another counterfeiter;
And yet, in faith, thou hear'st thee like a king;
But mine, I am sure, thou art, whoe'er thou be,
And thus I win thee.

(They fight. The King being in danger, enter Prince Henry.)

P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up again! The spirits
Of Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee;
Who never promiseth, but he means to pay.—

(They fight. Douglas flies.)

Cheerly, my lord. How fares your grace?—
Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton. I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Hen. Stay, and breathe a while!—
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;
And shew'd'st, thou make'st some tender of my life,
In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. Hen. O Heaven! they did me too much injury,
That ever said, I hearken'd for your death.

If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you;
Which would have been as speedy in your end,
As all the poisonous potions in the world,
And saved the treacherous labour of your son.

K. Hen. Make up to Clifton; I'll to Sir Nicholas
Gawsey. [Exit King Henry.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.
P. Hen. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.
P. Hen.

A very valiant rebel of the name. Why, then, I see
I am the Prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:

Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign;
Of Harry Percy, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come
To end the one of us. And 'would to God,
Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

P. Hen. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee;
And all the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. (They fight.)

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Enter DOUGLAS; he fights with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth:
I better brook the loss of brittle life,
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; [Heb.—
They wound my thoughts, worse than thy sword my

But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy,
But that the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue!—No, Percy, thou art dust,
And food for— (Dies.)

P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy: Fare thee well, Great heart!—

I'll weave ambition, how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now, two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough. This earth, that bears thee dead,
Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.
If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so dear a shew of zeal:—
But let my favours hide thy mangled face!
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven!
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitaph!

(He sees Falstaff on the ground.)
What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spared a better man.
O, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity.
Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day,
'Trough many dearer, in this bloody fray.
Embowell'd will I see thee by and by:
'Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit.]

Fal. (Rising slowly.) Embowell'd! If thou embowell me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me, and eat me to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot mercurial Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit! I lie, I am no counterfeit: To die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is—discretion; in the which better part, I have saved my life. 'Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead: How, if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid, he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah, (stabbing him) with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me. (Takes Holspur on his back.)

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY and PRINCE JOHN.

P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou
The maiden sword. [He sh'd]

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here?
Did you not tell me, this fat man was dead!

P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless, and Upon the ground.— [bleeding,]
Art thou alive? or is it phantasy
That plays upon our eye-sight? I pry'thee, speak;
We will not trust our eyes, without our ears:—
Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man; but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy: (throwing the body down) if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord! Lord! how this world is given to lying! I grant you, I was down and out of breath; and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so, if not, let them, that should reward valour, bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother
John.—

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

(A retreat is sounded.)

The trumpet sounds retreat, the day is ours.
Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt Prince Henry and Prince John.]

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, Heaven reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

[Exit, bearing off the body.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field.

*The trumpets sound. Enter KING HENRY,
PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, WEST-MORELAND, and others, with WORCESTER, and VERNON prisoners.*

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.—
Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace,
Parlon, and terms of love to all of you?

And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust?
Three knights upon our party slain to-day,
A noble earl, and many a creature else,
Had been alive this hour,
If, like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betwix our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urged me to;
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon
Other offenders we will pause upon.— [too;]

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon guarded.]

How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men?
Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest;
And, falling from a hill, he was so bruised;
That the pursuers took him. At my tent
The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.
P. Hen. Then brother John of Lancaster, to you
This honourable booty shall belong:
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:
His valour, shewn upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosom of our adversaries. [power.—]

K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our
You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,
Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed,
To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop,
Who, as we hear, are hasty in arms:
Myself,—and you, son Harry,—will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the earl of March.
Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day;
And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt]

SCENE,—England.

INDUCTION.

Warkworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter RUMOUR, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
 The vent of hearing, when loud Rumour speaks?
 I, from the orient to the drooping west,
 Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
 The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
 Upon my tongues continual slanders ride;
 The which in every language I pronounce,
 Stuffing the ears of men with false reports,
 I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
 Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
 And who but Rumour, who but only I,
 Make fearful musters, and prepared defence;
 Whilst the big year, swollen with some other grief,
 Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
 And no such matter. Rumour is a pipe
 Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
 And of so easy and so plain a stop,
 That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
 The still-discordant wavering multitude,
 Can play upon it. But what need I thus
 My well-known body to anatomize
 Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
 I run before King Harry's victory;
 Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury,
 Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops,
 Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
 Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I
 To speak so true at first? my office is
 To noise abroad,—that Harry Monmouth fell
 Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
 And that the king before the Douglas's rage
 Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
 This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns
 Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
 And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
 Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
 Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
 And not a man of them brings other news
 Than they have learn'd of me: From Rumour's tongues
 They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs. Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The same.

The Porter before the Gate. Enter Lord BARDOLPH.

Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?—Where is the Port. What shall I say you are? [earl?]
 Bard. Tell thou the earl,
 That the lord Bardolph doth attend him here.
 Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard;
 Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
 And he himself will answer.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Bard. Here comes the earl.
 North. What news, lord Bardolph? every minute
 now
 Should be the father of some stratagem:
 The times are wild; contention, like a horse
 Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
 And hears down all before him.
 Bard. Noble earl,
 I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.
 North. Good, an Heaven will!
 Bard. As good as heart can wish:—
 The king is almost wounded to the death;
 And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
 Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young Prince John,
 And Westmoreland, and Stafford, fled the field.
 And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John,
 Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day,
 So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
 Came not, till now, to dignify the times,
 Since Caesar's fortunes!
 North. How is this derived?
 Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?
 Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence,
 A gentleman well bred, and of good name.
 That freely render'd me these news for true.
 North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I
 On Tuesday last to listen after news. [sent Bard. My lord, I overrode him on the way;
 And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
 More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter TRAVERS.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Tra. My lord, Sir John Umfraville turn'd me back With joyful tidings; and, being better horsed, Outrode me. After him, came, spurring hard, A gentleman almost forespent with speed, That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied horse: He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury? He told me, that rebellion had bad luck, And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold: With that, he gave his able horse the head, And, bending forward, struck his armed heels Against the panting sides of his poor jade Up to the rowel-head; and, starting so, He seem'd in running to devour the way, Staying no longer question.

North. Ha!—Again. Said he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold? Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion Had met ill luck!

Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what,— If my young lord your son have not the day, Upon mine honour, for a silken point I'll give my harony: never talk of it.

North. Why should the gentleman, that rode by Give then such instances of loss? [Travers, Bard. Who, he? He was some hiding fellow, that had stol'n The horse he rode on; and, upon my life, Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter MORTON.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf, Foretells the nature of a tragic volume: So looks the storm, when on the imperious flood Hath left a witness'd usurpation.— Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord; Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask, To fright our party.

North. How doth my son, and brother? Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless, So dull, so dead in look, so wo-begone, Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night, And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd; But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue, And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it. This thou wouldst say,— Your son did this, and thus; Your brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas; Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds: But in the end, to stop mine eardrums, Thou hadst a sigh to blow away this brag, Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet: But, for my lord your son,—

North. Why, he is dead. See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath! He, that but fears the thing he would not know, Hath, by instinct, knowledge from others' eyes, That what he fear'd is chanced. Yet speak, Morton; Tell thou thy earl, his divination lies; And I will take it as a sweet disgrace, And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great to be by me gainsaid: Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not, that Percy's dead. I see a strange confession in thine eye:

Thou shalt not thy head; and hold'st it fear, or sin, To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so; The tongue offends not that reports his death, And he doth sin that doth belie the dead, Not he which says the dead is not alive. Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office; and his tongue Sounds ever after as a sullen bell, Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry, I would force you to believe That which I would to heaven I had not seen: But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state, Rendering faint quittance, wearied and out-breathed, To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat down The never-daunted Percy to the earth, From whence with life he never more sprung up. In few, his death, (whose spirit lent a fire Even to the dull peasant in his camp.) Being bruited once, took fire and heat away From the best temper'd courage in his troops:

For from his mettle was his party steel'd; Which once in him abated, all the rest Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. And as the thing, that's heavy in itself,

Upon enforcement, flies with greatest speed; So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss, Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear, That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim, Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety, Fly from the field: Then was that noble Worcester Too soon ta'en prisoner: and that furious Scent, The bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring sword Had three times slain the appearance of the king, 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame Of those that turn'd their backs; and, in his flight, Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all Is,—that the king hath won; and hath sent out A speedy power, to encounter you, my lord, Under the conduct of young Lancaster, And Westmoreland: this is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn. In poison there is physic; and these news, Having been well, that would have made me sick; Being sick, have in some measure made me well: And as the wretch, whose fever-weak'n'd joints, Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life, Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs, Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief, Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch; A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel, Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quof, Thou art a guard too wanton for the head, Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit. Now bind my brows with iron; and approach The ragged'st hour that time and spite can bring, To frown upon the enraged Northumbrian! Let heav'n kiss earth! Now let not nature's hand Keep the wild flood confined! let order die! And let this world no longer be a stage, To feed contention in a lingering act; But let one spirit of the first-horn Cain Reign in all hosons, that, each heart being set On bloody courses, the rude scene may end, And darkness be the burier of the dead!

Tra. This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord. Bard. Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honest.

Mor. The lives of all your loving complices Lean on your health; and the which, if you give o'er To stormy passion, must perforce decay. You east the event of war, my noble lord, And sum'd up the account of chance, before you said,— Let us make head. It was your presumption, That, in the dole of blows your son might drop: You knew, he walk'd o'er perils, on an edge, More likely to fall in, than to get o'er: You were advised, his flesh was capable Of wounds and scars; and that his forward spirit Would lift him, where most trade of danger ranged; Yet did you say,—Go forth; and none of this, Though strongly apprehended, could restrain The stiff-horned action. What hath then befallen, Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth, More than that being, which was like to be?

Bard. We all, that are engag'd to this loss, Knew, that we ventured on such dangerous seas, That, if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one: And yet we ventured, for the gain proposed Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd; And, since we are o'er'set, venture again.

Come, we will all put forth; body and goods. Mor. 'Tis more than time: And, my most noble lord, I hear, or certain, and do speak the truth,— The gentle archbishop of York is in, With well-appointed powers; he is a man, Who with a double surety binds his followers. My lord your son had only but the corps, But shadows, and the shows of men, to fight: For that same word, rebellion, did divide The action of their bodies from their souls; And they did fight with queasiness, constrain'd. As men drink potions; that their weapons only seem'd on our side, but for their spirits and souls, This word rebellion, it had froze them up, As fish are in a pond: But now the bishop Turns insurrection to religion: Supposed sincere and holy in his thoughts, He's follow'd both with body and with mind; And doth enlarge his rising with the blood Of fair King Richard, serped from Pontrefret stones: Derives from Heaven his quarrel, and his cause;

Tells them, he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more, and less, do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,
This present grief had wiped it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety and revenge;
Get posts, and letters, and make friends with speed;
Never so few, and never yet more need. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—London. A Street.

Enter SIR JOHN FALSTAFF, with his Page, bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me. The brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to vent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent, or is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow, that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now; but I will set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the jувenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a heard grow on the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal. God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amiss yet; he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.—What said master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak, and slops?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the glutton! may his tongue be hotter!—A whoreson Achiophel! a rascally vea-forsooth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security!—The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security, for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.—Where's Bardolph?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield, to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were married, horsed, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, and an Attendant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Atten. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Atten. He, my lord; but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Ch. Just. What, to York? Call him back again.

Atten. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Atten. Sir John,——

Fal. What! a young knave, and beg! Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiery aside, I had lied in my throat, if I had said so.

Atten. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiery aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that, which grows to me! If thou get'st any leave of me, haug me; if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged: You hunt-counter, hence! avaunt!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship, to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear, his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—You would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, Heaven mend him! I pray, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief; from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in Galen; it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think, you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels, would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your precriptions, the wife may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He, that buckles him in my belt, cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to gall a new-healed wound; your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gads-hill: you may thank the quiet time for your quiet o'erposting that action.

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassel candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would prove the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravity, gray, gray.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light; but, I hope, he, that looks upon me, will take me without weighing; and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go, I cannot tell: virtue is of so little regard in these easter-monger times, that true valour is turned bear-herd: Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings; all the other gifts, appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You, that are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young; you measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls; and we, that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you set call yourself young? Fy, fy, fy, Sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hollaring, and singing of anthems. To approve my youth farther, I will not;—the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he, that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box of the ear that the prince gave you,—he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it; and the young lion repents: marry, not in ashes, and sack-cloth; but in new silk, and old sack.

Ch. Just. Well, Heaven send the prince a better companion!

Fal. Heaven send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry: I hear, you are going with lord John of Lancaster, against the archbishop, and the earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day! for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily; if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head, but I am thrust upon it: Well, I cannot last ever; But it was always wet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say, I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God, my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is. I were better to be eaten to death with rust, than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound, to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare you well: Commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief Justice and Attendant.]

Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.—A man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the degrees prevent my curses.—Boy!—

Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and twopence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.—Go bear this letter to my lord of Lancaster; and to the prince; and to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin: About it; you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or a pox of this pox! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter, if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable: A good wit will make use of any thing; I will turn diseases to commodities. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—York. A Room in the Archbishop's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK, the Lords HASTINGS, MOWBRAY, and BARDOLPH.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause, and know our means;

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:—An—Erst, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mowb. I will leave the occasion of our arms;

But gladly would he better satisfied,
How, in our means, we should advance ourselves

To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice;
And our supplies live largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose hosom burns
With an incurable fire of injuries.

Bard. The question then, lord Hastings, standeth thus;

Whether our present five and twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland.

Hast. With him, we may.

Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point;
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far
Till we had his assistance by the hand:
For, in a theme so bloody-faced as this,
Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids uncertain, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true, lord Bardolph: for, indeed,
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

Bard. It was, my lord; who lined himself with hope,
Eating the air on promise of supply,
Flattering himself with project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt,
To lay down likelihoods, and forms of hope.

Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war;—
Indeed the instant action, (a cause on foot,)
Lives so in hope, as in an early spring

We see the appearing huds; which, to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair,
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,

We first survey the plot, then draw the model;
And when we see the figure of the house,

Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outweighs ability,

What do we then, but draw anew the model
In fewer offices: or, at least, desist

To build at all? Much more, in this great work, (Which is, almost, to pluck a kingdom down,
And set another up,) should we survey

The plot of situation, and the model;
Consent upon a sure foundation;

Question surveyors; know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,

To weigh against his opposite; or else,
We fortify in paper, and in figures,

Using the names of men, instead of men:
Like one, that draws the model of a house

Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost

A naked subject to the weeping clouds,
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes (yet like of fair birth)
Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd

The utmost man of expectation;
I think, we are a body strong enough,

Even as we are, to equal with the king.

Bard. What! is the king but five and twenty thousand? [doth.]

Hast. To us, no more; nay, not so much, lord Bar-
For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads: one power against the French,
And one against Glendower; perforce, a third

Must take up us: So is the unfirm king
In three divided; and his coffers sound

With hollow poverty and emptiness.

Arch. That he should draw his several strengths together,
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh

Baying him at his heels; never fear that.

Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hither?

Hast. The duke of Lancaster, and Westmoreland;
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth:
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on;
And publish the occasion of our arms:

The commonwealth is sick of their own choice,
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited;—

An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he, that buildeth on the vulgar heart.

O thou fond man! with what loud applause
Didst thou heat Heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou wouldst have him be?

And being now trimmed in thine own desires,

Thou, heastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provokest thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou discharge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead romit up,
And howl't to find it. What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard lived, would have him die,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that threst' dust upon his goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing on
After the admir'd heels of Bolingbroke,
Criest now, O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this! O thoughts of men account!
Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.
Movsb. Shall we draw our numbers, and set on?
Host. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Hostess; FA NG, and his Foy, with her; and SNAKE following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?
Fang. It is entered.
Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman?
will a' stand to it?
Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?
Host. O lord, ay: good master Snare.
Snare. Here, here.
Fang. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.
Host. Yea, good master Snare; I have entered him and all.
Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.
Host. Alas the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most hostily: in good faith, a' cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foil like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.
Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his trist.
Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.
Fang. An I but fist him once; an a' come but within my vice;—
Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an infulitive thing upon my score:—Good master Fang, hold him sure;—good master Snare, let him not scape. He comes continually to Pie-corner, (saving your manhoods,) to buy a saddle; and he's invited to dinner to the lubbar's head in Lumbert-street, to master Smooth's, the silkman: I pray ye, since my exion is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long loan for a poor lone woman to hand; and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been fubbed off, and fubbed off, and fubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.—

Enter SIR JOHN FALSTAFF, Page, and BARDOLPH.

Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsey-nose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, master Fang, and master Snare; do me, do me, do me your offices.

Fal. How now? whose mare's dead? what's the matter?
Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.

Fal. Alway, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph; cut me off the villain's head; throw the bead in the channel.

Host. Throw me in the channel? I'll throw thee in the channel. Will thou? wilt thou? thou bastardy rogue!—Murder, murder! O thou honey-suckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers, and the king's?
O thou honey-seed rogue! thou art a boncy-seed; a man-queller, and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.
Fang. A rescue! a rescue!
Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—Thou wot'st, wot'st thou? thou wot'st, wot'st thou? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fustian-arian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What's the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

Ch. Just. How now, Sir John? what, are you brawling here?

Doth this become your place, your time, and buslines?
You should have been well on your way to York.—
Stand from him, fellow! Wherefore hang'st thou on him?

Host. O, my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have: he hath eaten me out of house and home;
he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his:—
but I will have some of it out again, or I'll ride thee
o' nights, like the mare.

Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fy! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation?
Are you not ashamed, to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and thy money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun-week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor; thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keach, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us, she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some; whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarly with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath; deny it, if thou canst.

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you:
she hath been in good case, and, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words, that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration;
you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the excessive yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and person.

Host. Yea, in troth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee peace:—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villain you have done with her;
the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply. You call honourable boldness, impudent sauciness:
if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous: No, my lord, my humble duty remembered,
I will not be your sutor; I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong; but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. (Taking her aside.)

Enter GOWER.

Ch. Just. Now, master Gower: What news?
Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry, Prince of Wales, are near at hand: the rest the paper tells.

Fal. As I am a gentleman;—

Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman;—Come, no more words
of it.

Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking; and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst.
Come, an it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action: Come, thou must not be in this humour with me; dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Host. Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty lobles; I' faith I am loath to pawn my plate, in good earnest, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope, you'll come to supper: You'll pay me altogether?

Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; (to Bardolph) hook on, hook on.

Host. Will you have Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words: let's have her.

[Exeunt Hostess, Bardolph, Officers, and Page.]

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?

Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: What's the news, my lord?

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?

Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, are march'd up to my lord of Launcester, Against Northumberland, and the archbishop.

Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?

Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: Come, go along with me, good master Gower.

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good Sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.

Ch. Just. Now the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Street.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

P. Hen. Faith, it does me; though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew wily in me, to desire small beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed; these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz. these, and those that were the peach-colour'd ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that, the tennis-court keeper knows better than I; for it is a low cob of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy holland; and God knows, whether those, that bawl out the ruins of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom; but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly? Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes; and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Hen. Why, I tell thee, —It is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend,) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly, upon such a subject.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou, and Falstaff, for obliquity and persistency: Let me end thy man. But I tell thee, —my heart bleeds inwardly, that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

P. Hen. What wouldst thou think of me if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

P. Hen. It would be every man's thought: and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks; never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine; every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what acites your most worshipful thought, to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engrafted to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken of, I can hear it with my own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my bands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had bin from me christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Enter BARDOLPH and Page.

Bard. 'Save your grace!

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph!

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass, (to the Page) you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become? Is it such a matter, to get a pottlepot's maidenhead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window; at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new-petticoat, and peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy profsted?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away!

P. Hen. Instruct us, boy: What dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althea dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation.—There it is, boy. (Gives him money.)

Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect.—And how doth the mattemas, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him; though that be sick, it dies not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place; for, look you, how he writes.

Poins. (Reads.) John Falstaff, knight.—Every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger, but they say, There is some of the king's blood spilt: How comes that I say he, that takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is as ready as a borrower's cap; I am the king's poor cousin, sir.

P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But the letter!—

Poins. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting.—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Pence!

Poins. I will imitate the honourable Roman in brevity:—I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misses thy favours so much, that he swears, thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell.

Thine, by yea and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou useth him.)

Jack Falstaff, with my familiars;

John, with my brothers and sisters and Sir John, with all Europe.

My lord, I will steep his letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words.

But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. May the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time; and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us.—Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord; in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord; of the old church.

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Hen. Even such kin, as the parish heifers are to the town bull.—Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord: I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph,—no word to your master, that I am yet come to town: There's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir,—I will govern it.

P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Exeunt Bardolph and Page.]—This Doll Tear-sheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as commous as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

P. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leather jerkins, and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine: for, in every thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. [Exeunt Poins, Ned.]

SCENE III.—Warkworth. Before the Castle.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, LADY NORTH-UMBERLAND, and LADY PERCY.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter, Give even way unto my rough affairs:

Put not ye on the visage of the times,
And he, like them, to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more: Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn; And but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O. yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars! The time was, father, that you broke your word,

When you were more endear'd to it than now; When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry,

Threw many a northward look, to see his father Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.

Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honours lost; yours, and your son's.

For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun

In the grey vault of heaven; and by his light, Did all the chivalry of England move

To do brave acts; he was, indeed, the glass Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.

He had no legs, that pretis'd not his gait; And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant; For those, that could speak low, and tardily,

Would turn their own perfection to abuse, To seem like him: So that, in speech, in gait,

In diet, in affections of delight, In military rules, humours of blood,

He was the mark and glass, copy and book, That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous him!

O miracle of men!—him did you leave, (Second to none, uncondemned by you.)

To look upon the hideous god of war In disadvantage, to abide a field,

Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name Did seem defensible:—so you left him:

Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong, To hold your honour more precise and nice

With others, than with him; let them alone; The marshal and the archbishop are strong.

Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers, To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,

Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart,
Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me,

With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go, and meet with danger there;
Or it will seek me in another place,
And find me worse provided.

Lady N.

O fly to Scotland,
Till that the nobles, and the armed commous,
Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king,

Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,

First let them try themselves: So did your son;
He was so suffer'd; so came I a widow,

And never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes.

That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recoordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me: 'tis with my mind,

As with the tide, swell'd up unto its height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.

Poins would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back:—

I will resolve for Scotland; there am I.
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern, in Eastcheap.

Enter Two Drawers.

1 Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there?
apple-Johns? thou know'st, Sir John cannot endure an apple-John.

2 Draw. Mass, thou sayest true: The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, there were five more Sir Johns: and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights. It angered him to the heart;
but he hath forgot that.

1 Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down: And see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise; mistress Tear-sheet would fain hear some music. Despatch:—The room where they supped, is too hot; they'll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince, and master
Poins anon: and they will put on two of our jerkins, and aprons: and Sir John must not know of it: Bar-dolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis; it will be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sneak. [Exit.]

Enter Hostess and DOLL TEAR-SHEET.

Host. I' faith, sweet-heart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality: your pulse beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour,
I warrant you, is as red as any rose: But, i' faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say,—What's this? How do you now?

Doll. Better than I was. Hem.

Host. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold. Look, here comes Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF, singing.

Fal. When Arthur first in court.—Empty the jordan, —And was a worthy king; [Exit Drawer.] How now, mistress Doll?

Host. Sick of a calm; yes, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sect; an they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Doll. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, mistress Doll.

Doll. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases. Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Doll. Ay, marry; our claims and our jewels.

Fal. Your brooches, pearls, and oaches—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: To come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely:

Doll. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you two never meet, but you fall to some discord; you are both, in good troth, as rheumatic as two dry teasts; you cannot one bear with another's confumities. What the good year: one must bear, and that must be you: (to

Doll You are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Doll. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.—Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, ancient Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Doll. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul mouth'd st rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours; I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best.—Shut the door;—there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while, to have swaggering now!—shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?—
Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, Sir John; there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.
Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, never tell me; your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tisick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—

Neighbour Quickly, says he,—master Dumb, our minister, was by then,—Neighbour Quickly, says he, receive those that are civil; for, saith he, you are in an ill name;—now he said so, I can tell whereupon, for, says he, you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: Receive, says he, no swaggering companions.—There come none here;—you would bless you to bear what he said;—no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, he; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance. Call him up, drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bor no honest man my house, nor no cheater: But I do not love swaggering: by my troth, I am the worse, when one says—swagger: feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Doll. So do you, hostess.

Host. Do it? yea, in very truth, do I, an' twere an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Pist. Save you, Sir John!

Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets; I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Doll. Charge me? I scorn you, scurvy companion. What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you mouldy rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.
Doll. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, as you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stale juggler, you!—Since when, I pray you, sir?—What, with two points on your shoulder? much!

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.
Fal. No more, Pistol: I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Doll. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called—captain? If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed prunes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occupy; which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted; therefore captains had need look to it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: tell thee what, corporal Bardolph;—I could tear her— I'll be revenged on her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.

Pist. I'll see her damned first;—to Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down! down, dogs! down factors! Have we not Hiren here?

Host. Good captain Peesel, be quiet; it is very late, I'faith: I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! I shall pack-horses,

And hollow pamper'd jades of Asia,
Which cannot go but thirty miles a day,
Compare with Cævans, and with Cannibals,
And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus; and let the welkin roar,
Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men, like dogs; give crowns like pins; Have we not Hiren here?

Host. O' my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good year! do you think, I would deny her? For God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then, feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis: Come, give's me some sack.

Si fortuna me tormenta, sperato me contenta.—
Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire:
Give me some sack!—and, sweetheart, lie thou there.

(Laying down his sword.)
Come we to full points here; and are et cetera nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neck: What! we have seen the seven stars.

Doll. Thrust him down stairs; I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! I know we not Gallo-way nags?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-kroat shilling: nay, if he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbrue?—
(Snatching up his sword.)
Then death rock me asleep, abridge my dolorful days!
Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds
Untwine the sisters three! Come, Atropos, I say!

Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.
Fal. Get you down stairs.

(Drawing, and driving Pistol out.)
Host. Here's a woody tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these tiritis and frights. So? murder, I warrant now. Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons.

(Re-ent' Pistol and Bardolph.)
Doll. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal is gone.

Ah, you whorson little valiant villain, you.

Host. Are you not hurt? the groin? methought, he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir. The rascal's drunk; you have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Doll. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, now thou sweat'st! Come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whorson chous!—Ah, rogue! I'faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthies. Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Doll. Do, if thou darest for thy heart; if thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Music.

Page. The music is come, sir.

Fal. Let them play,—Play, sirs,—Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascal dragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Doll. I'faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whorson little tidy Bartholomew bear pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o' days, and foining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter behind, PRINCE HENRY and POINS, disguised like Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll ! do not speak like a death's head : do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of ?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow ; he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. They say, Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He's a good wit ! hang him, hahoon ! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard ; there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so then ?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness : and he plays at quoits well ; and eats conger and fennel ; and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons ; and rides the wild mare with the boys ; and jumps upon joint stools ; and swears with a good grace ; and wears his nose very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg ; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories, and such other gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admires him ; for the prince himself is such another ; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoidpois.

P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off ?

Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, if the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance ?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction ! what says the almanack to that ?

Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not lipping to his master's old tables ; his notebook, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Doll. Nay, truly ; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young hoy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt have a kirtle of ? I shall receive money on Thursday ; thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. A merry sook, come : it grows late, we'll to bed. Thou'lt forget me, when I am gone.

Doll. By my troth, thou'lt set me a weeping, an thou sayest so : prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return.—Well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

P. Hen. Poins. Anon, anon, sir. (Advancing.)

Fal. Ha ! a bastard son of the king's ?—Aud art not thou Poins his brother ?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead ?

Fal. A better than thou ; I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer.

P. Hen. Very true, sir ; and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the lord preserve thy good grace ! by my troth, welcome to London.—Now the Lord bless that sweet face of thine ! O Jesu, are you come from Wales ?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty,—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.

(Leaving his hand upon Doll.)

Doll. How ! you fat fool, I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how wisely did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous, civil gentleman ?

Host. 'Blessing of your good heart ! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me ?

P. Hen. Yes ; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gads-hill : you knew, I was at your back ; and spoke it on purpose, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no ; not so ; I did not think thou wast within hearing.

P. Hen. I shall drive you then to confess the wilful abuse ; and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour, no abuse.

P. Hen. Not ! to dispraise me ; and call me—pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what.

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poins. No abuse !

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world ; honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him,—in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it.—No abuse, Hal ;—none, Ned, none ;—no, boys, none.

P. Hen. See, now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us ? Is she of the wicked ? Is this hostess here of the wicked ? Or is the boy of the wicked ? Or honest Bardolph, whose zeal hurls in his nose, of the wicked ?

Poins. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph irrecoverable ; and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy,—there is a good angel about him ; but the devil outbids him too.

P. Hen. For the women,—

Fal. For one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul ! For the other,—I owe her money ; and whether she be damned for that, I knew not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think thou art not ; I think thou art quit for that : Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law ; for the which, I think, thou wilt bow.

Host. All victuallers do so : What's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent ?

P. Hen. You, gentlewoman,—

Doll. What says your grace ?

Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against.

Host. Who knocks so loud at the door ? look to the door there, Francis.

Enter PETO.

P. Hen. Peto, how now ? what news ?

Peto. The king, your father is at Westminster ; And there are twenty weak and wearied hosts Come from the north ; and, as I came along, I met, and overtook, a dozen captains, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns, And asking every one for Sir John Falstaff.

P. Hen. By Heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame, So idly to profane the precious time ; When tempest of commotion, like the south Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt, And drop upon our bare unarmed heads.

Give me my sword and cloak.—Falstaff, good night.

[Exeunt Prince Henry, Poins, Peto,

and Bardolph.]

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unknicked. (Knocking heard.) More knocking at the door ?

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

How now ? what's the matter ?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently ; a dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah. (To the Page.)—Farewell, hostess ;—farewell, Doll.—You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after : the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches ; if I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speak ;—if my heart be not ready to burst,—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell.

[Exeunt Falstaff and Bardolph.]

Host. Well, fare thee well : I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peaced time ; but an honest and truer-hearted man,—Well, fare thee well.

Bard. (Within.) Mistress Tear-sheet,—

Host. What's the matter ?

Bard. (Within.) Bid Mistress Tear-sheet come to my master.

Host. O run, Doll, run ; run, good Doll. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY in his night-gown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the earls of Surrey and of Warwick ;

But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, And well consider of them : Make good speed.—[Exit Page.]

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep !—Sleep, gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,

And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
 Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
 Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
 And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
 Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
 Under the canopies of costly state,
 And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
 O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile
 In loathsome beds; and leavest the kingly couch,
 A watch-case, or a common 'larum bell?
 Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
 Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
 In cradle of the rude imperious surge;
 And in the visitation of the winds,
 Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
 Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
 With deaf'ning clamours in the slippery clouds,
 That, with the hurly, death itself awakes?
 Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
 To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude;
 And, in the calmest and most stillest night,
 With all appliances and means to boot,
 Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down!
 Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter WARWICK and SURREY.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty!
 K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords?
 War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.
 K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my lords.
 Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?
 War. We have, my liege.
 K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our kingdom
 How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
 And with what danger near the heart of it.
 War. It is but as a body, yet, distemper'd;
 Which to his former strength may be restored,
 With good advice, and little medicine.—
 My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.
 K. Hen. O Heaven! that one might read the book of fate;

And see the revolution of the times
 Make mountains level, and the continent
 (Weary of solid firmness) melt itself
 Into the sea; and other times to see
 The benches girdle of the ocean
 Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances mock,
 And changes fill the cup of alteration
 With divers liquors! O, if this were seen,
 The happiest youth,—viewing his progress through,
 What perils past, what crosses to ensue,—
 Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.
 'Tis not ten years gone,
 Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends,
 Did feast together, and, in two years after,
 Were they at wars: It is but eight years, since
 'His Percy was the man nearest my soul;
 Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs,
 And laid his love and life under my foot;
 Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard,
 Gave him defiance. But which of you was by,
 (You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember,)

(To Warwick,)

When Richard,—with his eye brimfull of tears,
 Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,—
 Did speak these words, now proved a prophecy?
*Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which
 My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne;*—
 Though then, Heaven knows, I had no such intent;
 But that necessity so bow'd the state,
 That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:—
*The time shall come, thus did he follow it,
 The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head,
 Shall break into corruption;*—so went on,
 Foretelling this same time's condition,
 And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times deceased:
 The which observed, a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life; which in their seeds,
 And weak beginnings lie intrinsicured.
 Such things become the hatch and brood of time;
 And, by the necessary form of this,
 King Richard might create a perfect guess,
 That great Northumberland, then false to him,
 Would, of that seed, grow to a greater falseness;
 Which should not find a ground to root upon,
 Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things then necessities?
 Then let us meet them like necessities!—

And that same word even now cries out on us;
 They say, the bishop and Northumberland
 Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord;

Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo,
 The numbers of the fear d:—Please it your grace,
 To go to bed; upon my life, my lord,
 The powers that you array have sent forth,
 Shall bring this prize in very easily.

To comfort you the more, I have received
 A certain instance, that Glendower is dead.
 Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill;
 And these unseason'd hours, perforce, must add
 Unto your sickness.

K. Hen. I will take your counsel:
 And, were these inward wars once out of hand,
 We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire.

Enter SHALLOW and SILENCE, meeting;
 MOULDY, SHADOW, WART, FEEBLE,
 BULL-CALF, and Servants, behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the rood. And how doth my good cousin Silence?

Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.
 Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bed-fellow?
 and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black onzel, cousin Shallow.
 Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford, still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.
 Shal. He must then to the inns of court shortly: I was once of Clement's inn; where, I think, they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called—Justy Shallow, then, cousin.
 Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and roundly too. There was a, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cotswold man,—you had not four such swing-bucklers in all the inns of court again; and, I may say to you, we knew where the boys-robas were; and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy; and page to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan's head at the court gate, when he was a crack, not thus high; and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. O, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure; death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die.—How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.
 Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.
 Shal. Dead!—See, see!—he drew a good bow! And dead!—he shot a fine shoot!—John of Gaunt lov'd him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!—he would have clapped 't the clout at twelve score; and carried you a forehead shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead!

Enter BARDOLPH, and one with him.

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace. What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by Heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir; I knew him a good backward man: How doth the good knight? may I ask, how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated, than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, it is: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!—it comes from accommodo: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir: I have heard the word. Phrase, call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase; but I will maintain the word with my sword, to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated; That is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated: or, when a man is,—being,—whereby,—he may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Shal. It is very just.—Look, here comes good Sir John.—Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand. By my troth, you look well, and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow.—Master Sure-card, as I think.

Shal. No, Sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.
Fal. Pyl this is hot weather.—Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll?—Let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so. Yea, marry, sir.—Ralph Mouldy!—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see: Where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an't please you.

Shal. What think you, Sir John? a good limbed fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i' faith! things, that are mouldy, lack use. Very singular good!—In faith, well said, Sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him. (To Shallow.)

Moul. I was pricked well enough before, an you could have let me alone. My old dame will be undone now, for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery; you need not have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy, you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside. Know you where you are?—For the other, Sir John!—let me see:—Simon Shadow!

Fal. Ay, marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shal. Here sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow; so the son of the female is the shadow of the male. It is often so, indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,—prick him;—for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster.

Shal. Thomas Wart! [book.]

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is huilt upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble?

Fal. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Fal. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may; but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have pricked you.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Fal. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow; deep, master Shallow.

Fal. I would, Wart might have gone, sir.

Fal. I would, thou wert a man's tailor, that thou might'st mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands.—Let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Fal. It shall suffice, sir.

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble.—Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!

Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bull-calf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me Bull-calf till he roar again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain,—

Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?

Bull. O lord, sir! I am a diseased man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs, upon his coronation day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown: we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee.—Is here all?

Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir;—and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, in good troth, master Shallow.

Shal. O Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's fields?

Fal. No more of that, good master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Night-work alive?

Fal. She lives, master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-robba. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain, she's old; and had Robin Night-work by old Night-work, before I came to Clement's inn.

Sil. That's fifty-five years ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that, that this knight and I have seen!—Ha, Sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have; our watch-word was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner.—O, the days that we have seen!—Come, come.

[Exeunt Falstaff, Shallow, and Silence.]

Bull. Good master corporate Bardolph, stand my friend; and here is four larry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go; and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but, rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moul. And good muster corporal Captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend; she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself; you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Fal. By my troth I care not;—a man can die but once;—wo owe God a death;—I'll ne'er bear a base mind;—an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so. No man's too good to serve his prince; and, let it go which way it will, he, that dies this year, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fal. 'Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter FALSTAFF, and Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you:—I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bull-calf.

Fal. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, Sir John, which four will you have?

Fal. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Marry then,—Mouldy, Bull-calf, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fal. Mouldy, and Bull-calf:—For you, Mouldy, stay at home still; you are past service:—and, for your part, Bull-calf,—grow till you come unto it; I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong; they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man? Give me the spirit, master Shallow.—Here's Wart;—you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you; and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that glibets on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow,—give me this man; he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife: And, for a retreat,—how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off? O give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones.—Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart, to serve; thus, thus, thus.
Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So:—very well:—go to:—very good:—exceeding good.—O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald shot.—Well said, I' faith, Wart; thou'rt a good scab; hold, there's a tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's-master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end green, (when I lay at Clement's inn,—I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show,) there was a little quiver fellow, and a would manage you his piece thus: and a would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: rah, tah, tah, would a say; bonce, would a say; and away again would a go, and again would a come:—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, master Shallow.—God keep you, master Silence; I will not use many words with you.—Fare you well, gentlemen both; I thank you; I must a dozen mile to-night.—Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shal. Sir John, Heaven bless you, and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure, I will with you to the court.

Fal. I would you would, master Shallow.
Shal. Go to; I have spoke, at a word. Fare you well. [Exeunt Shallow and Silence.]

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt Bardolph, Recruits, &c.] As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull-street; and every third word a lie, dner paid to the bearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible: he was the very Genius of fannine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him—mandrake: he came ever in the rear-ward of the fashion; and sung those tunes to the over-scutched huswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware—they were his fancies, or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire; and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him: and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he burst his head, for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name: for you might have truss'd him, and all his apparel, into an eel-skin; the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him, a court; and now has he land and beeves. Well; I will be acquainted with him, if I return: and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me. If the young decee be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason, in the law of nature, but I may susn at him. Let time shape, and there an end. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK, MOWERAY, HASTINGS, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd? [Grace.]

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree forest, an't shall please your Grace. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers forth, To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. My friends, and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you, that I have received New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, tenour, and substance, thus:—Here doth he wish his person, with such powers As might hold sortance with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retired, to ripe his growing fortunes, To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers, That your attempts may overlive the hazard, And fearful meeting of their opposit.

Mowb. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground, And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?

Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In woody form comes on the enemy: And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowb. The just proportion, that we gave them out, Let us sway on, and face them in the field.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Mowb. I think, it is my lord of Westmoreland.
West. Health and fair greeting from our general. The prince, lord John and Duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace; What doth concern your coming?

West. Then, my lord,

Unto your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech. If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rage,
And countenanced by boys, and beggars;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection
With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop, —
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd;
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd;
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd;
Whose white investment's figure innocence,
The dove and very blessed spirit of peace, —
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?
Turning your books to greaves, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances; and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet, and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this?—su the question stands.

Briefs to this end:—We are all diseas'd;
And, with our surfeitings, and wanton hours,
Have brought ourselves unto a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it; of which disease
Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland,
I take not on me here as a physician;
Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men;
But, rather, shew a white like fearful war,
To diet rank minds, sick of happiness;
And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs suffer,

And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforced from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion:
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to shew in articles;
Which, long ere this, we offer'd to the king,
And might by no suit gain our audience:
When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person,
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
The dangers of the days but newly gone,
(Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet appearing blood,) and the examples
Of every minute's instance, (present now,)
Have put us in these ill-beseeming arms;
Not to break peace, or any branch of it;
But to establish here a peace indeed,
Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal denied?

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
 What peer hath been suborned to grate on you?
 That you should seal this lawless bloody book
 O' forged rebellion with a seal divine,
 And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?

Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,
 To brother born an household cruelty,
 I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress;
 Or, if there were, it is not belongs to you.

Mowb. Why not to him, in part; and to us all,
 That feel the bruises of the days before;
 And suffer the condition of these times
 To lay a heavy and unequal hand
 Upon our honours?

West. O my good lord Mowbray,
 Construe the times to their necessities,
 And you shall say indeed,—It is the time,
 And not the king, that doth you injuries.
 Yet, for your part, it do not appears to me,
 Either from the king, or in the present time,
 That you should have an inch of any ground
 To build a grief on: Were you not restored
 To all the duke of Norfolk's signiorities,
 Your noble and right-well remember'd father's?

Mowb. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,
 That need to be revived and breathed in me?
 The king, that loved him, as the state stood then,
 Was, for force perforce, compell'd to banish him:
 And then, when Harry Bolingbroke and he,—
 Being mounted, and both rous'd in their seats,
 Their neighing coursers, darning of the spur,
 Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down,
 Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
 And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
 Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
 My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
 O, when the king did throw his warder down,
 His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
 Then threw he down himself; and all their lives,
 That, by indictment, and by dint of sword,
 Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not what;

The earl of Hereford was reputed then
 In England the most valiant gentleman;
 Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smiled?
 But if your father had been victor there,
 He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry:
 For all the country, in a general voice,
 Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers and love
 Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
 And bless'd, and graced indeed, more than the king.
 But this is mere digression from my purpose.
 Here come I from our princely general,
 To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
 That he will give you audience; and wherein
 It shall appear that your demands are just,
 You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
 That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath forced us to compel this offer;
 And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so;
 This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
 For, lo! within a ken our army lies;
 Upon mine honour, all too confident
 To give admittance to a thought of fear.
 Our battle is more full of names than yours,
 Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
 Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
 Then reason wills, our hearts should be as good:—
 Say you not then, our offer is compell'd.

Mowb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
 A rotten case abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commission,
 In very ample virtue of his father,
 To hear, and absolutely to determine
 Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

West. That is intended in the general's name:
 I muse, you make so slight a question.

Arch. Then take, my lord of Westmoreland, this schedule;

For this containeth our general grievances:—
 Each several article herein redress'd;
 All members of our cause, both here and hence,
 That are insinew'd to this action,
 Acquitted by a true substantial form;
 And present execution of our wills
 To us, and to our purposes, consign'd:
 We come within our awful banks again,
 And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I shew the general. Please you, lords,

In sight of both our battles we may meet:
 And either end in peace, which Heaven so frame!
 Or to the place of difference call the swords
 Which must decide it.

Arch. My lord, we will do so.

[Exit West.]

Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom tells me,
 That no conditions of our peace can staid.

Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace
 Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
 As our conditions shall consist upon,
 Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Mowb. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
 That every slight and false-derived cause,
 Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
 Shall, to the king, taste of this action:
 That, were our royal faith's martyrs in love,
 We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
 That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
 And good from bad find no partition.

Arch. No, no, my lord: Note this,—the king is wear'd
 Of dainty and such picking grievances:
 For he hath found,—to end one doubt by death,
 Revives two greater in the heirs of life.
 And therefore will he wipe his tables clean;
 And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
 That may repeat and history his loss

To new remembrance: For full well he knows,
 He cannot so precisely weed this land,
 As his misdoubts present occasion:
 His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
 That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
 He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend.
 So that this land, like an offensive wife,
 That hath enraged him on to offer strokes
 As he is striking, holds his infant up,
 And hangs resolved correction in the arm
 That was uprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
 On late offenders, that he now doth lack
 The very instruments of chastisement:
 So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
 May offer, but not hold.

Arch. 'Tis very true;—

And therefore be assured, my good lord marshal,
 If we do now make our atonement well,
 Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
 Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowb. Be it so,
 Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

West. The prince is here at hand: Pleaseth your lordship,

To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?

Mowb. Your grace of York, in God's name then set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace:—my lord, we come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

*Enter, from one side, MOWBRAY, the Archbishop,
 HASTINGS, and others: from the other side,
 PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, WESTMORE-LAND, Officers, and Attendants.*

P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin
 Mowbray:—

Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop:—
 And so to you, lord Hastings,—and to all.—
 My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
 When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
 Encircled you, to hear with reverence
 Your exposition on the holy text;
 Than now to see you here an iron man,
 Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
 Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
 That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
 And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
 Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
 Alack, what mischiefs might he set abroad,
 In shadow of such greatness! With you, lord bishop,
 It is even so.—Who hath not heard it spoken
 How deep you were within the books of God?
 To us, the speaker in his parliament;
 To us, the imagined voice of God himself;
 The very opener and intelligencer,
 Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
 And our dull workings: O, who shall believe,
 But you misuse the reverence of your place;
 Employ the countenance and grace of Heaven,
 As a false favourite doth his prince's name,
 In deeds dishonourable? You have taken up,

Under the counterfeit zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father;
And, both against the peace of Heaven and him,
Have here up-swarm'd them.

Arch. Good my lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your father's peace:
But, as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The time disorder'd doth, in common sense,
Crowd us, and crush us, to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our grief;
The which hath been with scorn shov'd from the court,
Whereon this hydra son of war is born;
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep,
With grant of our most just and right desires;
And true obedience, of this madness cured,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Mowb. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them:
And so success of mischief shall be born;
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up,
Whiles England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,
To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleaseth your grace, to answer them directly,
How far-forth you do like their articles?

P. John. I like them all, and do allow them well:
And swear here, by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority.—
My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers into their several counties,
As we will ours: and here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home,
Of our restor'd love, and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses.

P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my word:
And ther-upon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain, (to an officer) and deliver to the army

This news of peace; let them have pay, and part:
I know, it will well please them: Hie thee, captain.
[Exit Officer.]

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.

West. I pledge your grace: And, if you knew what I have bestow'd, to breed this present peace, [pains
You would drink freely: but my love to you
Shall shew itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.—
Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against ill chances, men are ever merry;

But heaviness foretells the good event.
West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus,—Some good thing comes to-morrow.

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if our own rule be true.

[Shouts within.]
P. John. The word of peace is render'd: Hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful, after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged.—
[Exit Westmoreland.]

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains
March by us; that we may peruse the men
We should have coped withal.

Arch. Go, good lord Hastings,
And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.

[Exit Hastings.]
P. John. I trust, my lords, we shall lie to-night together.—

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The less charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Re-enter HASTINGS.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispersed already:

Like youthful steers unyoked, they take their courses
East, west, north, south; or, like a snail broke up.
Each hurries towards his home, and sporting-place.

West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for the which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason;
And you, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mowbray,
Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I pawn'd thee none:

I promised you redress of these same grievances,

Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,

I will perform with a most christian care.

But, for you, rebels,—look to taste the due

Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,

Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd strag;

Heaven, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.—

Some guard these traitors to the block of death;

Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the Forest.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter FALSTAFF and COLEVILLE, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you; and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is—Coleville of the dale.

Fal. Well, then, Coleville is your name: a knight is your degree; and your place the dale. Coleville shall still be your name; a traitor your degree; and the dun-green your place,—a place deep enough; so shall you still be Coleville of the dale.

Cole. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, whoever I am. Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think, you are Sir John Falstaff; and, in that thought, yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine; and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe.
My womb, my womb, my womb undoes me. Here comes our general.

Enter PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, WESTMORE-
LAND, and others.

P. John. The heat is past, follow no farther now:
Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—

[Exit West.]
Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?

When every thing is ended, then you come:
These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life,
One time or other break some gallow's back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus;
I never knew yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have foundered nine-score and odd posts: and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the dale, a most furious knight, and valorous enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded, that I may justly say, with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome.—I came, saw, and overcame.

P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.

Fal. I know not; here he is, and here I yield him;
and I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of his deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Coleville kissing my foot. To the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all shew like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the einders of the element, which shew like pins' heads to her; believe not the word of the noble. Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

P. John. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine then.

P. John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

P. John. Is thy name Coleville?

Cole. It is, my lord.

P. John. A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.
Fal. And a famous true subject tooks he.
Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are,
 That led me hither: had they been ruled by me,
 You should have won them dearer than you have.
Fal. I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away, and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

P. John. Now, have you left pursuit?
West. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.
P. John. Send Coleville, with his confederates,
 To York, to present execution:—
Blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him sure.—
[Exit some with Coleville.]
 And now despatch we toward the court, my lords;
 I hear, the king my father is sore sick:
 Our news shall go before us to his majesty.—
 Which, cousin, you shall bear,—to comfort him;
 And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go through Glostershire; and, when you come to court, stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.
P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition,
 Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Exit.]

Fal. I would, you had but the wit; 'twere better than your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young rober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh;—but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof; for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches; they are generally fools and cowards,
 —which of us should be too, but for inflammation.
 A good sherris-ack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and crudy vapours, which environ it:
 makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which deliver'd o'er to the voice, (the tongue,) which is the hirth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is,—the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the hedge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners, and inland potty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart;
 when, great, and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris: So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack; for that sets it a-work: and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil; till sack commences it, and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good store of fertile sherris; that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them, should be, —to forswear thin potations, and addict themselves to sack.

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone.
Fal. Let them go. I'll through Glostershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire; and have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, PRINCE HUMPHREY, WARWICK, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if Heaven doth give successful
 To this debate, that bleedeth at our doors, [end]
 We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
 And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
 Our army is address'd, our power collected,
 Our substitutes in absence well invested,
 And every thing lies level to our wish:
 Only, we want a little personal strength;
 And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot,
 Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty
 Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Glotter,
 Where is the prince your brother?

P. Humph. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, as K. Hen. And how accompanied? [Windsor]
P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.
K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence,
 with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord: he is in presence Cl. What would my lord and father? [Ber.]
K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance, thou art not with the prince thy brother?
 He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas;
 Thou hast a better place in his affection
 Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy;
 And noble offices thou may'st effect
 Of mediation, after I am dead.

Between his greatness and thine other brethren:—
 Therefore, omit him not; blunt not his love;
 Nor lose the good advantage of his grace,
 By seeming cold, or careless of his will.
 For he is gracious, if he be observed;
 He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
 Open as day for melting charity:
 Yet notwithstanding, being incensed, he's flint;
 As humorous as winter, and as sudden
 As flaws congealed in the spring of day.
 His temper, therefore, must be well observed:
 Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
 When you perceive his blood inclined to mirth:
 But, being moody, give him line and scope;
 Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
 Confound themselves with working. Learn this, Thomas,
 And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends;
 A hoop of gold, to bind thy brothers in;
 That the united vessel of their blood,
 Mingle with venom of suggestion,
 (As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,) Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
 As acetonium, or rash gunpowder.

Cl. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him,
 Thomas?

Cl. He is not there to-day; he dines in London.

K. Hen. And how accompanied? canst thou tell that?

Cl. With Poins, and other his continual followers.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
 And he, the noble image of my youth,
 Is overspread with them: Therefore my grief
 Stretches itself beyond the hour of death;
 The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
 In forms imaginary, the ungodly days,
 And rotten times, that you shall look upon
 When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
 For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
 When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
 When means and lavish manners meet together,
 O, with what wings shall his affections fly
 Towards fronting peril and opposed decay!

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite;
 The prince but studies his companions,
 Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language,
 'Tis needful, that the most immodest word
 Be look'd upon, and learn'd: which once attain'd,
 Your highness knows, comes to no farther use,
 But to be known, and hated. So, like gross terms,
 The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
 Cast off his followers: and their memory
 Shall be a pattern or a measure live,
 By which his grace must mete the lives of others;
 Turning past evils to advantages.

K. Hen. 'Tis seldom, when the bee doth leave her comb
 In the dead carrion.—Who's here? Westmoreland?

Enter WESTMORELAND.

West. Health to my sovereign! and new happiness
 Added to that, that I am to deliver!
 Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace's hand;
 Mowbray, the bishop Scrop, Hastings, and all,
 Are brought to the correction of your law;
 There is not now a rebel's sword unsheathed,
 But peace puts forth her olive every where.
 The manner how this action hath been borne,
 Here at more leisure may your highness read;
 With every course, in his particular.

K. Hen. O Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird,
 Which ever in the haunch of winter sings
 The lifting up of day. Look! here's more news.

Enter HARCOURT.

Har. From enemies Heaven keep your majesty;
 And, when they stand against you, may they fall
 As those that I am come to tell you of!
 The earl Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph,

With a great power of English, and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrow'n;
The manner and true order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:—
O me! come near me, now I am much ill. (Swoons.)
P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!

Cl. O my royal father!
West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up!
War. Be patient, princes; you do know, these fits
Are with his highness very ordinary.
Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.

Cl. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs;
The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the cure, that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humph. The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Hath found some months asleep, and leap'd them over.

Cl. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's dotting chronicles,
Say, it did so a little time before
That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War. Speak lower, prince, for the king recovers.
P. Humph. This apoplex will, certain, be his end.
K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and hear me hence
Into some other chamber: softly, pray.

(They convey the King into an inner part of the room, and place him on a bed.)

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.
K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.
Cl. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.
War. Less noise, less noise.

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence?
Cl. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.
P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none
How doth the king? [Answer]

P. Humph. Exceedingly ill.
P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet?
Cl. Not him.
P. Humph. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.
P. Hen. If he be sick

With joy, he will recover without physic. [Speak low;
War. Not so much noise, my lords:—sweet prince,
The king your father is disposed to sleep.

Cl. Let us withdraw into the other room.
War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?
P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.
[Exeunt all but P. Henry.]

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polsh'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night!—sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow, with homely biggin bound,
Snores out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour, worn in heat of day,
That seals with safety. By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
D-d he surprise, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move.—My gracious lord! my father!
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep,
That from this golden rigol hath divorced
So many English knees. Thy due, from me,
I tears, and heavy rorrows of the blood;
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Suck'd, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:
My due, from thee, is this imperial crown;
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,—
(Putting it on his head.)

Which Heaven shall guard: And put the world's whole
Into one giant arm, it shall not force [Strength]
This lineal honour from me: This from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. [Exit.]

K. Hen. Warwick! Gloucester! Clarence!

Re-enter WARWICK, and the rest.

Cl. Both the king call?
War. What would your majesty? How fares your grace?

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?
Cl. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.

K. Hen. The Prince of Wales? Where is he? let me see him:

War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?

War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
K. Hen. The prince hath taken it hence:—go, seek him out.

Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose
My sleep my death?—
Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit Warwick.]
This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you are!
How quickly nature falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object!

For this, the foolish over-careful fathers [Care,
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains w'th
Their bones with industry;

For this, they have engrossed and piled up
The canker'd heaps of strange-achiev'd gold;
For this, they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts, and martial exercises:

When, like the bee, tolling from every flower
The virtuous sweets;
Our thighs pack'd with wax, our months with honey,
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father.—

Re-enter WARWICK.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long?
Till his friend sickness hath determined me?

War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,
That 't'ranney, which never quaff'd but hood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.

K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY.

Lo, where he comes,—Come hither to me, Harry:—
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Lords, &c.]

P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.
K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!

Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.
Stay but a little: for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop; my day is dim.

Thou hast stol'n that, which, after some few hours,
Were thine without offence; and at my death,
Thou hast sold up my expectation:
Thy life did manifest, thou lovest me not,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.

Thou hidest a thousand daggers in thy thoughts;
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.

What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone; and dig my grave thyself;
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear,
That thou art crown'd, not that I am dead.

Let all the tears, that should bedew my hearse,
Be drops of balin, to sanctify thy head;
Ere thou coupedest me with forgotten dust;
Give that, which gave thee life, unto the worms.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to work at farm,
Harry the Fifth is crown'd:—Up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!

Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your dunc
Have you a ruffian, that will swear, drink, dance,
Revel the night; rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?

Be happy, he will trouble you no more:

England shall double gild his treble guilt :
 England shall give him office, honour, might ;
 For the fifth Harry from cur'd licence plucks
 The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
 Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent.
 O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows !
 When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
 What wilt thou do, when riot is thy care ?
 O, then wilt be a wilderness again,
 Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants !

P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege ! but for my tears, (Kneeling.)

The most impediments unto my speech,
 I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
 Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
 The course of it so far. There is your crown ;
 And He, that wears the crown immortally,
 Long guard it yours ! If I affect it more,
 Than as your honour, and as your renown,
 Let me no more from this obedience rise,
 (Which my most true and inward-duteous spirit Teacheth,) this prostrate and exterior bending !
 Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
 And found no course of breath within your majesty,
 How cold it struck my heart ! If I do feign,
 O, let me in my present wildness die,
 And never live to shew the incredulous world
 The noble change that I have purpos'd !
 Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
 (And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,)
 I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
 And thus upbraided it : *The care on thee depending,
 Hath fed upon the body of my father ;
 Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.
 Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
 Preserving life in medicine potable :
 But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
 Hast eat thy bearer up. Thus, my most royal liege,
 Accusing it, I put it on my head ;
 To try with it,—as with an enemy,
 That had before my face murder'd my father,—
 The quarrel of a true inheritor.
 But if it did infect my blood with joy,
 Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride ;
 If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
 Did, with the least affection of a welcome,
 Give entertainment to the might of it,
 Let God for ever keep it from my head !
 And make me as the poorest scullion is,
 That doth with awe and terror kneel to it !*
K. Hen. O my son !
 Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
 That thou might'st win the more thy father's love,
 Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.
 Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed ;
 And hear, I think, the very latest counsel,
 That ever I shall breathe. Heaven knows, my son,
 By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
 I met this crown ; and I myself know well,
 How troublesome it sat upon my head :
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
 Better opinion, better confirmation ;
 For all the soil of the achievement goes
 With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
 But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand ;
 And I had many living, to upbraid
 My gain of it by their assistances ;
 Which daily grew to quarrel, and to bloodshed,
 Wounding supposed peace : all these bold fears,
 Thou seest, with peril I have answered ;
 For all my reign hath been but as a scene
 Acting that argument ; and now my death
 Changes the mode ; for what in me was purchased,
 Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort :
 So thou the garland wear'st successively.
 Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
 Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are grown ;
 And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
 Have but their stings and teeth newly taken out ;
 By whose fell working I was first advanced,
 And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
 To be again displaced : which to avoid,
 I sent them off ; and had a purpose now
 To lead out many to the Holy Land ;
 Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
 Be it thy course, to busy giddy minds
 With foreign quarrels ; that action, hence born out,
 May waste the memory of the former days,
 More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
 That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
 How I came by the crown, O God, forgive it,
 And grant it may with thee in true peace live !

P. Hen. My gracious liege,
 You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me ;
 Then plain, and right, must my possession be ;
 Which I, with more than with a common pain,
 'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, WARWICK,
 Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster. [father !]

P. John. Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal

K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace son John ;

But health, slack, with youthful wings is flown
 From this bare wither'd trunk : upon thy sight,
 My worldly business makes a period.—
 Where is my lord of Warwick ?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick !

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong
 Unto the lodging, where I first did swoon ?

War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord. [end.]

K. Hen. Laud be to God ! — even there my life must
 It hath been prophesied to me many years,
 I should not die but in Jerusalem ;
 Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land :—
 But, bear me to that chamber ; there I'll lie ;
 In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Gloucestershire. A Hall in Shallow's House.

Enter SHALLOW, FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pye, sir, you shall not away tonight.—What, Davy, I say !

Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you ; you shall not be excused ; excuses shall not be admitted ; there is no excuse shall serve ; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy !

Enter DAVY.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy ; let me see :—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus :—those precepts cannot be served ; and, again, sir,—Shall we sow the head-land with wheat ?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook :—Are there no young pigeons ?

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note, for shoeing, and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had :—And, sir, do you mean to stop any of Hinckley wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Winckley fair ?

Shal. He shall answer it :—Some pigeons, Davy ;
 a couple of short-legged hens ; a joint of mutton ; and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir ?

Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well : A friend if the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy ; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir ; for they have marvellous foul liars.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perkes of the hill

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor ; that Visor is an arrant knave on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knave, sir ;
 but yet, God forbid sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, these eight years ;
 and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir ; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to ; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, Sir John ? Come, off with your boots.—Give me your band, master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph:—and welcome, my tall fellow. (To the Page.) Come, Sir John. [Exit Shallow.]

Fal. I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow, Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt Bardolph and Page.] If we were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's-staves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing, to see the semblable coeurance of his men's spirits and his: They, by observing him, do hear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving man; their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild-geese. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter, the wearing-out of six fashions, (which is four terms, or two actuous,) and he shall laugh without intervallums. O, it is much, that a lie with a slight oath, and a jest with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh, till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up.

Shal. (Within.) Sir John!
Fal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shallow. [Exit Falstaff.]

SCENE 11.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter WARWICK and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice? whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?
War. Exceeding well, his cares are now all ended.
Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature; and, to our purposes, he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would, his majesty had call'd me with the service that I truly did his life, [him:] Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think, the young king loves you not.
Ch. Just. I know, he doth not, and do arm myself, To welcome the condition of the time; Which cannot look more vilely upon me Than I have drawn it in my phantasy.

Enter PRINCE JOHN, PRINCE HUMPHREY, CLARENCE, WESTMORELAND, and others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry: O, that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!

Ch. Just. Alas! I fear, all will be overturn'd.
P. John. Good morrow, cousin Warwick.

P. Humph. Cla. Good morrow, cousin.

P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.
War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with him, that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!
P. Humph. O. good my lord, you have lost a friend, indeed:

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow; it is, sure, your own.

P. John. Though no man be assured what grace to you stand in coldest expectation; [And, I am the sorrier; 'twould, 'twere otherwise.]

Cla. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair; Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour, Led by the impartial conduct of my soul; And never shall you see, that I will beg A ragged and forestall'd remission.— If truth and upright innocency fail me, I'll to the king my master, that is dead, And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter KING HENRY V.

Ch. Just. Good morrow; and Heaven save your majesty!

King. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not so easy on me as you think.—

Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear; This is the English, not the Turkish court;

Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds, But Harry Harry: Yet be sad, good brothers, For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you; Sorrow so royally in you appear,—

That I will deeply put the fashion on, And wear it in my heart. Why, then, be sad; But entertain no more of it, good brothers.

Than a joint burden laid upon us all. For me, by Heaven, I bid you be assured,

I'll be your father and your brother too; Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares.

Yet weep, that Harry's dead; and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears,

By number, into hours of happiness.

P. John, &c. We hope no other from your majesty.
King. You all look strangely on me—and you most;

(To the Chief Justice.) You are, I think, assured I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assured, if I be measured rightly, Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

King. No! How might a prince of my great hopes forget So great indignities you laid upon me?

What I rate, rebuke, and roughly sent to prison The immediate heir of England! Was this easy?

May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father The image of his power lay then in me;

And, in the administration of his law, Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,

Your highness pleas'd to forget my place, The majesty and power of law and justice,

The image of the king, whom I presented, And struck me in my very seat of judgment

Whereon, as an offender to your father, I gave hold way to my authority,

And did commit you. If the deed were ill, Be you contented, wearing now the garland,

To have a son set your decrees at naught; To pluck down justice from your awful bench;

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword That guards the peace and safety of your person;

Nay, more; to spurn at your most royal image, And mock your workings in a second body.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours, Be now the father, and propose a son;

Hear your own dignity so much profaned, See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,

Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd; And then imagine me taking your part,

And, in your power, soft silencing your son: After this cold consideration, sentence me;

And, as you are a king, speak in your state, What I have done, that misbecame my place,

My person, or my liege's sovereignty.

King. You are right, justice, and you weigh this well Therefore still bear the balance, and the sword;

And I do wish your honours may increase, Till you do live to see a son of mine

Offend you and obey you, as I did. So shall I live to speak my father's words,—

Happy am I, that have a man so bold, That dares do justice on my proper son;

And not less happy, having such a son, That would deliver up his greatness so Into the hands of justice.— You did commit me:

For which, I do commit into your hand Theustain'd sword that you have need to hear;

With this remembrance,—that you use the same With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit,

As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand; You shall be as a father to my youth;

My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear; And I will stoop and humble my intents

To your well-practised, wise directions.— And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you,—

My father is gone wild into his grave, For in his tomb lie my affections;

And with his spirit sadly I survive. To mock the expectation of the world;

To frustrate prophecies; and to raise out Motten opinion, who hath writ me down

After my seeming. The tide of blood in me Hath proudly flow'd in vanity, till now:

Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea; Where it shall mingle with the state of floods,

And flow henceforth in formal majesty. Now call we our high court of Parliament;

And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel, That the great body of our state may go

In equal rank with the best govern'd nation; That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us.

In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.—

(To the Lord Chief Justice.)

Our coronation done, we will accite,
As I before remember'd, all our state;
And (God consenting to my good intents)
No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say,—
Heaven shorten Harry's happy life o' day.

[Exeant.]

SCENE III.—Glostershire. The Garden of Shallow's House.

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, SILENCE, BARDOLPH, the Page, and DAVY.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard: where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth—come, cousin Silence;—and then to bed.

Fal. Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John:—o'ary, good air.—Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving man, and your husbandman.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper—A good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down:—Come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a,—we shall

Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, (Singing.)

And praise Heaven for the merry year;

When flesh is cheap, and females dear,

And lusty lads roam here and there,

So merrily.

And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart!—Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy,

Davy. Sweet sir, sit: (seating Bardolph and the Page at another table.) I'll be with you anon:—most sweet sir, sit.—Master page, good master page, sit; proface! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink.

But you must bear: The heart's all. [Exit.]

Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph;—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife's as all: (Singing.)

For women are shrews, both short and tall;

'Tis merry in the hall, when beards wag all,

And welcome merry shrove-tide.

Be merry, be merry, &c.

Fal. I did not think, master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats for you.

(Setting them before Bardolph.)

Shal. Davy,—

Davy. Your worship?—I'll be with you straight. (To Bard.)—A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine, (Singing.)

And drink unto the leman mine;

And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. And we shall be merry;—now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come:

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: If thou wantest any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—Welcome my little thy thief; (to the Page.) and welcome, indeed, too.—I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together. Ha! will you not, master Bardolph?

Bard. Yes, sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thank thee:—The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that; he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry, (Knocking heard.) Look who's at door there: Ho! who knocks?

Fal. Why, now you have done me right. [Exit Davy.]

(To Silence, who drinks a bumper.)

Sil. Do me right,

And dub me knight:

Samingo.

(Singing.)

Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. An it please you, worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court, let him come in.—

Enter PISTOL.

How now, Pistol?

Pist. God save you, Sir John!

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind, which blows no man to good.—Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. By'r lady, I think a' be; but Goodman Puff of Barren.

Pist. Puff?

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—

Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend, And helter-skelter have I rode to thee;

And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys,

And golden times, and happy news of peace.

Fal. I pry'these now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foutra for the world, and worldlings base!

I speak of Africa, and golden joys.

Fal. O hase Assyrin knight, what is thy news?

Let king Conheta know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. (Sings.)

Pist. Shall dunhill curs confront the Helicons?

And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then, lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir.—If, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways; either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth?

Shal. Harry the Fourth? or Fifth?

Pist. Harry the Fourth.

Fal. A foutra for thine office!—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king;

Harry the Fifth's the man. I speak the truth;

When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me, like

The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What! is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak, are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph; saddle my horse.—Master

Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double-charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day!—I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Pist. What? I do bring good news?

Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night!—O, sweet Pistol!—Away, Bardolph. [Exit Bard.]

—Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise something to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, master Shallow;

I know, the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses: the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends; and wo to my lord chief justice!

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!

Where is the life that late I led, say they;

Why, here it is; Welcome these pleasant days.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Street.

Enter Beadles, dragging in Hostess QUICKLY and

DOLL TEAR-SHEET.

Host. No, thou arrant knave; I would I might die, that I might have thee hanged: thou bast draw my shoulder out of joint.

I Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me; and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her: There hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Doll. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on; I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged rascal; as the child I now go with, do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-faced villain.

Host. O the Lord, that Sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

1 Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions again; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me; for the man is dead, that you and Pistol beat among you.

Doll. I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a censer! I will have you as soundly swung for this, you hie-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correctioner! If you be not swung, I'll forswear half-kirtles.

1 Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, come!

Host. O, that right should thus overcome might! Woe! of sufferance comes ease.

Doll. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to a justice.

Host. Ay; come, you starved blood-hound.

Doll. Goodman death! Goodman bones!

Host. Thou atomy thou!

Doll. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal!

1 Bead. Very well.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A public Place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms strewing rushes.

1 Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded.

1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: Despatch, despatch.

[Exeunt Grooms.]

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, master Robert Shallow, I will make the king do you grace: I will leer upon him, as 'a comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless the lungs, good knight.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me.—O if I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. (To Shallow.) But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. It shews my earnestness of affection

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else; putting all affairs else in oblivion; as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem, for absque hoc nihil est: 'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver;

And make thee rage.

Thy Doll and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in base durance, and contagious prison;

Haul'd thither

By most mechanical and dirty hand:—

Rouse up revenge from ebon den with fell Alecto's snake,

For Doll is in; Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

(Shouts within, and the trumpets sound.)

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-clangor sounds.

Enter the King and his Train, the Chief Justice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal! my royal Hal! Pist. The Heavens thee guard and keep, most royal in- of fame!

Fal. God! save thee, my sweet boy!

King. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 'tis you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool, and jester!

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,

So surfeit-swoll'd, so old, and so profane;

But, being awake, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace;

Leave gormandizing; know, the grave doth gape

For these three wider than for other men:—

Reply not to me with a fool-born jest;

Presume not, that I am the thing I was;

For Heaven doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self;

So will I those, that kept me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been, Approach me; and thou shalt be as thou wast.

The tutor and the feeder of my riots:

Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,—

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,—

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life, I will allow you.

That lack of means enforce you not to evil;

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will,—according to your strength, and qualities,—

Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my lord,

To see perform'd the tenor of our word.—

Set on.

[Exeunt King and his train.]

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him:

look you, he must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot perceive how; unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, Sir John.

Fal. Fear no colours; go with me to dinner.

Come, lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph;—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter PRINCE JOHN, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;

Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormenta, spero me contenta.

[Exeunt Fal, Shal, Pist, Bard, Page, and Officers.]

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's:

He hath intent, his wretched followers

Shall all be very well provided for;

But all are banish'd till their conversations

Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. I will lay odds,—that, ere this year expire,

We bear our civil swords, and native fire,

As far as France: I heard a bird so sing,

Whose music, to my thinking, pleased the king.

Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE.—Spoken by a Dancer.

First, my fear; then, my court'sy; last, my speech.

My fear is, your displeasure; my court'sy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say, is of mine own making; and what, indeed, I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring.

But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—He it known to you, (as it is very well,) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which if, like an ill venture,

it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you, I would be,

and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me come, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment,—to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions, for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man.

My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night; and so kneel down before you;—but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

The SCENE, at the beginning of the Play, lies in England; but afterwards wholly in France.

Enter Chorus.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
 The brightest heaven of invention!
 A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
 And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
 Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
 Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
 Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
 Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles all,
 The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
 On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
 So great an object. Can this cockpit hold
 The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
 Within this wooden O, the very casques
 That did affright the air of Agincourt?
 O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
 Attest, in little place, a million;
 And let us, ciphers to this great account,
 On your imaginary forces work:
 Suppose, within the girdle of these walls,
 Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
 Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
 The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder.
 Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
 Into a thousand parts divide one man,
 And make imaginary puissance:
 Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
 Printing their proud hoofs 'till the receiving earth;
 For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
 Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times,
 Turning the accomplishment of many years
 Into an hour-glass. For the which supply,
 Admit me chorus to this history;
 Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
 Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. An Ante-chamber in the King's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of CANTERBURY, and Bishop of ELY.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you,—that self bill is urg'd,
 Which, in the eleventh year of the last king's reign,
 Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
 But that the scambling and inquiet time
 Did push it out of farther question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
 We lose the better half of our possession:
 For all the temporal lands, which men devout
 By testament have given to the church,
 Would they strip from us; being valued thus,—
 As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
 Full fifteen earls, and fifteen hundred knights;
 Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
 And, to relief of lazars, and weak age,
 Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
 A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied;
 And to the coffers of the king beside,
 A thousand pounds by the year. Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'T would drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promised it not.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
 But that his wildness, mortified in him,
 Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment,
 Consideration like an angel came.

And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him;
 Leaving his body as a paradise,

To envelop and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made;

With such a heady current, scouring faults;

Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness

So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,

As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,

And, all-admiring, with an inward wish

You would desire, the king were made a prelate:

Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,

You would say,—it hath been all-in-all his study;

List his discourse of war, and you shall hear

A fearful battle render'd you in music;

Turn him to any cause of policy,

The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,

Familiar as his garter; that, when he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences;

So that the art and practick part of life

Must be the mistress to this theoretick:

Which is a wonder, how his grace should glean it,

Since his addiction was to courses vain;

His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;

His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;

And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle;
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Nighbour'd by fruit of baser quality;
And so the prince obscured his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer-grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crevice in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so: for miracles are ceased;
And therefore we must needs admit the means,
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Used by the common? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent;
Or, rather, swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
Upon our spiritual convocation,
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
Approaching France,—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem received, my lord?

Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save, that there was not time enough to hear
(As, I perceived, his grace would fain have done,
The severals, and unbidden passages,
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms;
And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,
Derived from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?
Cant. The French ambassador, upon that instant,
Craved audience; and the hour, I think, is come,
To give him hearing: Is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
Which I could, with a ready guess, declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you; and I long to hear it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND,
and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury?
Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.

West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?
K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin; we would he resolved,
Before we hear him, of some things of weight,
That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of CANTERBURY, and Bishop of ELY.

Cant. God, and his angels, guard your sacred throne,
And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed;
And justly and religiously unfold,
Why the law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth;
For God doth know, how many, now in health,
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to:
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake the sleeping sword of war;
We charge you in the name of God, take heed:
For never two such kingdoms did contend,
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint,
'Gainst him, whose wrongs give edge unto the swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration, speak, my lord;

And we will hear, note, and believe in heart,
That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd
As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,—and you West. They know, your grace hath cause, and means,
and might;
To this imperial throne; There is no bar

To make against your highness' claim to France,
But this, which they produce from Pharamond,—
In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant,
No woman shall succeed in Salique land;

Which Salique land the French unjustly cloze,
To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this law and female bar.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salique lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe;
Where Charles the Great, having subdued the Saxons
There left behind and settled certain French,
Who, holding in disdain the German women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd there this law,—to wit, no female
Should be inheritor in Salique land;
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call'd—Meisen.

Thus doth it well appear, the Salique law
Was not devis'd for the realm of France;
Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one-and-twenty years
After definition of king Pharamond,
Idly supposed the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala, in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which depos'd Childerick,
Died, as heir general, being descended
Of Blithild, which was daughter to king Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.

Hugh Capet also,—that usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Lorraine, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,—
To fine his title with some show of truth,
(Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,
Camest 'd himself as heir to the lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
Of Charles the Great. Also king Lewis the Tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
That fair queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorraine;
By the which marriage, the line of Charles the Great
Was re-united to the crown of France.

So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear

To hold in right and title of the female;
So do the kings of France unto this day;
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law,
To bar your highness claiming from the female;
And rather choose to hide them in a net,
Than simply to imbare their crooked titles,
Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I, with right and conscience, make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!

For in the book of Numbers is it writ,—
When the son dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;
Look back unto your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great uncle's, Edward the Black Prince
Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,
Making defeat on the full power of France;
Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forge in blood of French nobility.
O noble English, that could entertain
With half their forces the full pride of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action!

Ely. Awake remembrance of these vallaits dead,
And with your puissant arm renew their feats:
You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage, that renown'd them,
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know, your grace hath cause, and means,
and might;
To bath your highness; never king of England

Had nobles riches, and more loyal subjects;
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,
And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cant. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right:
In aid whereof, we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of our ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the French;
But lay down our proportions to defend
Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cant. They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snailers
But fear the main intentment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read, that my great grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fullness of his force;
Galling the gleaned land with hot essays;
Girding with grievous sieges, castles and towns;
Hath England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook, and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd,
My liege;

For hear her but exempl'd by herself.—
When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings;
And make your chronicle as rich with praise
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

West. But there's a saying, very odd and true,

*If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin;*

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs,
Playing the mouse, in absence of the cat,
To spoil and havock more than she can eat.

Exc. It follows then, the cat must stay at home;
Yet that is but a curs'd necessity;
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves;
While that the arm'd hand doth fight abroad,
The advis'd head defends itself at home:
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent;
Congruing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Cant. True: therefore doth Heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fix'd, as an aim or butt,
Obedience: for so work the honey bees;
Creatures, that, by a rule in nature, teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king, and officers of sorts;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, arm'd in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The slugging masons building roofs of gold;
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate;
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously:
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Fly to one mark;

As many several ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams run in one self sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre;
So may a thousand actions, once moot,
Ere in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege,
Divide your happy England into four;

Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice that power left at home,
Cannot defend our own door from the dog,
Let us be worried; and our nation lose
The name of hardiness and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.
[Enter an Attendant. The King ascends his throne.
Now are we well resolved; and,—by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,—
France being ours, we'll hold it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces: Or there we'll sit,
Ruling, in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms;
Or lay these homes in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance o'er them:
Either our history shall, with full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.—

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepared to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for, we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.
Amb. May it please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly shew you far off

The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy?
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons:
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

Amb. Thus then, in few,
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says,—that you savour too much of your youth;
And bids you be advis'd, there's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there:

He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you, let the dukedoms that you claim,
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Exc. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasur'd
With us;

His present, and your pains, we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rackets to those balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard:
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chases. And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valued this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give us self
To barbarous licence; as 'tis ever common,
That men are merrier when they are from home.

But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state;
Be like a king, and shew my sail of greatness,
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty,
And plodded like a man for working-days;
But I will rise there with so full a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince,—this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charg'd for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands,
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet unborn, and unborn,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To vengeance as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause.
So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it,—
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

(Exeunt Ambassadors.)

Exc. This was a merry message.
K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.
(Descends from his throne.)

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour.
That may give furtherance to our expedition.
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected; and all things thought upon,
That may, with reasonable swiftness, add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore, let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And sicken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings
With winged heels, as English Mercuries.
For now sits expectation in the air;
And hides a sword, from hilts unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronet,
Promised to Harry, and his followers.
The French, advised by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear; and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,—
What mightiest thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,—
One, Richard earl of Cambridge; and the second,
Henry lord Scrop of Masham; and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey knight of Northumberland.—
Have, for the guilt of France, (O guilt, indeed!)
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
(If hell and treason hold their promises.)
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton,
Linger your patience on; and well digest
The abuse of distance, while we force a play.
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton:
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—The same. Eastcheap.

Enter Nym and Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, corporal Nym.
Nym. Good morrow, lieutenant Bardolph.
Bard. What are ancient Pistol and your friends yet?
Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles;—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wulk, and hold out mine iron: It is a simple one; but what though? It will toast cheese; and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's the humour
of it.
Bard. I will bestow a breakfast, to make you friends;
and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France; let it be so, good corporal Nym.
Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.
Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.
Nym. I cannot tell: things must be as they may:
men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges.
It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well,
I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife—good corporal, be patient here.—How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. B use tike, call't thou me—host?
Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep ledgers.
Quick. No, by my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight. (Nym draws his sword.) O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! O Lord! here's corporal Nym's—now shall we have willful adultery and murder committed.
Good lieutenant Bardolph,—good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-eared cur of Iceland.

Quick. Good corporal Nym, shew the valour of a man, and put up thy sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.
(Sheathing his sword.)

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!
The solus in thy most marvellous face;
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy;
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the solus in thy howels:
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason; you cannot conjure me.
I have an humour to knock you indifferently well: if you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms; if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggart vile, and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gape, and doating death is near;
Therefore exhale. (Pistol and Nym draw.)

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier. (Draws.)

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate.
Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.

Pist. Coupe le gorge, that's the word?—I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?
No; to the spital go,
And from the powdering tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lizard kite of Cressid's kind,
Doll Tear-sheet she by name, and her espouse:
I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she; and—Pauca, there's enough.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, —and you, hostess;—he is very sick, and would to bed.
Good Bardolph, put thy nose between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan;—faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.

Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a puddling one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently.

[Exeunt Mrs Quickly and Boy.]
Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together; Why, the devil, should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erwhelm, and send for food howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have; that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound; push home.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust,
I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, the friends; an thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too. Pr'thee, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;
And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me:—
Is not this just?—for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well then, that's the humour of it.

Re-enter MRS QUICKLY.

Quick. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John: Ah, poor heart! he is so shaked of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight, that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right. His heart is fractured, and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may: he passes some humours and careers.

Pist. Let us coniole the knight; for, lambskins, we will live. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council-chamber.

Enter EXETER, BEDFORD, and WESTMORELAND.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves! As if allegiance in their bosoms sat, Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend By interception, which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow, Whom he hath cloy'd and graced with princely favours,— That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpet sounds. Enter KING HENRY, SCROOP, CAMBRIDGE, GREY, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard. My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Masham,— And you, my gentle knight,—give me your thoughts: Think you not, that the powers we bear with us, Will cut their passage through the force of France; Doing the execution, and the act,

For which we have in head assembled them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

K. Hen. I doubt not that: since we are well persuaded,

We carry not a heart with us from hence, That grows not in a fair consent with ours: Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd and loved, Than is your majesty; there's not, I think, a subject, That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. Even those that were your father's enemies, Have steep'd their galls in honey; and do serve you With hearts creafe of duty and of zeal.

K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thankful- And shall forget the office of our hand, [ness;

Sooner than quittance of desert and merit, According to the weight and worthiness, Scroop. So service shall with steeled sinews toil; And labour shall refresh itself with hope, To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter, Enlarge the man committed yesterday,

That rail'd against our person: we consider, It was excess of wine that set him on; And, on his more advice, we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security: Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O, let us yet be merciful.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. Sir, you shew great mercy, if you give him life. After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye, When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us?—We'll yet enlarge that man,

Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey,—in their dear And tender preservation of our person,— [care, Would have him punish'd. And now to our French

Embassy:

Who are the late commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord;

Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And me, my royal sovereign. [yours:—

K. Hen. Then, Richard, earl of Cambridge, there is These voors, lord Scroop of Masham;—and, sir knight, Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:—

Read them; and know, I know your worthiness,— My lord of Westmoreland,—and uncle Exeter.— We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentleman? What see you in those papers, that you lose So much complexion?—Look ye, how they change! Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there, That hath so cowarded and chased your blood Out of appearance?

Cam. I do confess my fault; And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

Grey. Scroop. To which we all appeal.

K. Hen. The mercy, that was quick in us but late, By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:

You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy; For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,

As dogs upon their masters, worrying them.— See you, my princes, and my noble peers,

These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,— You know how apt our love was to accord

To furnish him with all appertinents Belonging to his honour; and this man

Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspired, And sworn unto the practices of France,

To kill us here in Hampton: to the which, This knight, no less for bounty bound to us

Than Cambridge is,—hath like-wise sworn.—But O! What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop: thou cruel,

Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature: Thou, that didst bear the key of all my counsels,

That knew'st the very bottom of my soul, That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,

Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use? May it be possible, that foreign hire

Could out of thee extract one spark of evil, That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange,

That, though the truth of it stands off as gross As black from white, my eye will scarcely see it.

Treason and murder, ever kept together, As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,

Working so grossly in a natural cause, That admiration did not whoop at them:

But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder, to wait on treason, and on murder:

And whatsoever cunning fiend it was, That wrought upon thee so preposterously,

H'ath got the voice in hell for excellence: And other devils, that suggest by treasons,

Do botch and bungle up damnation With patches, colours, and with forms being retch'd

From glistening semblances of piety; But he that temper'd thee, bade thee stand up,

Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason, Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

If that same demon, that hath gull'd thee thus, Should with his lion gait wade the whole world,

He might return to vasty Tartar back, And tell the legions—I can never win

A soul so easy as that Englishman's, O how hast thou with jealousy infected

The sweetness of affiance! Shew me dutiful? Why, so didst thou: Seem they grave and learned?

Why, so didst thou: Come they of noble family? Why, so didst thou: Seem they religious?

Why, so didst thou: Or are they spare in diet; Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger;

Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood; Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement;

Not working with the eye, without the ear, And, out in purg'd judgment, trusting neither?

Such, and so finely bolted, didst thou seem: And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,

To mark the fall-fraught man, and best endued, With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;

For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like Another fall of man.—Their faults are open,

Arrest them to the answer of the law;— And God acquit them of their practices!

Exe. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd; And I repent my fault, more than my death;

Which I beseech your highness to forgive, Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me,—the gold of France did not seduce; Although I did admit it as a motive,

The sooner to effect what I intended: But God be thanked for prevention;

Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice, Beseeching God, and you, to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise:
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.

K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspired against our royal person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Received the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt,
And his whole kingdom unto desolation.
Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you
Patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

[Exeunt Conspirators, guard'd.]

Now, lords, for France: the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war;
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason, lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now,
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then, forth, dear countrymen, let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—London. Mrs Quickly's House in Eastcheap.

Enter PISTOL, Mrs QUICKLY, NYM, BAR-
DOLPH, and Boy.

Quick. Pr'ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No: for my manly heart doth yearn.—
Bardolph, be blithe;—Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins;
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

Herd. 'Would, I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven, or in hell!

Quick. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. 'A made a finer end, and went away, as it had been any christom child; 'a parted even just before twelve and one, e'en at turning of the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a habbled of green fields. How now, Sir John? quoth I: what, man! be of good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God, God! three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him, 'a should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet: So, 'a bade we lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.

Quick. Ay, that 'a did.
Herd. And of women.

Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.
Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devil incarnate.

Quick. 'A could never abide castration; 'twas a colour he never liked.

Boy. 'A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women: but then he was rheumatic; and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose; and 'a said, it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Herd. Well, the fuel is gone, that maintained that fire: that 'a all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog off? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy liss. Look to my chattels, and my moveables; I trust sense rule; the word is, Pitch and pay Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes,
And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck;
Therefore, caveat be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals.—Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France! like horse-leeches, my boys:
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Herd. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.]

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu.

Pist. Let housewifery appear: keep close, I 'hee command.

Quick. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—France. A Room in the French King's Palace.

Enter the French King attended: the Dauphin, the Duke of BURGUNDY, the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power
And more than carefully it us conceros, [upon us;
To answer royally in our defences.

Therefore the dukes of Berry, and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth.—
And you, prince Dauphin,—with all swift despatch,
To line, and new repair, our towns of war,
With men of course, and with means defensible;

For England his approaches makes as fierce,
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.
It fits us, then, to be as provident:

As fear may teach us, out of late examples,
Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe:
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,
(Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question,)
But that defences, musters, preparations,
Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,
As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth,
To view the sick and feeble parts of France:
And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more, than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:
For, my good liege, she is so idle king'd,
Her sceptre so fantasticaly borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince Dauphin!
You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question your grace the late ambassadors,—
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counsellors,
How modest in exception, and, withal,
How terrible in constant resolution,—
And you shall find, his vanities foreseen
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;
As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots,
That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so. my lord high constable,
But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh
The enemy more mighty than he seems,
So the proportions of defence are fill'd;
Which, of a weak and nigardly projection,
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat, with scanting
A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong;
And, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him.
The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
That haunted us in our familiar paths;
Witness our too much memorable shame,
When Cressy hattle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captived, by the hand
Of that black name, Edward, black prince of Wales;
Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain standing
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,—
Saw his heroidal seed, and smiled to see him
Mangle the work of nature, and deface
The patterns, that by God and by French fathers
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Henry King of England
Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience.
Go and bring them.

[Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.]

Con. Turn head, and stop your ears: for onward dogs
You see, this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop your ears: for onward dogs
You see, this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short; and let them know
Of what a monarchy you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with EXETER and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother England?
Exz. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.
He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of Heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, 'long
To him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain,
By custom and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'Tis no sinister, nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-waish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion raked,
He sends you this most memorable line,

(Gives a paper.)

In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you, overlook this pedigree:
And, when you find him creely derived
From his most famed of famous ancestors,
Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exz. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it:
And therefore in fierce tempests is he coming,
In thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove;
(That, if requiring fail, he will compel;)
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown; and to take mercy
On the poor souls, for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turns he the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining innocents' groans,
For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallowed in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening, and my message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this farther:
To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Dau.

For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: What to him from England?
Exz. Scorn and defiance; slight regard, contempt,
And any thing, that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king; and, if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and wombly vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his indignance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair reply,

It is against my will: for I desire
Nothing but odds with England; to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with those Paris balls.
Exz. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe:
And, be assured, you'll find a difference,
(As we, his subjects, have in wonder found,)
Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he masters now; now he weighs time,
Even to the utmost grain; which you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.

Exz. Despatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already. [conditions.]

Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd, with fair
A sight is but small health, and little pause,
To answer matters of this consequence. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter Chorus.

Chs. Thus with imagined wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier

Rebark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With sicken streamers the young Phaulus fanning,
Play with your fancies; and in them behold,
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confused; behold the threaten'd sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think,
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight, still,
Guarded with grandires, babies, and old women,
Either past, or not arrived to, pity and nuisance:
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
Work, work, your thoughts, and therein see a siege:
Behold the ordinance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur.
Suppose, the ambassador from the French comes back;
Tells Harry—that the king doth offer him
Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer likes not; and the mumble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches.
(Alarm; and Chambers go off;)
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—The same. Before Harfleur.

Alarums. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers, with scaling ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends,
Once more;

Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness, and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock,
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height!—On, on, you noble English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have, in these parts, from morn till even fought,
And sheathed their swords for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your mothers; now attest,
That those, whom you call'd fathers, did beget you!
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war!—and you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding, which I doubt not;
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot;
Follow your spirit; and, upon this charge,
Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!
[Exeunt. Alarm, and Chambers go off.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Forces pass over; then enter NYM, BARDOLPH, PISTOL, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach!
Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay; the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of liver;
the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it. [Sound;]

Pist. The plain-song is most just; for burmoons no
Knocks go and come; God's vasalls drop and die;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Doth win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an ale-house in London!
I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I:

If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as bird doth sing on bough.

Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. Got's blood!—Up to the preaches, you rascals! will you not up to the preaches?

(Driving them forward.)

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage!

Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good hawcock, bate thy rage! use lenity, sweet chuck!
Nym. These be good humours!—your honour wins bad humours.

[Exeunt Nym, Pistol, and Bardolph, followed by Fluellen.]

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed, three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph,—he is white-liver'd, and red-faced; by the means whereof, 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol,—he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof, 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym,—he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward; but his few bad words are match'd with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own; and that was against a post, when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it,—purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case: bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew, by that piece of service, the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets, as their gloves or their handkerchiefs; which mak's much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket, to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service; their villainy goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up. [Exit Boy.]

Re-enter FLUELLEN, GOWER following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines: For, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war; the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' atther sary (you may discuss unto the duke, look you,) is digh himself four yards unto the counter-mines; by Cheshu, I think, 'a will plow up all, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, if I faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world: I will verify as much in his beard; he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter MACMORRIS and JAMY, at a distance.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition, and knowledge in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: By Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pistine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say, gud-day, captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, goot captain Jamy.

Gow. How now, captain Macmorris? have you quit the mines? we had the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish la, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ish ill done; tish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la, in an hour. O, tish ill done, tish ill done: by my hand, tish ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I pesech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly, to satisfy my opinion, and partly, for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of his military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It shall be very gud, gud feith, gud captain's bath: and I shall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion: that shall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me, the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet calls us to the breach; and we talk, and, by Chrish, do nothing; 'tis shame for us all: so God sa' me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand; and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, la.

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, wile do gude service, or aile ligge i' the grund for it; ay, or go to death; and aile pay it as valorously as I may, that shall I surely do, that is the bress and the long: Merry, I wad full fain heard some question 'tween you 'tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of my nation? What ish my nation? ish 'a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal? What ish my nation? Who tells of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, captain Macmorris, peradventure, I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as goot a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. Ah! that's a foul fault. (A parley sounded.)

Gow. The town sounds a parley.
Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Before the gates of Harfleur.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls: the English Forces below. Enter KING HENRY and his Train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town? This is the latest parle we will admit:

Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves;

Or, like to men prod of destruction,

Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier

(A name, that, in my thoughts, becomes me best)

If I begin the battery once again,

I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur,

Till in her ashes she be buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up;

And the flesh'd soldier,—rough and herd of heart,—

In liberty of bloody hand, shall range

With conscience wide as hell; mowing like grass

Your fresh-fair virgins, and your flowering infants

What is it then to me, if impious war,—

Array'd in flames, like to the prince of devils,—

Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feat's

Enlink'd to waste and desolation?

What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause,

If your pure maidens fall into the hand

Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness?

When down the hill he hies his fierce career?

We may as bootless spend our vain command

Upon the enraged soldiers in their spurs,

As send precepts to the Leviathan

To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,

Take pity of your town, and of your people,

Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;

Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds

Of deadly murder, spoil, and villainy.

If not, why, in a moment, look to see

The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand

Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;

Your fathers taken by the silver beards,

And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes;

Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd

Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry

At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.

What say you? will you yield, and this avoid?

Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gow. Our expectation hath this day an end.

The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,
Returns us—that his powers are not yet ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, dread king,
We yield our town, and lives, to thy soft mercy:
Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours;
For we no longer are defensible.

K. Hen. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Exeter,
Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain,
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,—
The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers,—we'll retire to Calais.
To-night in Harfleur will be your guest
To-morrow for the march are we address'd.
[Flourish. The King, &c. enter the town.]

SCENE IV.—Roüen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KATHARINE and ALICE.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un jeu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseignes-tu: il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez-vous la main, en Anglois?

Alice. La main? elle est appellée, de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et le doigt?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foy, je oublie les doigts; mais je ne souviendray. Les doigts? je pense, qu'ils sont appellés, de fingres; ouy, de fingres.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres. Je pense, que je suis le bon escolier. J'ay gagné deux mots d'Anglois virement. Comment appelez-vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? les appellons, de nails.

Kath. De nails. Escoutez; dites moy, si je parle bien; de hand, de fingres, de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglois.

Kath. Dites moy en Anglois, le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude.

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la reptition de tous les mots, que vous m'avez appris d'ici à present.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Exercisez moy, Alice: escoutez: De hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu! je m'en oublie; De elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De neck: Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de neck; le menton, de sin.

Alice. Ouy. Sauf vostre honneur, et verité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droict que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu: et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ay enseigné?

Kath. Non, je reciteray à vous promptement. De hand, de fingre, de nails,— Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arme, de ilbow.

Alice. Sauf vostre honneur, de elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis je; de elbow, de neck, et de sin; Comment appelez-vous les pieds et la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame: et de con.

Kath. De foot, et de con? O Seigneur Dieu; ces sont mots de son mauvais, corruptible, grosse, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user: Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, et de con, neant-moins. Je reciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: De hand, de fingre, de con, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de neck, de sin, de foot, de con.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois; allons nous à diner. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter the French KING, the DAUPHIN, DUKE of BOURBON, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain, he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought with my lord,

Let us not live in France; let us quit all,

And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of,—

The emptiness of our fathers' luxuries,

Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,

Spurt up so suddenly into the clouds,
And overlook their grafters?

Bour. Normans, but hastard Normans, Norman bastards! if they march alog [tards! Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom, To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?

Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull?

On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale.

Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sudden water,

A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley broth,

Decoet their cold blood to such valiant heat?

And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,

Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land,

Let us not hang like roping icicles

Upon our houses' thatch, whilst a more frosty people

Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields;

Poor—we may call them, in their native lords.

Dau. By faith and honour,

Our madams mock at us; and plainly say,

Our mettle is bred out; and they will give

Their bodies to the lust of English youth,

To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us—to the English dancing-schools,

And teach lavoltes high, and swift corantos;

Saying, our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjô, the herald? speed him hence;

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.—

Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edged,

More sharper than your swords, hie to the field:

Charles De-lach-rete, high constable of France;

You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,

Aleçon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;

Jaques Chastillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,

Beaumont, Graudpré, Roussi, and Enconberg,

Poix, Lestrale, Boucqualt, and Charolais;

High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,

For your great seats, now quit you of great shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land

With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur:

Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow

Upon the valleys; whose low vassal seat

The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon:

Go down upon him,—you have never enough,—

And in a captive chariot, into Roüen

Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,

His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march;

For, I am sure, when he shall see our army,

He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,

And, for achievement, offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Mont-

And let him say to England, that we send [jô];

To know what willing ransom he will give.—

Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Roüen.

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us,—

Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all:

And quickly bring us word of England's fall. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter GOWER and FLUELLEN.

Gow. How now, captain Fluellen? come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent service committed at the bridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man, that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my livings, and my uttermost powers; he is not (God be praised and pleased!) any hurt in the world; but keeps the pride most valiantly, with excellent discipline.

There is an ensigu there at the bridge.—I think, in my very conscience, he is as valiant as Mark

Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world:

but I did see him do gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is call'd—ancient Pistol!

Gow. I know him not.

Enter PISTOL.

Flu. Do you not know him? Here comes the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours:

The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound at heart,
Of buxom valour, hath,—by cruel fate,
And godly fortune's furious fickle wheel,
That goddess blind,

Th' stands upon the rolling restless stone,— Flo. By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is painted blind, with a muffer before her eyes, to signify to you, that fortune is blind: And she is painted also with a wheel; to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and variations, and mutabilities: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls.—In good truth, the poet is make a most excellent description of fortune: fortune, look you, is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him;
For he hath stolen a pair, and hanged must 'a be.
A damned death!

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free;
And let not hemph his wind-pipe suffocate;
But Faeter hath given the doom of death,
For pair of little price.

Therefore, go speak, the duke will hear thy voice;
And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach:

Speak, captivo, for his life, and I will thee requite

Flo. Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then rejoice therefore.

Flo. Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to executions; for disciplines ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damn'd; and figo for thy friendship!

Flo. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! [Exit Pistol.

Flo. Very good.

Gow. Why this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I remember him now; a bawd; a cutpurse.

Flo. I'll assure you, 'a utter'd as prave 'ords at the pridge, as you shall see in a summer's day: But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue; that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself, at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote, where services were done;
—at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they con perfectly in the phrase of war, which they triek up with new-tuned oaths: And what a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful to be thought on! but you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellous mistook.

Flo. I tell you what, captain Gowen.—I do perceive, he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the 'orld he is; if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming; and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.

Flo. Got bless your majesty!

K. Hen. How how, Fluellen? camest thou from the bridge?

Flo. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: the French is gone off, look you; and there is gallant and most prave passages: Marry, th' adversary was have possession of the pridge: but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell you majesty, the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flo. The perdition of th' adversary hath been very great, very reasonable great; marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire; and his lips pious at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue, and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off:
—and we give express charge, that, in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for; none of the French upbraided, or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket sounds. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then, I know thee: What shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Ufoid it.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep:
Advantage is a better soldier, than rashness. Tell him, we could have rebuked him at Harfleur; but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe:—now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add—defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,

And tell thy king,—I do not seek him now;

But could be willing to march on to Calais

Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth,

(Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage)

My people are with sickness much infebled;

My numbers lessen'd; and those few I have,

Almost no better than so many French;

Who, when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,

I thought, upon one pair of English legs,

Did march three Frenchmen.—Yet, forgive me, God,

That I do brag thus!—thou air of France

Hath blown that vice in me; I must repeat.

Go, therefore, tell thy master, here I am;

My ransom, is this frail and worthless trunk;

My army, but a weak and sickly guard;

Yet, God before, tell him we will come on,

Though France himself, and such another neighbour,

Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy:

Go, bid thy master well advise himself;

If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd,

We shall your tawny ground with your red blood

Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.

The sum of all our answer is but this:

We would not seek a battle, as we are;

Nor, as we are, we say, we will not shun it:

So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

[Exit Montjoy.

Glo. I hope, they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

March to the bridge; it now draws toward night—

Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves;

And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Re-enter.

SCENE VII.—The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord RAM-BURES, the Duke of ORLEANS, the DAUPHIN,
and others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world.—
'Would, it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour,—

Orl. You are as well provided of both, as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns.
Ca. ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs: le cheval volant, the Pegasus, qui a les narines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus; he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him;

he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call—beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys: his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: Honder of nature,—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress hears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Mafoy! the other day, methought, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O! then, belike, she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a kerne of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait trowsers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs; I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears her own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au boubier: thou unkest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.

Ran. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars, or suns, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously; and 'twere more honour, some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises: who would trot as well, were some of your brags dimounted.

Dau. 'Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: But I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ran. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty English prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight, I'll go arm myself. [Exit.]

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ran. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think, he will eat all he kills.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant piece.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the cath.

Orl. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity: and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow; he will keep that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told that, by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he.

Con. Marry, he told me so himself: and he said, he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not, it is an hidden virtue in him.

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it, but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will bate.

Orl. It will never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with—There is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with—Give the devil his due.

Con. Well placed; there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb, with—A pox of the devil.

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much—A fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tent.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The lord Grandpré.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning, as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ran. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orl. Foolish curs! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples: You may as well say,—that's a valiant flea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and then give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then we shall find to-morrow—they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm. Come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but let me see,—by ten, We shall have each a hundred Englishmen. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time,
When creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face:
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs
Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents,
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name,
Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad,
Investing lank-lean cheeks, and war-worn coats,
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will behold
The royal captain of this ruin'd band,
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes, and visits all his host;
Bids them good-morrow, with a modest smile;
And calls them—brothers, friends, and countrymen
Upon his royal face there is no note,
How dread an army hath enrouned him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night:
But freshly looks, and over-bears attaint,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,

A little touch of Harry in the night;
And so our scene must to the hattle fly;
Where, (O for pity!) shall we much disgrace—
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill disposed, in brawl ridiculous,—
The name of Agincourt: Yet, sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries be.

[Exit.

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter KING HENRY, BEDFORD, and GLOSTER.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true, that we are in great danger:

The greater therefore should our courage be.
Good-morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out;
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful and good husbandry;
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all; admonishing,
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Good-morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:

A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.
Erp. Not so, my liege; this lodging likes me better,
Sir, so I may say.—Now lie I like a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains,
Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And, when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity.
Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers both,
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good-morrow to them; and, anon,
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege. [Exit Glo. and Bedf.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. Go with my brothers to my lords of England;
I and my boon must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

[Exit.

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart, thou speakest cheerfully

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me: Art thou officer?

Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trailest thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so: What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.
K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.
Pist. The king's a hawkcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame;

Of parents good, of fist most valiant;
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-strings
I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Harry le Roy.

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Knowest thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate,
Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The figo for thee, then.

K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called. [Exit.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Chesu Christ, speak lower,
it is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and ancient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept; if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle, or pibble pabble, in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the care of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you heard him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass, and a fool, and a prating cockcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should noise, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating cockcomb;
in your own conscience we now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter BATES, COURT, and WILLIAMS.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning, which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: hut we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but,
I think, we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes
there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

K. Hen. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think, the king is hut a man, as I am: the violet smells to him, as it doth to me: the element shews to him, as it doth to me: all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears hut a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing;
therefore, when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, he of the same relish as ours are:
Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by shewing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may shew what outward courage he will;
hut, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king; I think he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then 'would he were here alone: so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone; howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds: Methinks, I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects;
if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes
the crime of it out of us.

Will. But, if the cause be not good, the king himself bath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all—We died at such a place; some, swearing; some, crying for a surgeon;
some, upon their wives left poor behind them; some,
upon the debts they owe; some, upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king, that led them to it; whom to disobey, were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the reputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father, that sent him; or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation.—But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arming of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished, for before-breach of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and, where they would be safe, they perish. Then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill is upon his own head, the king is not to answer for it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say, he would not be raisomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but, when our throats are cut, he may be raisomed, and we use not the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. 'Mass, you'll pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch! you may as well go about to turn the sun to ice, with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 'tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproff is something too round; I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any pike of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove; give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap; if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends; we have French quarrels enough, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us: for they bear them on their shoulders: But it is no English treason, to cut French crowns; and, to-morrow, the king himself will be a clipper.

[Exeunt Soldiers.]

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls,

Our debts, our careful wives, our children, and

Our sins, lay on the king;—we must bear all.

O hard condition! twin-born with greatness,

Subjected to the breath of every fool,

Whose sense no more can feel but his own wringing!

What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect,

That private men enjoy!

And what have kings, that private have not too,

Save ceremony, save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth!

What is the soul of adoration?

Art thouught else but place, degree, and form,

Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy being fear'd

Than they in fearing?

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,

But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great griefness,

And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!

Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Canst thou, when thou command'st the heggar's knees,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud dress,

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose,

I am a king, that find thee; and I know,

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The enter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,

The farced tilt running 'fore the king,

The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore of this world,

No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,

Not all these, laid in bed majestical,

Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave;

Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread;

Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;

But, like a lackey, from the rise to set,

Sweats in the eye of Phoebus, and all night

Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn

Doth rise, and help Hyperion to his horse;

And follows on the ever-running year

With profitable labour, to his grave:

And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,

Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,

Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.

The slave, a member of the country's peace,

Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wote,

What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,

Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight,

Collect them all together at my tent;

I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do't, my lord. [Exit]

K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts!

Possess them not with fear; take from them now

The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers

Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord,

O not to-day, think not upon the fault

My father made in compassing the crown!

I Richard's body have interred new;

And on it have bestow'd more coitrite tears,

Than from it issued forc'd drops of blood.

Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,

Who twice a-day their wither'd hands hold up

Toward Heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built

Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests

Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;

Though all that I can do, is nothing worth;

Since that my penitence comes after all,

Imploiring pardon.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. My liege!

K. Hen. My brother Gloster's voice?—Ay;

I know thy errand, I will go with thee:—

The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—The French Camp.

Enter Dauphin, ORLEANS, RAMBURES, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords.

Dau. Montez à cheval!—My horse! valet! laquey!

Orl. O brave spirit! [Exit]

Dau. Via!—les eaux et la terre!

Orl. Rien plus! l'air et le feu!

Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans.—

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh.

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides;

That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,

And dout them with superfluous courage: Ha!

Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses'

blood?

How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!

Do but behold you poor and starv'd band,

And your fair show shall suck away their souls,

Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

There is not work enough for all our hands.

Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins.

To give each naked curtle-axe a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys, and our peasants,—
Who, in unnecessary action, swarm
About our squares of battle,—were enough
To purge this field of such a hiding foe;
Though we, upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonance, and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall couch down in fear, and yield.

Enter GRANDPRÉ.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their boncs,
Ill-favour'dly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.
Their horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their beads, dropping the hides and hips;
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes;
And in their pale dull mouths the gimball bit
Lies foul with chewed grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shews itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guard: On, to the field:
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter the English Host, GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, SALISBURY, and WESTMORE-LAND.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exc. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.

Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
God be wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully,—my noble lord of Bedford,—
My dear lord Gloster,—and my good lord Exeter,—
And my kind kinsman,—warriors all, adieu!

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee.

Exc. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art framed of the firm truth of valour.

[Exit Salisbury.]
Bed. He is as full of valour, as of kindness;
Princely in both.

West. O that we now had here

Enter KING HENRY.

But one ten thousand of those men in England,
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland?—No, my fair cousin:
If we are marked to die, we are enough
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;
Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost;
It yearns me not, if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But, if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.

No, 'faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,
As one man more, methinks, would share from me,
For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more:
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,

That he, who hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian:
He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He, that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,
And say to-morrow is Saint Crispian:
Then will he strip his sleeve, and shew his scars,
And say, these wounds I had on Crispian's day.
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember, with advantages,
What feats he did that day: Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouths as household words,—
Harry the king, Bedford, and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd:
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered:
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he, to-day, that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; and be ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition:
And gentlemen in England, now a-bed,
Shall think themselves accursed, they were not here;
And hold their manhoods cheap, while any speaks,
That fought with us upon Saint Crispian's day.

Enter SALISBURY.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed
The French are bravely in their battles set,
And will with all expedience charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now!

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England?

West. God's will, my liege, 'would you and I alone,

Without more help, might fight this battle out!

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;

Which likes me better, than to wish us one.—
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King of France.

If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured overthrow,
For, certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be engulged. Besides, in mercy,
The Constable desires thee—thou wilt mind
Thy followers of repentance; that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where (wretches) their poor bodies
Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back;

Bid them achieve me, and then sell my bones.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?

The man, that once did sell the lion's skin

While the beast lived, was kill'd with hunting him.

A many of our bodies shall, no doubt,

Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,

Shall witness live in brass of this day's work;

And those, that leave their valiant bones in France,

Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,

They shall be famed; for there the sun shall set them,

And draw their honours reeking up to heaven;

Leaving their earthly parts to choke your climate.

The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,

That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,

Break out into a second course of mischief,

Killing in relapse of mortality.

Let me speak proudly.—Tell the Constable,

We are but warriors for the working day;

Our gayness, and our gilt, are all besmirch'd

With rainy marching in the painful field;

There's not a piece of feather in our host,

(Good argument, I hope, we shall not fly.)

And time hath worn us into slovenry;

But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;

And my poor soldiers tell me—set ere night

They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck

The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,

And turn them out of service. If they do this,

(As, if God please, they shall,) my ransom then Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour; Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald: They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints: Which if they have as I will leave 'em to them, Shall yield them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well: Thou never shalt hear herald any more. [Exit.]
K. Hen. I fear, thou'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter the DUKE OF YORK.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg The leasing of the ward.

K. Hen. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers, march away:—
And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Alarums. Eruptions. Enter French Soldier, PISIOL, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur.

Fr. Sol. Je pense, que vous estes le gentilhomme de bonne qualite.

Pist. Quality, call you me?—Construe me, art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss.

Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O, signieur Dew should be a gentleman:—Perpend my words, O signieur Dew, and mark:—O signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox, Except, O signieur, thou do give to me Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sol. O, prenez misericorde! ayez pitié de moy!

Pist. My shall not serve, I will have forty moys;—For I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat, In drops of crimson blood. [bras?]

Fr. Sol. Est il impossible d'eschapper la force de ton pist. Brass, cur!

Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,

Offer'st me brass?

Fr. Sol. O, pardonnez moy!

Pist. Say'st thou me so? Is that a ton of moys Come hither, boy; Ask me this slave in French, What is his name.

Boy. Escoutez: Comment estes vous appelle?

Fr. Sol. Monstieur le Fer.

Boy. He says, his name is—master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and firr him, and ferret him:—discuss the same in French unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firr.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monstieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites vous prest: car ce soldat icy est disposé tout à cette heure de couper vostre gorge.

Pist. Ouy, couper gorge, par ma foy, pesant, Unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns; Or manueled shall thou be by this my sword.

Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison; gardez ma vie, et je vous donneray deux cents escus.

Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and, for his ransom, he will give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him, my fury shall abate, and I The crowns will take.

Fr. Sol. Petit monstieur, que dit-il?

Boy. Eneore qu'il est contre son jurement, de pardonner aucun prisonnier; neantmoins, pour les escus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberte, le franchisement.

Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux, je vous donne mille remerciemens: et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier. Je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très distingué seigneur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound unto me, boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of (as he thinks) the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signieur of England.

Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy shew.—Follow me, cur. [Exit Pistol.]

Boy. Suivez vous le grand capitaine.

[Exit French Soldier.]
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true,—The empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolph, and Nym, had ten times more valour than this roaring devil! the old play, that every one may pair his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. I must stay with the laces, with the luggage of our camp: The French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it but boys. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, BOURBON, Constable, RAMBURES, and others.

Con. O diable!

Orl. O seigneur!—le jour est perdu, tout est perdu!

Dau. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame

Sits mocking in our plumes.—O meschante fortune!

Do not run away. [A short alarum.]

Con.

Why, all our ranks are broke.

Dau. O perdurable shame!—let's stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?

Bour. Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but shame

Let us die instant: Once more back again!

And he that will not follow Bourbon now,

Let him go hence, and, with his cap in hand,

Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door,

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,

His fairest daughter is contaminate.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us now!

Let us, in heaps, go offer up our lives

Unto these English, or else die with fame.

Orl. We are enough, yet living in the field,

To smother up the English in our throats,

If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the throng;

Let life be short; else, shame will be too long.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter KING HENRY and Forces; EXETER, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we doue, thrice valiant countrymen:

But all's not done, yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The Duke of York commends him to your majesty. [hour.]

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice, within this I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;

From helmet to the spur, all blood he was.

Exe. In which array (brave soldier) doth he lie,

Larding the plain: and by his bloody side,

(Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,)

The noble earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died; and York, all haggled over,

Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,

And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes,

That bloodily did yawn upon his face:

And cries aloud,—Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk.

My soul shall thine keep company to heaven:

Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly a-breast;

As, in this glorious and well-foughten field,

We kept together in our chivalry!

Upon these words I came, and cheer'd him up:

He smiled me in the face, caught me his hand,

And, with a feeble gripe, says—Dear my lord,

Commend my service to thy sovereign.

So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck

He threw his wounded arm and kiss'd his lips;

And so, espoused to death, with blood he seal'd

A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forced

Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd;

But I had not so much of man in me,

But all my mother came into my eyes,

And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen.

I blame you not;

For, hearing this, I must perforce compound

With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—[Alarum.]

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?

The French have reinforced their scatter'd men:—

Then every soldier kill his prisoners;

Give the word through.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Flu. Kill the boys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offered in the world: In your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain, there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals, that ran from 'the battle, have done this slaughter; besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king, most worthily, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, captain Gower: What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think, Alexander the Great was born in Macedon; his father was called—Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think, it is in Macedon where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—If you look in the maps of the world, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye, at Monmouth; but it is out of my brains, what is the name of the other river: but 'tis all one, 'tis so like as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, (God knows, and you know,) in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicated in his brains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his best friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that; he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take tales out of my mouth, ere it is made an end and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: As Alexander is kill his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, is turn away the fat knight with the great pelly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I am forget his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: I can tell you, there is good men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter KING HENRY with a part of the English Forces; WARWICK, GLOSTER, EXETER, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France, 'Til this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald; Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill; If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field; they do offend our sight; If they'll do neither, we will come to them; And make them skirr away, as swift as stones Enforc'd from the old Assyrian slings; Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have; And not a man of them, that we shall take, Shall taste our mercy.—Go, and tell them so.

Enter MONTJOY.

Ere. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they used to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald? know'st thou not,

That I have fined these honours of mine for ransom? Comest thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king:

I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field,
To hook our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men;
For many of our princes (wo the while!)
Lie down'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
(So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes;) and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and, with wild rage,
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not, if the day be ours, or no;
For yet a many of our horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength for it!

What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it—Agin-court.

K. Hen. Then call we this—the field of Agincourt.
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an 't please your majesty, and your great uncle Edward the black Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most brave pattle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable badge of the service; and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon St. Davy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour:

For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh blood out of your body, I can tell you that: Got pless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Chesu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him;

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead

On both our parts.—Call vnder fellow luther.

[Points to Williams. Ereunt Montjoy and others.]

Ere. Soldier you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An 't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An 't please your majesty, a rascal, that swagedered with me last night; who, if 'a live, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or, if I can see my glove in his cap, (which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, if alive,) I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an 't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Beelzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jaek-sauce, as ever his black shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain; and is good knowledge and literature in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege.

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap: When Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost love me.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honours as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once; an please God of his grace, that I might see it.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to me, tout.

Flu. I will fetch him.

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, and my brother Follow Fluellen closely at the heels: [Glaster,

The glove, which I have given him for a favour, May, haply, purchase him a box o' the ear;

It is the soldier's; I, by bargain, should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:

If that the soldier strike him, (as, I judge By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word,)

Some sudden mischief may arise of it;

For I do know Fluellen valiant,

And, touch'd with cholera, hot as gunpowder,

And quickly will return an injury :
Follow, and see there be no harm between them.—
Go you with me, uncle Exeter. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry's Pavilion.

Enter GOWER and WILLIAMS.

Will. I warrant, it is to knight you, captain.

Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I pesech you now, come apace to the king; there is more goot toward you, peradventure, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it.

[Strikes him.]

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant traitor, as any's in the univers' world, or in France, or in England.

Gow. How now, sir? you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, captain Gower; I will give treason his partment into plovms, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him; he's a friend of the duke Alençon's.

Enter WARWICK and GLOSTER.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is (praised be Got for it!) a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is liis majesty.

Enter KING HENRY and EXETER.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain, and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove, which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he, that I gave it to in change, promised to wear it in his cap; I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, (saving your majesty's manhood,) what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave it is: I hope, your majesty is pear me testimony, and witness, and avouchments, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now.

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier; Look, here is the fellow of it. 'Twas I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike; and thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my liege, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns.

And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow;

And wear it for an honour in thy cap,
Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns:—
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly:—Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you to serve Got, and keep you out of prawls, and pubbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the petter for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a goot will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: Come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 'tis a goot silling I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald; are the dead numbered?

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French.

[Delivers a paper.]

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken, uncle?

Exe. Charles duke of Orleans, nephew to the king; John duke of Bourbon, and lord Bouciquault: Of other lords, and barons, knights, and 'squires, Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French.

That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number, And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead One hundred twenty-six: added to these, Of knights, 'squires, and gallant gentlemen, Eight thousand and four hundred: of the which, Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights: So that, in these ten thousand they have lost, There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries; The rest are—princes, barons, lords, knights, 'squires, And gentlemen of blood and quality.

The names of those their nobles that lie dead,— Charles D'Albret, high constable of France; Jaques de Chastillon, admiral of France;

The master of the cross-bows, lord Ramhurs; Great-master of France, the brave Sir Guischard Dauphin;

John duke of Alençon; Antony duke of Brabant,

The brother to the duke of Burgundy;

And Edward duke of Bar: of lusty erls,

Grandpré, and Roussi, Fauconberg, and Foix,

Beaumont, and Marle, Vaudemont, and Lestrail.

Here was a royal fellowship of death!—

Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herald presents another paper.]

Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk,

Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam, require:

None else of name; and, of all other men,

But five and twenty. O God, thy arm was here,

And not to us, but to thy arm alone,

Ascribe we all.—When, without stratagem,

But in plain shock, and even play of battle,

Was ever known so great and little loss,

On one part and on th'other?—Take it, God,

For it is only thine! 'Tis wonderful!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village;

And be it death proclaimed through our host,

To hoast of this, or take that praise from God,

Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledg-

That God fought for us. [Exit.]

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great goot.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites:

Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum.

The dead with charity enclosed in clay,

We'll then to Calais; and to England then;

Where ne'er from France arrived more happy men.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter Chorus.

Cho. Vouchsafe to those, that have not read the story,

That I may prompt them: and of such as have,

I humbly pray them to admit the excuse

Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,

Which cannot in their huge and proper life

Be here presented. Now we hear the king

Toward Calais; grant him there; there seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts,

Athwart the sea: Behold, the English beach

Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,

Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,

Which, like a mighty whiffler fore the king,

Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,

And, solemnly, see him set on to London.

So swift a pace hath thought, that even now

You may imagine him upon Blackheath:

Where that his lords desire him, to have borne

His bruised helmet, and his bended sword,

Before him, through the city: he forbids it,

Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;

Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent,

Quite from himself, to God. But now behold,

In the quick forge and working-house of thought,

How London doth pour out her citizens!

The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort,—

Like to the senators of the antique Rome,

With the plebeians swarming at their heels,—

Go forth, and fetch their conquering Cæsar in:

As, by a lower but by loving likelihood,

Were now the general of our gracious empress

(As, in good time, he may) from Ireland coming,
 Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
 How many would the peaceful city quit,
 To welcome him? much more, and much more causa,
 Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
 (As yet the lamentation of the French
 Invites the king of England's stay at home:
 The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
 To order peace between them;) and omit
 All the occurrences, whatever chanced,
 Till Harry's back-return again to France;
 There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
 The interim, by remembering you 'tis past.
 Then brook abridgment; and your eyes advance
 After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—France. An English Court of Guard.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and whore-fora in all things: I will tell you as my friend, captain Gower; the rascally, scald, baggarly, lousy, praging knave, Pistol, — which you and yourself, and all the 'orld, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits, — he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not breed no contentions with him; but I will be so pold as to wear it in my cap, till I see him once again, and then I will tall him a little piece of my desires.

Enter PISTOL.

Gow. Why, hera he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks. — Got pless you, ancient Pistol: you scurvey, lousy knave, Got pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou Bedlam? Dost thou thirst, base To have me fold up Parca's fatal web? [Trojan, Hence! I am qualmsish at the smell of leek.]

Flu. I pesech you heartily, scurvey, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. (Strikes him.) Will you be so goat, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals; come, there is sauce for it. (Striking him again.) You called me yesterday, mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squira of low degree. I pray you, fall to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain; you have astonisbed him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days: — Pite, I pray you; it is goot for your green wound, and your bloody cockcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly; and out of doubt, and out of questions too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge; I eat, and eke I swear —

Flu. Eat, I pray you: Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much goot do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is goot for your broken cockcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at them; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot: — Hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat!

Flu. Yes, verily, and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groat, in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in cudges; you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.]

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, — begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour, — and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well. [Exit.]

Pist. Doth fortuna play the huswife with me now? News have I, that my Nell is dead 'till she spital Of malady of France; And there my rendezvous is quite cut off. Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs Honour is cudgell'd. Well, bawd will I turn, And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand. To England will I steal, and there I'll steal: And patches will I gat upon these scars, And swear, I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter at one door, KING HENRY, REDFORD, GLOSTER, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and other Lords; at another, the French King, QUEEN ISABELL, the PRINCESS KATHARINE, Lords, Ladies, &c. the Duke of BURGUNDY, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met! Unto our brother France, — and to our sister, Health and fair time of day: — joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine; And (as a branch and member of this royalty, By whom this great assembly is contrived,) We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy: — And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England; fairly met: — So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England, Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering basilisks: The venom of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their quality; and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you. Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great kings of France and England! That I have labour'd

With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness. Since then my office hath so far prevail'd, That, face to face, and royal eye to eye, You have congregated; let it not disgrace me, If I demand, before this royal vlaw,

What rub, or what impediment, there is, Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace, Dear nurse of arts, plenty, and joyful births, Should not, in this best garden of the world, Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage?

Alas! she hath from France too long been chased; And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corrupting in its own fertility;

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart, Unpruned dies; her beeches even-pleach'd, — Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,

Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow lies The daniel, henlock, and rank fumitory,

Doth root upon; while that the coulter rusts, That should deracinate such savagers:

The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,

Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank, Conceives by idleness; and nothing teems,

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs, Losing both beauty and utility,

And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges, Defective in their natures, grow to wildness;

Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children, Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time, The sciences that should become our country;

But grow, like savages, — as soldiers will, — To nothing do but meditate on blood, — To swearing, and stern looks, d-fused attire, And every thing that seems unnatural,

Which to reduce into our former favour, You are assembled: and my speech entreats,

That I may know the let, why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Hen. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenuous and particular effects
You have, enchevered briefly, in your hands.

Eur. The king hath heard them; to the which, as yet,

There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urged, lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'er glanced the articles; please th' your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will, suddenly,

Pass our accept, and peremptory answer.
K. Hen. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle Exeter,—
And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Gloucester,—
Warwick,—and Huntingdon,—so with the king:
And take with you free power, to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageous for our dignity,
Any thing in, or out of, our demands;
And we'll consign thereto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?

Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them;
Haply, a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles, too nicely urged, be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us;
She is our capital demand, comprised
Within the foremost of our articles.

Q. Isab. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all but Henry, Katharine, and her Gentlewoman.]

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair!
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle-heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez moy, I cannot tell what is—like me.
K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?
Alice. Ouy, vraiment, (sauf vostre grace,) ainsi dit-il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines des tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Ouy; dat de tongues de mans is he full of deceits: dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better English-woman.
I' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding:
I am glad, thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou wouldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king, that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love you; then, if you urge me farther than say—Do you in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i' faith do; and so clap hands and a bargain: How say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, me understand well.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leapfrazz, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken,
I should quickly leap into a wife. Or, if I might huffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jacksnape, never off: but, before God, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee, plain soldier: If thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee—that I shall die, is true; but—for thy love, by the lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for be, p'rforce, must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours,—they do always reason themselves out again. What a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and moon; or, rather, the sun, and not the moon; for it shines bright, and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: And take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: And what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible that I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France; but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it: I will have it all mine; and, Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell what is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which, I am sure, will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Quand j'ay la possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi, (let me see, what then? Saint Dennis is my speed!)—done vostre est France, et vous estes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom, as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, le Francois que vous parlez, est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, 'faith, is't not, Kate; but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Caust thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know, thou lovest me; and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to her, dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart; but, good Kate, mock me mercifully;
the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly.
If ever thou be'st mine, Kate, (as I have a saving faith within me, tells me,—thou shalt,) I get thee with scambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder: Shall not thou and I, between Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a boy half French, half English, that shall go to Constantiople, and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis heretofore to know, but now to promise:
do; but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy; and for my English moiety, take the word of a king, and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très cher et digne déesse?

Kath. Your majesty ave fausse French enough to deceive de sage dame damoiselle dat is en France.

K. Hen. Now, 'y upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate; by which honour I dare not swear, thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now, heshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me; therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the older I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill-layer up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face; thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better; and therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the look of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bleed mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English. Will thou have me?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall please de roy mon pere.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I will kiss your hand, and I call you—my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma toy, je ne veur point que vous abaissez vostre grandeur, en baisant la main d'une vostre indigne serviteur; excusez moy, je vous supplie, mon très puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames, et damoiselles, pour estre baisées devant leur nopces, il n'est pas le coûtume de France.

K. Hen. Madam my interpreter, what says she?

Alice. Dat it is not be de fashion pour les ladies of France.—I cannot tell what is, baiser, en English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre bettere que moy.

K. Hen. It is not the fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Ouy, vrayment.

K. Hen. O Kate, nice customs cur'tis to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion; we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouths of all find-faults; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country, in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently, and yielding. (Kissing her.) You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Enter the French King and Queen, BURGUNDY, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, EXETER, WEST-MORELAND, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz; and my condition is not smooth: so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle: if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind. Can you blame her, then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self. It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to conigiu to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield; as love is blind, and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent to winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning; for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time, and a hot summer; and so I will catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so; and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness; who cannot see many a fair French city, for our fair French maid, that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls, that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid, that stood in the way of my wish, shall shew me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter, first; and then, in sequel, all, According to their firm proposéd natures.

Erc. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—Where your majesty demands,—That the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French,—Notre très cher filz Henry roy d'Angleterre, heritier de France; and thus in Latin,—Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus, rex Anglia, et hæres Francie.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance, Let that one article rank with the rest: And, thereupon, give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up

Issue to me: that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores look pale With envy of each other's happiness, May cease their hatred; and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhoood and christian-like accord In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me witness all, That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

(Flourish.)

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So he there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal, That never may ill office, or fell jealousy, Which troubles off the bed of blessed marriage, Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms, To make divorce of their incorporate league: That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receive each other!—God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage:—on which day, My lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peers, for surety of our leagues.—Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

[Exeunt.]

Enter Chorus.

Thus far, with rough, and all unable pen,
Our bending author hath pursued the story;
In little room confining mighty men,
Maugling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but, in that small, most greatly lived
This star of England: fortune made his sword;
By which the world's best garden he achieved,
And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown'd king
Of France and England, did this king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage has shewn; and, for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take. [Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead march. Corps of KING HENRY the Fifth discovered, lying in state; attended on by the Dukes of BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and EXETER; the Earl of WARWICK, the Bishop of WINCHESTER, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Broadish your crystal tresses in the sky;
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars,
That have consented unto Henry's death!
Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long!
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king, until his time.
Virtue he had, deserving to command;
His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Thou mid-day sun, fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne'er lift up his hand, but conquer'd.

Exe. We mourn in black: Why mourn we not in Henry is dead, and never shall revive: [blood?]
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death's dishonourable victory
We with our stately presence glorify.
Like captives bound to a triumphant car,
What? shall we curse the planets of mishap,
That plotted thus our glory's overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses have contrived his end?

Win. He was a king, o'ers'd of the King of kings.
Unto the French the dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.

The battles of the Lord of Hosts he fought:
The church's prayers made him so prosperous.
Glo. The church! where is it? Had not churchmen
His thread of life had not so soon decay'd: [pray'd,
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may overawe.

Win. Gloster, what'er we like, thou art protector;
And lookest to command the prince, and realm.
Thy wife is proud: she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God, or religious churchmen, may.
Glo. Name not religion, for thou lovest the flesh;
And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st.
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds in peace!

Let's to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us:—
Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms;
Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.—
Posterity, await for wretched years,
When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck;
Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears,
And none but women left to wail the dead.—
Henry the Fifth! thy ghost I invoke:
Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make,
Than Julius Cæsar, or bright —

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfort:
Guienne, Champaigne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Guysors, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corse?
Speak softly; or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead, and rise from death.
Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was used?

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.
Among the soldiers this is muttered,—
That here you maintain several factions;
And, whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.
One would have ling'ring wars with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.
Awake, awake, English nobility!
Let not sloth dim your honours, new-begot;
Cromp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exe. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth her flowing tides.
Bed. Me they concern; regent I am of France:—
Give me my steed coat, I'll fight for France.—
Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds I will lend the French, instead of eyes,
To weep their intermissive miseries.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mis-
France is revolted from the English quite; [chance,
Except some petty towns of no import;
The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rhelms;
The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The duke of Alençon fieth to his side.

Exe. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to him!
O, whether shall we fly from this reproach?
Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats—
Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?
An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is over-run.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your laments,
Wherewith you now hedew King Henry's hearse,—
I must inform you of a dismal fight,

Between the stout lord Talbot and the French.
Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?
3 Mess. O, no; wherein lord Talbot was o'erthrown:
The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three and twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon;
No leisure had he to enrank his men;
His wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of bedges,
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.

More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;
Here, there, and every where, enraged he siew;
The French exclaim'd, The devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood amazed on him;
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastoife had not play'd the coward;
He, being in the vaward, (placed behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them,)
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here, in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard fomen is betray'd.

3 Mess. O no, he lives; but is took prisoner,
And lord Seales with him, and lord Hungerford;
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.
Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay:
I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne,
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.—
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal;
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieged;
The English army is grown weak and faint;
The earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny.
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn;
Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take leave,
To go about my preparation. [Exit.

Glo. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry king. [Exit.
Exe. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. [Exit.
Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;
The king from Eltham I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest stern of public war. [Exit. Scene closes.

SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Enter CHARLES, with his Forces; ALENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known:
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.
What towns of any moment, but we have?
At pleasure here we lie, near Orleans;
Otherwhiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull Either they must be dieted like mules, [Gueves:
And have their provender tied to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege: Why live we idly here?
Talbot is taken, where we went to fight:
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gail,
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum: we will rush on them.
Now for the honour of the forlorn French—
Him I forgive my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or fly. [Exeunt.

Alarums; Excursions; aftercards a Retreat.

Re-enter CHARLES, ALENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I?—
Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would ne'er have led,
But that they left me 'midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.

The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.
Alen. Froissard, a countryman of ours, records,
England all Oliver and Rowlands bred,
During the time Edward the Third did reign.]

More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons, and Goliasses,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Lean raw-boned rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity? [slaves,

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd gimballs or device,
Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so, as they do.
By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of ORLEANS.

Bast. Where's the prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.
Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:
A holy maid hinder with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from Heaven,
Ordain'd is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,

Exceeding the nine sibils of old Rome;
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and unfallible.

Char. Go, call her in: [Exit Bastard.] But, first,
to try her skill,

Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern:—
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

(Retires.)

Enter LA PUCELLE, Eastard of ORLEANS,
and others.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do those wondrous feats? [me?—]

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile
Where is the Dauphin?—come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amazed, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart;
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave a while.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,
My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.
Heaven, and our Lady gracious, hath it pleased
To shine on my contemptible estate:
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deign'd to appear to me;
And, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity:
Her aid she promised, and assured success:
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With those clear rays which she infused on me,
That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou darest,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this: Thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms,
Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,—
In single combat thou shalt buckle with me;
And, if thou vanquishest, thy words are true;
Otherwise, I renounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepar'd to bear my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;
The which at Touraine, in Saint Katherine's churchyard,
Out of a deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come of God's name, I fear no woman.

Puc. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.
(They fight.)

Char. Stay, stay thy hand; thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.
Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help
Impatiently I burn with thy desire; [me:]
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant, and not sovereign be;
'Tis the French Dauphin sworth to thee thus.

Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above:

When I have chas'd all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Mean time, look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.
Alen. Doubtless he shrives this woman to her smock:
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know:
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?

Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Puc. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!

Fight till the last gasp; I will be your guard.

Char. What she says, I'll confirm; we'll fight it out.

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.

This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:

Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself.

Till, by broad spreading, it dispense to nought.

With Henry's death, the English circle ends;

Dispers'd are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insulting ship,
Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspir'd with a dove?
Thou with an eagle art inspir'd then.
Helieu, the mother of great Constatine,
Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters, were like thee.
Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,
How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours!

Drive them from Orleans, and he immortalized. [it -
Char. Presently we'll try!—Come, let's away about
No prophet will I trust, if she prove false. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—London. Hill before the Tower.

Enter, at the gates, the DUKE OF GLOSTER, with his serving-men, in blue coats.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day;
Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance.—
Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates; Gloster it is, that calls.

(Servants knock.)

1 Ward. (Within.) Who is there, that knocks so importunely?

1 Serv. It is the noble Duke of Gloster.

2 Ward. (Within.) Whoe'er he be, we may not let him in.

1 Serv. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?

1 Ward. (Within.) The Lord protect him! so we answer him.

We do no otherwise than we are will'd. [mine?]

Glo. Who will'd you; or whose will stands, but There's none protector of the realm, but I.—
Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize;
Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

Servants rush at the Tower gates. Enter to the gates, WOODVILLE, the Lieutenant.

Wood. (Within.) What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?

Open the gates; here's Gloster that would enter.

Wood. (Within.) Have patience, noble duke; I may not open;

The cardinal of Winchester forbids:
From him I have express commandment,
That thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in.

Glo. Fault-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me?
Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate,
Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook?

Thou art no friend to God, or to the king;

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector;

Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quikkly.

Enter WINCHESTER, attended by a train of Servants in tawny coats.

Win. How now, amitious Humphrey, what means this?

Glo. Field-priest, dost thou command me to be shut
Win. I do, thou most usurping proditor, [out?]
And not protector of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;

Thou, that contrivest to murder our dead lord;

Thou, that givest whores indulgences to sin;

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Win. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot;

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,

To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back;

Thy scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth

I'll use to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou darest; I heard thee to thy face.

Glo. What? am I dared, and beard'd to my face?—

Draw men, for all this privileged place;

Blue-coats to tawny-coats. Priest, beware your hear!;

(Gloster and his men attack the Bishop)

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly;

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat;

In spite of pope or dignities of church,

Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down

Win. Gloster, thou'lt answer this before the pope.

Glo. Winchester goose, I cry—a rope! a rope!

Now beat them hence, why do you let them stay?

These I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.—

Out, tawny coats!—out, scarlet hypocrite!

Here a great tumult. In the midst of it, enter the Mayor of London, and Officers.

May. Fr. lords! that son, being supreme megis-
Thus contumeliously should break the peace! [truce,

Glo. Peace, mayor; thou know'st little of my wrongs:

Here 's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king,
Hath here restrain'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here 's Gloster too, a foe to citizens;
One, that still motions war, and never peace;
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines;
That seeks to overthrow religion
Because he is protector of the realm;

And would have armour here out of the Tower,
To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows.
(Here they skirmish again.)

May. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open proclamation—
Come, officer; as loud as'er thou canst.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day, against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use, any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law:
But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet; to thy dear coat, he sure
Thy heart-blood I will have, for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs, if you will not a way.—
This cardinal is more haughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell; thou dost but what thou may'st.

Win. Abominable Gloster! guard thy head:
For I intend to have it ere long. [Exeunt.

May. See, the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.—
Good God! that nohies should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—France. Before Orleans.

Enter, on the walls, the Master-Gunner and his Son.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged,

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,
Howe'er, unfortunate, I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou ruled by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do, to procure me grace.
The prince's espials have inform'd me,
How the English, in the suburbs close trench'd,
Went, through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to overpeer the city;
And thence discover, how, with most advantage,
They may vex us, with shot, or with assault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have placed;
And fully even these three days have I watch'd,
If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,
For I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word;
And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit.

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care;
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

*Enter, in an upper Chamber of a tower, the Lords
SALISBURY and TALBOT, SIR WILLIAM GLANSDALE, SIR THOMAS GARGRAVE,
and others.*

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd!
How wert thou handled, being prisoner?

Or by what means got'st thou to be released?

Discourse, I pry thee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called—the brave Lord Ponton de Santraillies;

For him I was exchanged and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far,

Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me:
Which I, disdainful, scorn'd; and crav'd death

Rather than I would he so piled esteem'd.
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired.

But, O! the treacherous Pastolles wounds my heart!
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If now I had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffs, and scorns, and contumelious
In open market-places produced they me, [taunts.

To be a public spectacle to all;
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scare-crow, that affrights our children so.

Then broke I from the officers that led me;
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground

To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others fly,
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'moigst them was spread,
That they supposed, I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen still I had,
That walk'd about me every minute-while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endured;
But we will be revenged sufficiently.

Now it is supper-time in Orleans;
Here, through this grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify;

Let us look in, the sight will much delight thee.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,

Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our hattery next.

Gar. I think, at the north gate; for there stand lords.

Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge
Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes euefebled.

(Shot from the town. Salisbury and Sir Thomas Gargrave fall.)

Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!

Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woful man!

Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd us?

Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak;
How fares't thou, mirror of all martial men?

One of thy eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!—
Accursed tower! accused fatal hand,

That hath contrived this woful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;

Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,

His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.—
Yet livest thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,

One eye thou hast to look to Heaven for grace
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—

Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!—

Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?

Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;

Thou shalt not die, whiles—
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me;

As who would say, *When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.*—

Plantagenet, I will; and Nero-like,
Play on the lute, beholding the towris burn;

Wretched shall France be only in my name.
(Thunder heard; afterwards an alarm.)

What stir is this? What tumult 's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarm, and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head:

The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,—
A holy prophetess, new risen up,—

Is come with a great power to raise the siege.
(Salisbury groans.)

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan!
It irks his heart, he cannot be revenged.—

Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you!—
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,

Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—

Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what these dasard Frenchmen dare.

[Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.]

SCENE V.—The same. Before one of the Gates.

Alarm. Skirmishings. TALBOT pursueth the Dauphin, and driveth him in; then enter JOAN LA PUCELLE, driving Englishmen before her.

Then enter TALBOT.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force
Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them:

A woman, clad in armour, chaseth them.

Enter LA PUCELLE

Here, here she comes:—I'll have a bout with thee;
Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee;

Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee. (They fight.)

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail? My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage, And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder. But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come: I must go victual Orleans forthwith. O'ertake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength. Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men; Help Salisbury to make his testament: This day is ours, as many more shall be.

(Pucelle enters the Town, with Soldiers.)
Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel; I know not where I am, nor what I do: A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal, Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists: So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench, Are from their hives, and houses, driven away. They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs; Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.

(A short alarm.)
Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight, Or tear the lions out of England's coat; Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead: Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf, Or horse or oxen from the leopard. As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

(Alarm. Another skirmish.)
It will not be:—Retire into your trenches: You all consented unto Salisbury's death, For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans, In spite of us, or aught that we could do. O, would I were to die with Salisbury! The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Alarm. Retreat. Exeunt Talbot and his Forces, &c.]

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter, on the walls, PUCELLE, CHARLES, REIGNIER, ALENCON, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls; Rescued is Orleans from the English wolves:— Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.
Char. Divinest creature, bright Astrea's daughter, How shall I honour thee for this success? Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens, That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.— France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!— Recover'd is the town of Orleans: More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state. [town?]
Reig. Why ring not out the bells throughout the Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires, And feast and banquet in the open streets, To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.
Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and joy, When they shall hear how we have play'd the men.

Char. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won; For which, I will divide my crown with her: And all the priests and friars in my realm Shall, in procession, sing her endless praise. A staller pyramid to her I'll rear, Than Rhodope's, or Memphis', ever was: In memory of her, when she is dead, Her ashes, in an urn, more precious Than the rich jewel'd coffer of Darius, Transported shall be at high festivals Before the kings and queens of France. No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry, But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint. Come in; and let us banquet royally, After this golden day of victory. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter to the Gates, a French Sergeant, and two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant: If any noise, or soldier, you perceive, Near to the walls, by some apparent sign, Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
I Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Ser.] Thus arc poor servitors (When others sleep upon their quiet beds) Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with scaling ladders; their drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord regent,—and redoubted Burgundy,— By whose approach, the regions of Artois, Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us, This happy night the Frenchmen are secure, Having all day caroused and banqueted: Embrace we then this opportunity: As fitting best to quittance their deceit, Contrived by art, and baleful sorcery.
Bcd. Coward of France!—how much he wrongs his fame, Despairing of his own arm's fortitude, To join with witches, and the help of hell.
Bur. Traitors have never other company.— But what's that Pucelle, whom they term so pure?
Tal. A maid, they say.

Bcd. A maid! and be so martial! Bur. Pray God, she prove not masculine, ere long; If underneath the standard of the French, She carry armour, as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits: God is our fortress, in whose conquering name, Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bcd. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.
Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess, That we do make our entrance several ways; That, if it chance the one of us do fail, The other yet may rise against their force.

Bcd. Agreed; I'll to your corner.
Bur. And I to this.
Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.—

Now, Salisbury! for thee, and for the right Of English Henry, shall this night appear How much in duty I am bound to both. (The English scale the walls, crying St George! a Talbot! and all enter by the Town.)
Sent. (Within.) Arm, arm: the enemy doth make assault!

The French leap over the walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, Bastard, ALENCON, REIGNIER, half ready, and half unready.

Alen. How now, my lords? what, all unready so?
Bast. Unready? ay, and glad we've scaped so well.
Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds, Hearing alarms at our chamber doors.
Alen. Of all exploits, since first I follow'd arms, Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise More venturesome, or desperate than this.
Bast. I think, this Talbot be a fiend of hell.
Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.
Alen. Here cometh Charles; I marvel how he sped.

Enter CHARLES and LA PUCELLE.

Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.
Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame? Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal, Make us partakers of a little gain, That now our loss might be ten times so much?
Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend? At all times will you have my power alike? Sleeping, or waking, must I still prevail. Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?— Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good, This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default; That, being captain of the watch to-night, Did look no better to that weighty charge.
Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept, As that whereof I had the government, We had not been thus shamefully surprised.

Bast. Mine was secure. And so was mine, my lord.
Reig. Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night, Within her quarter, and mine own precinct, I was employ'd in passing to and fro, About relieving of the sentinels: Then how, or which way, should they first break in?
Puc. Question, my lords, no farther of the case, How, or which way; 'tis sure, they found some place But weakly guarded, where the breach was made. And now there rests no other shift but this,— To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispersed, And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Alarm. Enter an English Soldier, crying, a Talbot! a Talbot! They fly, leaving their clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left. The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword; For I have loaden me with many spoils, Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled, Whose pitchy mantle o'er-veil'd the earth. Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

(Retreat sounded.)
Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury; And here advance it in the market place, The middle centre of this cursed town. Now have I paid my vow unto his soul; For every drop of blood was drawn from him, There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night. And, that hereafter ages may behold What ruin happen'd in revenge of him, Within their chiefest temple I'll erect A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be interr'd: Upon the which, that every one may read, Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans: The treacherous manner of his mournful death, And what a terror he had been to France. But, lords, in all our bloody massacre, Emuse, we met not with the Dauphin's grace; His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc; Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. 'Tis thought, lord Talbot, when the fight began, Roused on the sudden from their drowsy beds, They did, amongst the troops of armed men, Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself (as far as I could well discern, For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night,) Am sure, I scared the Dauphin, and his trull; When arm in arm they both came swiftly running, Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves, That could not live asunder day or night. After that things are set in order here, We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords: which of this princely train Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts So much applauded through the realm of France?

Tal. Here is the Talbot, who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne, With modesty admiring thy renown, By me entreats, good lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe To visit her poor castle where she lies; That she may boast, she hath beheld the man Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see, our wars Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport. When ladies crave to be encounter'd with.— You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for, when a world of men Could not prevail with all their oratory, Yet hath a woman's kindness overruled:— And therefore tell her, I return great thanks; And in submission will attend on her.— Will not your honours bear me company?

Bed. No, truly: it is more than manners will: And I have heard it said.—Unbidden guests

Are often welcome, when they are gone.— Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy, I mean to prove this lady's courtesy. Come hither, captain. (Whispers.)—You perceive my mind.

Capt. I do, my lord; and mean accordingly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Auvergne. Court of the Castle.

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge; And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.

Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Count. The plot is laid; if all things fall out right, I shall as famous be by this exploit, As Scythian Thomyris by Cyrus' death. Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight, And his achievements of no less account: Pain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears, To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and TALBOT.

Mess. Madam, According as your ladyship desired, By message craved, so is lord Talbot come. Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man? Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France? Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad, That with his name the mothers still their babes? I see, report is fabulous and false: I thought, I should have seen some Hercules, A second Hector, for his grim aspect, And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs. Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf: It cannot be, this weak and writhed shrimp Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you: But, since your ladyship is not at leisure, I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now?—Go ask him whither he goes.

Mess. Stay, my lord Talbot; for my lady craves To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief, I go to certify her, Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter, with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner. Tal. Prisoner: to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord; And for that cause I train'd thee to my house. Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me, For in my gallery thy picture hangs; But now the substance shall endure the like; And I will chain these legs and arms of thine, That hast by tyranny, these many years, Wasted our country, slain our citizens, And sent our sons and husbands captive.

Tal. Ha, ha, ba! [to moon.]

Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow, Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. I am indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself: You are deceived, my substance is not here; For what you see, is but the smallest part And least proportion of humanity:

I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here, It is of such a specious lofty pitch, Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce; He will be here, and yet he is not here:

How can these contrarieties agree? Tal. That will I shew you presently.

He winds a horn. Drums heard; then a peal of ordnance. The gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded, That Talbot is but shadow of himself?

These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength, With which he yoketh your rebellious necks; Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns, And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse: I find, thou art no less than fame hath bruited, And more than may be gather'd by thy shape. Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath; For I am sorry, that with reverence I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake The outward composition of his body.

What you have done hath not offended me: No other satisfaction do I crave,

But only (with your patience) that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have; For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart; and think me honoured To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple Garden.

Enter the Earls of SOMERSET, SUFFOLK, and WARWICK; RICHARD PLANTAGENET, YERNON, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suf. Within the Temple hall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the truth;
Or, else, was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a traitor in the law;
And never yet could frame my will to it;

And, therefore, frame the law unto my will. [Exi.]

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, then between War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;

Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye;
I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment;
But in these nice sharp quilllets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tied, and so loath to speak,

In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts:
Let him, that is a true-born gentleman,

And stands upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him, that is no coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War. I love no colours; and, without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,

I pluck this white rose, with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose, with young Somerset;
And say withal, I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more,
Till you conclude—that he, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well objected;
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale, and maiden blossom here,
Giving my white rose in the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off;
Lest, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: Who else?

Lav. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;

(To Somerset.)

In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here, in my scabbard; meditating that,
Shall die your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing [roses]
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear; but anger,—that thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame, to counterfeit our roses;
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;
Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding roses,

That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy fashion, peevish boy.

Suf. Turn not thy scorn this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole!

We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him,
Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England;
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root?

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus,

Som. By Him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On any plot of ground in Christendom:

Was not thy father, Richard, earl of Cambridge,

For treason executed in our late king's days?

And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,

Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?

His trespass yet lives/guilty in thy blood;

And, till thou be restored, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attached, not attainted;

Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;

And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,

Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.

For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,

I'll note you in my book of memory,

To scourge you for this apprehension:

Look to it well; and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for thee still:

And know us, by these colours, for thy foes;

For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,

As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,

Will I for ever, and my faction, wear;

Until it wither with me to my grave,

Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suf. Go forward, and be choked with thy ambition!

And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exi.]

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious

Richard. [Exi.]

Plan. How I am braved, and must performe endure it

War. This blot, that they object against your house,

Shall be wiped out in the next parliament,

Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster:

And, if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick.

Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset and William Poole,

Will I upon thy party wear this rose:

And here I prophesy,—This brawl to-day,

Grown to this faction, in the Temple garden,

Shall send, between the red rose and the white,

A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,

That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same.

Lav. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us feed to dinner: I dare say,

This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter MORTIMER, brought in a chair by two Keepers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,

Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.—

Even like a man new hal'd from the rack,

So fare my limbs with long imprisonment:

And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death,

Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

These eyes,—like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,—

Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent:

Weak shoulders, overborne with burd'nine grief;

And pithless arms, like to a wither'd vine

That droops his sapless branches to the ground:—

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay.—

Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,

As witting I no other comfort have.—

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

I Keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come.

We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber;

And answer was return'd, that he will come.

Mor. Enough; my soul shall then be satisfied.—

Poor gentleman! his wrong tho' equal mine.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,

(Before whose glory I was great in arms,)—

This loathsome sequestration have I had;

And even since then hath Richard been obscured,

Deprived of honour and inheritance:

But now, the arbitrator of despairs,

Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,

With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence;

I would, his troubles likewise were expired,

That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET.

I Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend? Is he come?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly used,

Your nephew, late-despis'd Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms, I may embrace his neck,

And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:

O, tell me, when my lips do touch his cheeks,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.—
And now declare, sweet steen from York's great stock,
Why didst thou say—of late thou wert despised?

Plan. First, learn thee aged back against mine arm;
And, in that esse, I'll tell thee my disease.
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me:
Among which terms he used his lavish tongue,
And did upbraid me with my father's death;
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him:
Therefore, good uncle,—for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And for alliance sake, declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me,
And hath detain'd me, all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was enerd instrument of his decease.

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was:
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.

Mor. I will; if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Deposed his nephew Richard; Edward's son,
The first-begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:
During whose reign, the Percies of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne:
The reason moved these warlike lords to this,
Was—for that (young King Richard thus removed, Leaving no heir begotten of his body,)
I was the next by birth and parentage;

For by my mother I deriv'd am
From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the third, whereas he
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark; as, in this haughty great attempt,
They labour'd to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,—
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke,—did reign,
Thy father, earl of Cambridge,—then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York,— Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,
Levied an army; weening to redeem
And have install'd me in the diadem:
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True; and thou seest, that I no issue have;
And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Thou art my heir; the rest, I wish thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me:
But yet, methinks, my father's execucion
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic;
Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster,
And, like a mountain, not to be removed.
But now thy uncle is removing hence;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O uncle, 'would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age!

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me; as the slaughterer doth.

Which giveth many wounds, when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only, give order for my funeral;
And so farewell; and fair be all thy hopes!
And prosperous be thy life, in peace and war! (Dies.)

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul!
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.—
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine, let that rest.—
Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.

{Exeunt Keepers, bearing out Mortimer.
Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Choked with ambition of the meener sort:—
And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,—
I doubt not, but with honour to redress;
And therefore haste I to the parliament;
Either to be restor'd to my blood,
Or make my ill the advantage of my good. {Exit

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The Parliament House.

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, GLOSTER, WARWICK, SOMERSET, and SUFFOLK; the Bishop of WINCHESTER, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, and others. GLOSTER offers to put up a bill; WINCHESTER snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Comest thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devised,
Humphrey of Gloster? If thou canst accuse,
Or aught intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention suddenly;
As I, with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience,

Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonor'd me.

Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissentious pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a most periculous usurer;
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well bereems
A man of thy profession and degree;

And for thy treachery, what's more manifest?
In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,

As well at London bridge, as at the Tower?
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouchsafe
To give me hearing what I shall reply.

If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse,
As he will have me, How am I so poor?
Or how happens it I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?

And for dissention, Who preferreth peace
More than I do—except I be provoked?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that, that hath incensed the duke:

It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one but he should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.

But he shall know, I am as good—
Glo. As good?

Thou bastard of my grandfather!—

Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray,
But one impudent in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?

Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!
Glo. Thou art reverent
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

Win. This Rome shall remedy.
War. Roam thither then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.

Som. Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler,
It fitly not a prelate so to prevail.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.

War. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?

Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;
Lest it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should
Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?

Else would I have a ding at Winchester. (Aside.)

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English weal;

I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.

O what a scandal is it to our crown,
That two such noble peers as ye, should jar!

Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.

(A noise within.) Down with the tawny coats!
What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begot through malice of the bishop's men.

(A noise again.) Stones! stones!

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O my good lords,—and virtuous Henry,—
Pity the city of London, pity us!
The bishop and the Duke of Gloster's men,
Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones;
And, banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt so fast at one another's pate,
That many have their giddy brains knock'd out:
Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we, for fear, compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the retainers of Gloster and Winchester, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,
To hold your slaughter'd hands, and keep the peace.
Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we he Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.

Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish broil,
And set this unaccustom'd fight aside.

1 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man
Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,
Inferior to none, but his majesty:

And, ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate.
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.

2 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field, when we are dead.

Glo. (Skirmish again.)
Stay, stay, I say!

And, if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear a while.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!—
Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if you be not?
Or who should study to prefer a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

War. My lord protector, yield—yield, Winchester;—
Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then be at peace, except you thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoop;
Or, I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothed brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern and tragical?

Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

K. Hen. Fy, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach,

That malice was a great and grievous sin:
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gird.—
For shame, my lord of Winchester! relent;
What, shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, Duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee;
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.

Glo. Ay; but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—
See here, my friends and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce,
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers:
So help me God, as I disseminate not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not! (Aside.)

K. Hen. O loving uncle, kind Duke of Gloster,
How joyful am I made by this contract!—
Away, my masters! trouble us no more;

But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content; I'll to the surgeon's.

2 Serv. And so will I.

3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords. [Exeunt Servants, Mayor, &c.]

War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign;
Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet
We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urged, my lord of Warwick;—for, sweet prince,

An if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right:
Especially, for those occasions
At Eitham-place I told your majesty.

K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force:

Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,

That Richard be restor'd to his blood;

War. Let Richard be restor'd to his blood;

So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so willeth Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,

But all the whole inheritance I give.

That doth belong unto the house of York,

From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Plan. Thy humble servant vows obedience,

And humble service, till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my

And, in requerdon of that duty done, [Foot;

I girt thee with the valiant sword of York:

Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet;

And rise created princely Duke of York.

Plan. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall.

And as my duty springs, so perish they

That grudge one thought against your majesty!

All Welcome, high prince, the mighty Duke of York! (Aside.)

Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble Duke of York!

Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,

To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France:

The presence of a king engenders love

Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends;

As it disanimates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, King Henry

For friendly counsel cuts off many foes. [Goes.]

Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Exeunt all but Exeter.]

Exe. Ay, we may march in England, or in France,

Not seeing what is likely to ensue:

This late dissention, grown betwixt the peers,

Burns under feigned ashes of forged love,

And will at last break out into a flame:

As fester'd members rot but by degrees,

Till bones, and flesh, and sinews, fall away,

So will this base and envious discord breed.

And now I fear that fatal prophecy,

Which, in the time of Henry, named the Fifth,

Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,—

That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all;

And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all:

Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish

His days may finish ere that hapless time. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—France. Before Roüen.

Enter LA PUCELLE disguised, and Soldiers dressed like countrymen, with sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Roüen,

Through which our policy must make a breach:

Take heed, be wary how you place your words;

Talk like the vulgar sort of market men,

That come to gather money for their corn.

If we have entrance, (as, I hope, we shall),

And that we find the slothful watch but weak,

I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,

That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,

And we be lords and rulers over Roüen;

Therefore we'll knock. (Knocks.)

Guard. (Within.) Qui est là?

Puc. Paisans, pauvres gens de France:

Poor market folks that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter, go in; the market-bell is rung.

(Opens the gates.)

Puc. Now, Roüen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.

(Pucelle, &c. enter the city.)

Enter CHARLES, Bastard of ORLEANS,

ALENCON, and Forces.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy stratagem!

And once again we'll sleep secure in Roüen.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants;

Now she is there, how will she specify,

Where is the best and safest passage in?

Alen. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower;

Which, once discern'd, shews, that her meaning is,—

No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter LA PUCELLE on a battlement; holding out a torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch,

That joineth Roüen unto her countrymen;

But burning fatal to the Talbotites;

Bast. See, noble Charles! the beacon of our friend,

The burning torch in yonder turret stands.

Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!
Aven. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends;
Enter, and cry—The Dauphin!—presently,
And then do execution on the watch. (They enter.)

Alarums. Enter TALBOT, and certain English.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy
If Talbot but survive thy treachery.— [tears,
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escaped the pride of France.
[Exeunt to the Town.]

*Alarm. Excursions. Enter, from the Town, BED-
FORD, brought in sick, in a chair, with TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES,
Bastard, ALENCON, and others.*

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread?
I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate?
'Twas full of darnel! Do you like the taste?

Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend, and shameless courtesan!
I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Cha. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.
Hed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason!

Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a
And run a tilt at death within a chair? [launce,
Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of all despite,
Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours!
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?
Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy
If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.— [peace;
(Talbot, and the rest, consult together.)

God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?
Tal. Dare ye come forth, and meet us in the field?
Puc. Belike, your lordship takes us then for fools,
To try if that our own be ours, or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,
But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest;
Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?
Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang!—base muleteers of France!
Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls,
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. Captains, away, let's get us from the walls;
For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks.—
God be wi' you, my lord! we came, sir, but to tell you,
That we are here.

[Exeunt La Pucelle, &c. from the walls.]
Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!
Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,
(Preck'd on by public wrongs, sustain'd in France,)
Either to get the town again, or die:
And I,—as sure as English Henry lives,
And as his father here was conqueror;
As sure as in this late-betrayed town
Great Cour-de-lion's heart was buried;
So sure I swear, to get the town, or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.
Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince,
The valiant duke of Bedford:—Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.

Hed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me:
Here will I sit before the walls of Rouën,
And will be partner of your weal, or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.
Hed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read,
That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick,
Came to the field, and vanquished his foes:
Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts,
Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!
Then be it so:—Heavens keep old Bedford safe!
And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,
But gather we our forces out of hand,
And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt Burgundy, Talbot, and Forces, leaving Bedford, and others.]

Alarum. Excursions. Enter SIR JOHN FAS-TOLFE, and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?
Fast. Whither away? to save myself by flight;
We are like to have the overthrow again.

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave lord Talbot?
Fast. Ay.
All the Talbots in the world, to save my life. [Exit.]
Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee! [Exit.]

Retreat. Excursions. Enter from the Town, LA PUCELLE, ALENCON, CHARLES, &c. and exeunt flying.

Hed. Now, quiet soul, depart when Heaven please;
For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They, that of late were daring with their scoffs,
Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.
[Dies, and is carried off in his chair.]

Alarum. Enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and others.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again!
This is a double honour, Burgundy:
Yet, Heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy
Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects
Thy noble deeds, as valour's monument.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle?
I think her old familiar is asleep: [now]
Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?

What, all a-mort? Rouën hangs her head for grief,
That such a valiant company are fled.
Now will we take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers;
And then depart to Paris, to the king;
For there young Harry, with his nobles, lies.

Bur. What wills lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgundy.
Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget
The noble duke of Bedford, late deceased,
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouën;
A braver soldier never couched lance,
A gentleman heart did never sway in court:
But kings, and mightiest potentates, must die;
For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. The Plains near the City

Enter CHARLES, the Bastard, ALENCON, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve, that Rouën is so recovered:
Care is no cure, but rather corrosive;
For things, that are not to be remedied,
Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a peacock sweep along his tail;

We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train,
If Dauphin, and the rest, will be but ruled.
Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no diffidence;
Oue sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.
Aten. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
And have thee revered like a blessed saint;
Employ thee, then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise:
By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that,
France were no place for Henry's warriors;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our provinces.

Aten. For ever should they be expelled from France,
And not have title to an earldom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work,
To bring this matter to the wished end.

(Drums heard.)
Hark! by the sound of drum, you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, TALBOT and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread,
And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the Duke of BURGUNDY and Forces.

Now, in the rearward, comes the duke, and his;
Fortune, in favour, makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley, we will talk with him.

(A parley sounded.)

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.
Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?
Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.
Bur. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marching hence. [words.]
Char. Speak, Pucelle; and enchant him with thy Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France!
 Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.
Bur. Speak on; but be not over-tedious.
Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France,
 And see the cities and the towns defaced
 By wasting ruin of the cruel foe!
 As looks the mother on her lowly babe,
 When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
 See, see the pining malady of France;
 Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds,
 Which thou thyself hast given her woful breast!
 O, turn thy edg'd sword another way;
 Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help!
 One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom,
 Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore;
 Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears,
 And wash away thy country's stained spots!
Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,
 Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on Doubting thy birth, and lawful progeny. [these,
 Who join'st thou with, but with a lordly nation,
 That will not trust thee, but for profit's sake?
 When Talbot hath set footing once in France,
 And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,
 Who then, but English Henry, will be lord,
 And thou be thrust out, like a fugitive?
 Call we to mind,—and mark but this for proof;—
 Was not the duke of Orleans thy foe?
 And was he not in England prisoner?
 But, when they heard he was thine enemy,
 They set him free, without his ransom paid,
 In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.
 See then! thou fight'st against thy countrymen,
 And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.
 Come, come, return; return, thou wand'ring lord,
 Charles, and the rest, will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquished; these haughty words of hers
 Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot,
 And made me almost yield upon my knees.—
 Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen!
 And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace:
 My forces and my power is in your hands.—
 So, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

Puc. Don't like a Frenchman's turn, and turn again!
Char. Welcome, brave duke! thy friendship makes us fresh.
Bast. And doth beget new courage in our breasts.
Alen. Pucelle hath bravely play'd her part in this,
 And doth deserve a coronet of gold.
Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers;
 And seek how we may prejudice the foe. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Paris. A Room in the Palace.

*Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and other
 Lords, VERNON, BASSET, &c. To them TAL-BOT, and some of his Officers.*

Tal. My gracious prince,—and honourable peers,—
 Hearing of your arrival in this realm,
 I have awhile given truce unto my wars,
 To do my duty to my sovereign;
 In sign whereof, this army hath reclaim'd
 To your obedience fifty fortresses,
 Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,
 Beside five hundred prisoners of estate,—
 Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet;
 And, with submissive loyalty of heart,
 Ascribes the glory of his conquest got,
 First to my God, and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the lord Talbot, uncle Gloster,
 That hath so long been resident in France?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious lord!
 When I was young (as yet I am not old),
 I do remember how my father said,

A stout champion never handled sword,
 Long since we were resolv'd of your truth,
 Your faithful service, and your toll in war;
 Yet never have you tasted our reward,
 Or been regard'd with so much as thanks,
 Because till now we never saw your face:
 Therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts,
 We here create you earl of Shrewsbury;
 And in our coronation take your place.

[Exeunt King Henry, Gloster, Talbot, and Nobles.]

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,
 Disgracing of these colours that I wear
 In honour of my noble lord of York,—
 Darest thou maintain the former words thou spakest?
Bass. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
 The envious barking of your saucy tongue
 Against my lord, the duke of Somerset.
Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.
Bass. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.
Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that.

[Strikes him.]
Bass. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms is such,
 That, who draws a sword, 'tis present death;
 Or else this blow should bronch thy dearest blood.
 But I'll unto his majesty, and crave
 I may have liberty to vengeance this wrong;
 When thou shalt see, I'll meet thee to thy cost.
Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you:
 And, after, meet you sooner than you would. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room of State.

*Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, EXETER, YORK, SUFFOLK, SOMERSET, WINCHE-
 TER, WARWICK, TALBOT, The Governor of Paris, and others.*

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.
Win. God save King Henry, of that name the Sixth!
Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath.—
 [Governor kneels.]
 That you elect no other king but him;
 Esteem none friends but such as his friends;
 And none your foes, but such as shall pretend
 Malicious practices against his state:
 This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!
 [Exeunt Gov. and his train.]

ENTER SIR JOHN FASTOLFE.

Past. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,
 To haste unto your coronation,
 A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
 Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy.
Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!
 I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next,
 To tear the garter from thy craven's leg.

[Plucking it off.]
 [Which I have done] because unworthily
 Thou wast installed in that high degree.—
 Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:
 This uxtard, at the battle of Patsy,
 When but in all I was six thousand strong,
 And that the French were almost ten to one,—
 Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
 Like to a trusty squire, did run away;
 In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;
 Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,
 Were there surpris'd, and taken prisoners.
 Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
 Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
 This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
 And ill beseming any common man;
 Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.
Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
 Knights of the party were of noble birth;
 Valiant, and virtuous, full of haughty courage,
 Such as were grown to credit by the wars;
 Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
 But always resolute in most extremities.
 He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
 Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
 Profaning this most honourable order;
 And should (if I were worthy to be judge),
 Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
 That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. [doom:]
K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy
 Be packing, therefore, thou that wast a knight;
 Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.—
 [Exit Fastolfe.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter,
 Sent from our uncle, duke of Burgundy.
Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style? [Viewing the superscription.]
 No more but, plain and bluntly,—To the king!
 Hath he forgot, he is his sovereign?
 Or doth this churlish superscription
 Pretend some alteration in good will?
 What's here?—I have, upon especial cause,— [Revsds.]
 Moved with compassion of my country's wreck,

Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—
Forsaken your pernicious faction,
And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of France.
O monstrous treachery ! Cau this be so ;
That in alliance, amity, and oaths,
There should be found such false dissembling guile ?

K. Hen. What ! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt ?

Glo. He doth, my lord, and is become your foe.

K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain ?

Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes,

K. Hen. Why then, lord Talbot there shall talk with
And give him chastisement for this abuse :— [him,
My lord, how say you ? are you not content ?

Tal. Content, my liege ? Yes, but that I am prevented,
I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.

K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto him
straight :

Let him perceive, how ill we brook his treason ;
And what offence it is, to flout his friends.

Tal. I go, my lord ; in heat desiring still,
You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit.

Enter VERNON and BASSET.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign !

Bass. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too !

York. This is my servant : Hear him, noble prince !

Som. And this is mine : Sweet Henry, favour him !

K. Hen. Be patient, lords ; and give them leave to speak.—

Say, gentlemen, What makes you thus exclaim ?

And wherefore crave you combat ; or with whom ?

Ver. With him, my lord ; for he hath done me wrong.

Bass. And I with him ; for he hath done me wrong.

K. Hen. What is that wrong, whereof you both complain ?

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bass. Crossing the sea from England into France,
This fellow here, with envious carping tongue,
Upbraided me about the rose I wear ;
Saying—the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,
When stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law,
Argued betwixt the Duke of York and him ;
With other vile and ignominious terms ;
In contumacy of which rude reproach,
And in defiance of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms.

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord ;
For though he seem, with forg'd quaint conceit,
To set a gloss upon his bold intent,
Yet know, my lord, I was provoked by him ;
And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing—that the paleness of this flower
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left ?

Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it. [out,

K. Hen. Good Lord ! What madness rules in brain sick men ;

When, for so light and frivolous a cause,
Such factious exultations shall arise !—
Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this disension first be tried by fight,
And then your highness shall command a peace.

Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone ;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.

York. There is my pledge ; accept it Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bass. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.

Glo. Confirm it so ? Confounded be your strife !
And perish ye with your audacious prate !
Presumptuous vassals ! are you not ashamed,
With this immodest clamorous outrage
To trouble and disturb the king and us ?
And you, my lords,—methinks you do not well,
To hear with their perverse objections ;
Much less, to take occasion from their mouths
To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves ;
Let me persuade you, take a better course. [friends,

Exe. It grieves his highness ;— Good my lords, be

K. Hen. Come hither, you, that would be combatants :

Henceforth, I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this quarrel, and the cause.—
And you, my lords,—remember where we are ;
In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation ;
If they perceive dissensions in our looks,
And that within ourselves we disagree,
How will their grudging stomachs be provoked

To wilful disobedience, and rebel ?
Beside, what Infamy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certified,
That, for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France ?
O, think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years ; and let us not forego
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood !
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.
I see no reason, if I wear this rose.

[Putting on a red rose.]

That any one should therefore be suspicious
I more incline to Somerset, than York ;
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both ;
As well they may upbraid me with my crown,
Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.
But your discretions better can persuade,
Than I am able to instruct or teach ;
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
So let us still continue peace and love.—
Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France :—
And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot ;—
And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together, and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies.
Ourself, my lord protector, and the rest,
After some respite, will return to Calais ;
From thence to England, where I hope ere long
To be presented, by your victories,
With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

[Flourish. Exit King Henry, Glo. Som.

Win. Suff. and Basset.

War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, methought, did play the orator.

York. And so he did ; but yet I like it not,
In that he wears the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush ! that was but his fancy, blame him not ;
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.

York. And, if I wist he did,—But let it rest ;
Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exit York, Warwick, and Vernon.

Exe. Well dost thou, Richard, to suppress thy
For, had the passions of thy heart burst out, voice
I fear, we should have seen decipher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging froils,
Than yet can be imagin'd or supposed.
But howsoever, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This should'ring of each other in the court,
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that it doth presage some ill event.
'Tis much, when sceptres are in children's hands ;
But more, when envy breeds unkind division ;
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Before Bourdeaux.

Enter TALBOT, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter,
Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a parley. Enter, on the walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captains, call you forth,
Servant in arms to Henry king of England ;
And thus he would,—Open your city gates,
Be humble to us ; call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects,
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power ;
But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire ;
Who, in a moment, even with the earth
Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,
Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter, but by death ;
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight ;
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee ;
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight ;
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

(Drums afar off.)
Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exeunt General, &c. from the walls.]

Tal. He fables not, I hear the enemy,—
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.—
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd, and hounded in a pale;
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Mazed with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, lie then in blood;
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch;
But rather moody-mad, and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the onwards stand aloof at hay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear dead of us, my friends.—
God, and Saint George! Talbot, and England's right!
Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter YORK, with Forces; to him a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?
Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,
That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot: As he march'd along,
By your espials were discover'd
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led:
Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset,
That thus delays my promis'd supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am low'd by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength,
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Sour to the rescue of the noble Talbot;
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud beard
Doth stop my cornets—were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman,
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire, and wrathful fury, makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remits traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!
York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word;
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul!
And on his son, young John; whom two hours since,
I met in travel toward his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.

York. Alas! what joy shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.—
Lucy, farewell: no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.—
Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours, are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. [Exit.]

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Steeping negligence doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scars-cold conqueror,
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth—who whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Other Plains of Gascony.

Enter SOMERSET, with his Forces; an Officer of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by York and Talbot
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with a sally of the very town
Be buckled with; the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour,
By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure:
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.
Off. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Som. How now, Sir William? whether were you sent? [Talbot;]

Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold lord
Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions.
And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs,
And, in advantage ling'ring, looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
Keep off aloof with worthless emulation,
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
While he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy,
Alençon, Reigner, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on, York should have sent him aid.
Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;
Swearing, that you withhold his levied host,
Collected for this expedition. [horses;]

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the
I owe him little duty, and less love;
And take foul scorn, to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his life;
But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen
straight;
Within six hours they will be at his aid.

Lucy. Too late comes rescue; he is ta'en, or slain:
For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot then adieu!
Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter TALBOT and JOHN his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war;
That Talbot's name might be in thee revived,
When sapless age, and weak unable limbs,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O malignant and ill-hoding stars!
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,
A terrible and unavided danger:
Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse;
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight: come, daily not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?
And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,

To make a bastard, and a slave of me.
The world will say—He is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He, that flies so, will ne'er return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly!

Your loss is great, so your regard should be:

My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.

Upon my death the French can little boast;

In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;

But mine it will, that no exploit have done:

You fled for vantage every one will swear;

But, if I bow, they'll say—I was for fear.

There is no hope, that ever I will stay.

If, the first hour, I shrink, and run away,

Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,

Rather than life preserved with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb ?
 John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.
 Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.
 John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.
 Tal. Part of thy father may be saved in thee.
 John. No part of him, but will be shame in me.
 Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.
 John. Yes, your renowned name : Shall flight abuse it ?
 Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.
 If death be so apparent, then both fly.
 Tal. And leave my followers here, to fight, and die !
 My age was never tainted with such shame.
 John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame ?
 No more can I the sever'd from your side,
 Than can yourself yourself in twin divide ;
 Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I ;
 For live I will not, if my father die.
 Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
 Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.
 Come, side by side together live and die ;
 And soul with soul from France to heaven fly. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarum. Excursions, wherein TALBOT'S Son is hemmed about, and TALBOT rescues him.
 Tal. Saint George and victory ! fight, soldiers, fight !
 The reagent hath with Te'hot broke his word,
 And left us to the rage of France his sword.
 Where is John Talbot ?—pause, and take thy breath ;
 I gave thee life, and rescued thee from death.
 John. O twice my father ! twice am I thy son :
 The life, thou gavest me first, was lost and done ;
 Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
 To my determined time thou gavest new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,
 It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire
 Of hold-faced victory. Then leaden age,
 Quicken'd with youthful spleen, and warlike rage,
 Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,
 And from the pride of Gallia rescued thee.
 The cruel bastard Orleans—that drew blood
 From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood
 Of thy first fight—I soon encountered ;
 And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed
 Some of his bastard blood ; and, in disgrace,
 Bespoke him thus : *Contaminated, base,
 And misbegotten blood I spill of thine,
 Mean and right poor ; for that pure blood of mine,
 Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy :—*
 Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy,
 Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care ;
 Art not thou weary, John ? How dost thou fare ?
 Will thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,
 Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry ?
 Fly, to revenge my death, when I am dead ;
 The help of one stands me in little need.
 O, too much folly is it, well I wot,
 To hazard all our lives in one small boat.
 If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage,
 To-morrow I shall die with mickle age ;
 By me they nothing gain, an if I stay,
 'Tis but the short'ning of my life one day :
 In thee thy mother dies, our house-hold's name,
 My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame :
 All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay ;
 All these are saved, if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart,
 These words of yours draw life-blood from my heart :
 On that advantage, hought with such a shame,
 (To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame,)
 Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
 The coward horse, that bears me, fall and die !
 And like me to the peasant boys of France ;
 To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance !
 Surely, by all the glory you have won,
 An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son ;
 Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot ;
 If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,
 Thou Icarus : thy life to me is sweet ;
 If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side ;
 And, commendable proved, let's die in pride. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the same.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter TALBOT wounded, supported by a Servant.

Tal. Where is my other life ?—mine own is gone ;—
 O, where's young Talbot ? where is valiant John ?—

Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity !
 Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee :—
 When he perceived me shrink, and on my knee,
 His bloody sword he brimsh'd o'er me,
 And, like a hungry lion, did commence
 Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience ;
 But when my angry guardian stood alone,
 Tend'ring my ruin, and assail'd of none,
 Dizzy-eyed fure, and great rage of heart,
 Suddenly made him from my side to start
 Into the clustering battle of the French :
 And in that sea of blood my boy did trench
 His overmounting spirit ; and there died
 My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of JOHN TALBOT

Serv. O my dear lord ! lo, where your son is borne !
 Tal. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to Anon, from thy insulting tyranny, [scorn,
 Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
 Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,
 In thy despite, shall 'scape mortality.—
 O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
 Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath :
 Brave death by speaking, whether he will, or no ;
 Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.—
 Poor boy ! he smiles, methinks ; and who should say
 Had death been French, then death had died to-day
 Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms ;
 My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
 Soldiers, adieu ! I have what I would have,
 Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave. [Dies.

Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers and Servants, leaving the two bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALENCON, BURGUNDY, Bastard, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
 We should have found a bloody day of this.
 Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,
 Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood !
 Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,
 Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid :
 But—with a proud, majestic high scorn,—
 He answer'd thus : *Young Talbot was not born
 To be the pillage of a girl's trench ;*
 So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
 He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.
 Bur. Doubtless, he would have made a noble knight :
 See, where he lies inlaid in the arnis
 Of the most bloody nurser of his barns.
 Bast. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder ;
 Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.
 Char. O, no ; forbear : for that, which we have fled
 During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY, attended ; a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald,
 Conduct me to the Dauphin's tent ; to know
 Who has obtain'd the glory of the day.
 Char. On what submissive message art thou sent ?
 Lucy. Submission, Dauphin ? 'tis a mere French word :
 We English warriors wot not what it means.
 I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,
 And to survey the bodies of the dead.
 Char. For prisoners ask'st thou ? hell our prison is.
 But tell me whom thou seek'st ?
 Lucy. Where is the great Alcides of the field,
 Valiant lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury ;
 Created, for his rare success in arms,
 Great earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valence ;
 Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield,
 Lord Strange of Blackmere, lord Verdun of Alton,
 Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, lord Furnival of Sheffield,
 The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge ;
 Knight of the noble order of Saint George,
 Worthy Saint Michael, and the golden fleece ;
 Great marshal to Henry the Sixth,
 Of all his wars within the realm of France ?
 Puc. Here is a silly stately style indeed !
 The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms bath,
 Writes not so tedious a style as this.—
 Him, that thou magnifest with all these titles,
 Stinking, and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.
 Lucy. Is Talbot slain ; the Frenchmen's only scourge,
 Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis ?
 O, were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,
 That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces ;
 O, that I could but call these dead to life !

It were enough to fright the realm of France :
Wore but his picture left among you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.

Give me their bodies ; that I may hear them hence,
And give them burial as becometh their worth.

Puc. I think, this unrest is old Talbot's ghost,
He soaks with such a proud commanding spirit,
For God's sake, let him have 'em ; to keep them here,
They would but stink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll bear them hence

But from their ashes shall be reard'
A phoenix, that shall make all France afear'd.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou
And now to Paris, in this conquering vein ; [Exit.]
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and EXETER.

K. Hen. Have you perused the letters from the pope,
The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac ?

Glo. I have, my lord, and your intent is this,—

They humbly sue unto your excellence,

To have a godly peace concluded of,

Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion ?

Glo. Well, my good lord ; and as the only means
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness on every side.

K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle ; for I always thought,

It was both impious and unnatural,

That such immanity and bloody strife

Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord,—the sooner to effect,
And surer hind, this knot of amity,—

The earl of Armagnac—near knit to Charles,

A man of great authority in France,—

Proffers his only daughter to your grace

In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle ! alas ! my years are young ;

And fitter is my study and my books,

Than wait on dalliance with a paramour.

Yet, call the ambassadors ; and, as you please,

So let them have their answers every one :

I shall be well content with any choice,

Tends to God's glory, and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate, and two Ambassadors, with WINCHESTER, in a cardinal's habit.

Exe. What ! is my lord of Winchester install'd,
And call'd unto a cardinal's degree ?

Then, I perceive, that that will be verified,

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,—

If once he come to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits
Have been consider'd and debated on :

Your purpose is both good and reasonable :

And, therefore, we are certainly resolv'd

To draw conditions of friendly peace ;

Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean

Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my lord your master,—

I have inform'd his highness so at large,

As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her beauty, and the value of her dower,—

He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract,
Bear her this jewel, (to the Amb.) pledge of my affection.

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover : where, lushipp'd,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt King Henry and Train : Gloster,
Exeter, and Ambassadors.]

Win. Stay, my lord legate ; you shall first receive

The sum of money, which I promis'd

Should be deliver'd to his holiness,

For clothing me in these grave ornaments.

Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.

Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, I trow,
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.

Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That, neither in birth, or for authority,
The bishop will be overcome by thee :

I'll either make thee stoop, and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALENCON,
LA PUCELLE, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping
'Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt, [speaks]

And turn again unto the warlike French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,
And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us ;
Else, ruin combat with their palaces !

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accomplices ! [speaks]

Char. What tidings send our scouts ? I pry'thee,

Mess. The English army, that divided was Into two parts, is now join'd in one ;
And moans to give you battle presently.

Char. Somewhat too sudden, sire, the warning is ;
But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there ;
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions, fear is most accursed ;—
Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine ;
Let Henry fret, and all the world reprove.

Char. Then on, my lords, and France be fortunate ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Before Angiers.

Alarums ; Excursions. Enter LA PUCELLE.

Puc. The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly.—
Now help, ye charming spells, and periapts ;
And ye choice spirits, that admonish me,
And give me signs of future accidents ! (Thunder.)

You speedy helpers, that substitute
Under the lordly mounarch of the north,
Appear, and aid me in this enterprise !

Enter Fiends.

This speedy quick appearance argues proof
Of your accustomed diligence to me.

Now, ye familiar spirits, that are call'd
Out of the powerful regions under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.

(They walk about, and speak not.)

O, hold me not with silence over-long !
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'll lop a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a farther benefit ;
So you do condescend to help me now.—
(They hang their heads.)

No hope to have redress ?—My body shall Pay recompense, if you will grant my suit.

(They shake their heads.)

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Entreat you to your wotted furtherance ?
'Then take my soul ; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

(They depart.)

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must rail her lofty-plum'd crest,
And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with :
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting. LA
PUCELLE and YORK fight hand to hand. La
Pucelle is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast ;
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can pain your liberty.—
A scoddy prize, fit for the devil's grace !
See, how the ugly witch doth heed her brows,
As if, with Circe, she would change my shape.

Puc. Changed to a worse shape thou canst not be.

York. O, Charles the Dauphin is a proper man ;
No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and thee !
And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds !
York. Fell, banning hag ! euchantress, hold thy tongue.

Puc. I pry'thee, give me leave to curse a while.

York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.]

Alarums. Enter SUFFOLK, leading in Lady MARGARET.

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner. (Gazes on her.)

O fairest beauty, do not fear, nor fly;
For I will touch thee but with reverent hands,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
I kiss these fingers (kissing her hand) for eternal peace:
Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.

Mar. Margaret my name; and daughter to a king,
The king of Naples, whose'er thou art.

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me:
So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.
Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go, and be free again as Suffolk's friend.

(She turns away as going.)

O stay!—I have no power to let her pass;
My hand would free her, but my heart says—no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes:
Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak;

I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind:
Fy, De la Poole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?
Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?
Ay; beauty's princely majesty is such,
Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.

Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk,—if thy name be so,—
What ransom must I pay before I pass?
For, I perceive, I am thy prisoner.

Suf. How canst thou tell, she will deny thy suit,
Before thou make a trial of her love? (Aside.)
Mar. Why speak'st thou out? what ransom must I pay?

Suf. She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd;
She is a woman; and therefore to be won. (Aside.)
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea, or no?

Suf. Fond man! remember, that thou hast a wife;
Then how can Margaret be thy paramour? (Aside.)

Mar. I were best leave him, for he will not hear.
Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talks at random; sure the man is mad.

Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.
Suf. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom?

Whv, for my king: Tush! that's a wooden thing.
Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.

But there remains a scruple in that too:
For though her father be the king of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet he is poor. (Aside.)
And our nobility will scorn the match.

Mar. How ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdain they ne'er so much:
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield:

Madam, I have a secret to reveal. [knights,
Mar. What though I be enthral'd? he seems a
And will not any way dishonour me. (Aside.)

Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.
Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescued by the French;
And then I need not crave his courtesy. (Aside.)

Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—
Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere now. (Aside.)

Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid pro quo.

Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
Mar. To be a queen in bondage, is more vile,
Than is a slave in base servility;

For princes should be free. And so shall you,
If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?
Suf. I'll undertake to make these Henry's queen;
To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,
And set a precious crown upon thy head,
If thou wilt condescend to be my—

Mar. What?
Suf. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.
Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am
To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,
And have no portion in the choice myself.

How say you, madam, are you so content?
Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

Suf. Then call our captains, and our colours forth

And, madam, at your father's castle walls
We'll crave a parley, to confer with him.
(Troops come forward.)

A Parley sounded. Enter REIGNIER, on the walls

Suf. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner.
Reig. To whom?

Suf. To me. Suffolk, what remedy?
Reig. I am a soldier; and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:
Consent, (and, for thy honour, give consent.)
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king;

Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto;
And this her easy-held imprisonment
Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?
Suf. Fair Margaret knows
That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or feign.

Reig. Upon thy princely warrant, I descend,
To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit from the walls.]

Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sounded. Enter REIGNIER, below.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories;
Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.

Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,
Fit to be made companion with a king:
What answer makes your grace unto my suit?

Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth,
To be the princely bride of such a lord;
Upon condition I may quietly

Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou,
Free from oppression, or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suf. That is her ransom, I deliver her;
And those two counties, I will undertake,
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.

Reig. And I again,—in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,
Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.

Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kindly thanks,
Because this is in traffic of a king:
And yet, methinks, I could be well content

To be mine own attorney in this case. (Aside.)
I'll over thou to England with this news,
And make this marriage to be solemnized:
So, farewell, Reignier! Set this diamond safe

In golden places, as it becomes.
Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, King Henry, were he here.

Mar. Farewell, my lord! Good wishes, praise, and prayers,
Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. (Going.)

Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you, [siret,
Mar. No princely commendations to my king?
Suf. Such commendations as become a maid,
A virgin, and his servant, say to him.

Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestly directed.
But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his majesty?

Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted heart,
Never yet taint with love, I send the king.

Suf. And this withal. (Kisses her.)
Mar. That for thyself;—I will not so presume,
To send such peevish tokens to a king.

[Exit Reignier and Margaret.]

Suf. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk, stay:
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotours, and ugly treasons, lurk.

Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise:
Esthink thee on her virtues, that surmount;
Mad, natural graces, that extinguish art;

Repeat their semblance often on the seas,
That, when thou comest to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Camp of the Duke of York, in Anjou.

Enter YORK, WARWICK, and others.
York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter LA PUCELLE, guarded, and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan! this kills thy father's heart outright.
Have I sought every country far and near,
And, now it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?

Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee

Puc. Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood;
Thou art no father, nor no friend, of mine.
Shep. Out, out!—My lords, and please you, 'tis not
I did beget her, all the parish knows; [so!
Her mother lieth yet, can testify.
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.
War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;
Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.
Shep. Fy, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstacle!
God knows, thou art a collop of uiy flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear;
Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Joan.
Puc. Peasant, avauant!—You have suborn'd this
Of purpose to obscure my noble birth. [man,

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,
The morn that I was wedded to her mother.—
Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.
Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time
Of thy nativity! I would, the milk,
Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her breast,
Had been a little rathouse for thy sake!
Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,
I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!
Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?
O, burn her, burn her; hanging is too good. [Exit.
York. Take her away; for she hath lived too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First, let me tell you whom you have con-
Not me hegotten of a shepherd swain, [dem'd:
But issued from the progeny of kings;
Virtuous and holy; chosen from above,
By inspiration of celestial grace,
To work exceeding miracles on earth.
I never had to do with wicked spirits;
But you,—that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—
Because you want the grace that others have,
You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders by the help of devils.
No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy,
Chaste and immaculate in every thought;
Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effused,
Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay;—away with her to execution.
War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,
Spare for no fagots, let there be enough;
Piaze barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.
Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?
Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity;
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—
I am with child, ye bloody homicides:
Murder not then the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hal- me to a violent death. [child?

York. Now Heaven forefend! the holy maid with War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought:
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?
York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling;
I did imagine what would be her refuge.
IFar. Well, go to; we will have no bastards live;
Especially, since Charles must father it.

Puc. You are deceived; my child is none of his:
It was Alençon that enjoy'd my love.
York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!
It dies, as if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I named,
But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd.
War. A married man! that's most intolerable.

York. Why, here's a girl! I think, she knows not
There were so many, whom she may accuse. [well,
War. It's sign she hath been liberal and free.
York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat, and thee:
Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.
Puc. Then lead me hence,—with whom I leave my
May never glorious sun reflex his beams [curse:
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you; till mischief and despair,
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!

[Exit, guarded.
York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes,
Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter Cardinal BEAUFORT, attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,

Moved with remorse of these outrageous hrolls,
Have earnestly implored a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand, the Dauphin, and his train,
Approacheth, to confer about some matter.
York. Is all our travail turnd to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrow'n,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great progenitors had conquered?—
O, Warwick, Warwick, I foresee with grief
The utter loss of the realm of France.
War. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter CHARLES, attended; ALENCON, Bastard,
REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling cholier chokes
The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That—in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of mere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,
You shall become true liegemen to his crown:
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy th' regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?
Adorn his temples with a coronet;
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This proffer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known already, that I am possess'd
With more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reverenc'd for their lawful king:
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep
That which I have, then, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means
Used intercession to obtain a league;
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison?
Either accept the title thou usurpst,
Of benefit proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy,
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters, as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility:
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

[Aside to Charles)
War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Char. It shall:
Only reserved, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—
[Charles, and the rest, give tokens of fealty)
So, now dismiss your army when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, in conference with SUF-FOLK; GLOSTER and EXETER following.

K. Hen. Your wond'rous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:

Her virtues, gracéd with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart :
And like as rigour in tempestuous winds
Provokes the mightiest bulk against the tide ;
So am I driven, by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of his love.

Suf. Tush ! my good lord ! This superficial tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise ;
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them,)
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But, with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command ;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betrothed
Unto another lady of esteem ;
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach ?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful nats ;
Or one, that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds :
A poor carl's daughter is unequal odds.
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that ?
Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suf. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,
The king of Naples and Jerusalem ;
And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.
Ere. Beside, his wealth doth warrant liberal dower ;
While Reigner sooner will receive, than give.

Suf. A dower, my lords ! disgrace not so your king,
That he should be so subject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love,
Henry is able to enrich his queen.
And not to seek a queen to make him rich ;
Sn worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse,
Marriage is a matter of mere worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship ;

Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed :
And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
It must of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be preferred.
For what is wedlock forcéd, but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife ?
Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.
Whom should we match with Henry, being a king,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a king ?
Her peerless features, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king ;
Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit,
(More than in women commonly is seen,)
Will answer our hope in issue of a king ;

For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolve,
As is fair Margaret, be he lik'd in love.
Then yield, my lords ; and here conclude with me,
That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report,
My noble lord of Suffolk ; or for that
My tender youth was never yet attain'd
With any passion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell ; but this I am assured,
I feel such sharp dissention in my breast,
Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take, therefore, shipping ; post, my lord, to France ;
Agree to any covenants : and procure
That lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen :
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say ; for, till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—
And you, good uncle, banish all offence :
If you do censure me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.

So conduct me, where from company,
I may revolve and ruminate my grief.

Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.

[Exeunt Gloster and Erete.]
Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd ; and thus he goes,
As did the youthful Paris once to Greece ;
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did,
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king ;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.

[Exit]

SCENE.—Dispersedly in various parts of England.

The best commentators have agreed, that Shakespeare formed the Second and Third Parts of Henry VI. upon another play, in two parts, entitled, "The whole contention between the two famous houses, Lancaster and York," &c. altering, retrenching, and amplifying as he thought proper. Accordingly, in printing the present edition, the lines found in the original play, with some minute variations, are given without any distinguishing mark. The passages to which inverted commas are prefixed, are believed to have been retouched, or greatly improved, by Shakespeare; and those within crotchets [] were his own composition entirely.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of trumpets: then hautboys. Enter on one side, KING HENRY, DUKE OF GLOSTER, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and CARDINAL BEAUFORT; on the other, QUEEN MARGARET, led in by SUFFOLK, YORK, SOMERSET, BUCKINGHAM, and others following.

Suf. As by your high Imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, As procurator to your excellence, To marry Princess Margaret for your grace; So, in the famous ancient city, Tours,— In presence of the kings of France and Sicil, The dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne, and Alençon, Seven earls, twelve barons, twenty reverend bishops,— I have perform'd my task, and was espoused: And humbly now upon my bended knee, In sight of England and her lordly peers Deliver up my title in the queen
 To your most gracious hands, that are the substance Of that great shadow I did represent;
 The happiest gift that ever mortals gave,
 The fairest queen that ever king received.

K. Hen. Suffolk, arise.—Welcome, Queen Margaret: I can express no kinder sign of love, Than this kind kiss.—O Lord, that lends me life, Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness! For thou hast given me in this beauteous face,
 A world of earthly blessings to my soul.

[If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.] [Lord;]
Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious
 The mutual conference that my mind hath had—
 By day, by night; waking, and in my dreams;
 In courtly company, or at my beads,—

* With you mine alder-liestest sovereign,
 * Makes me the bolder to salute my king
 * With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
 * And over-joy of heart doth minister.
 * K. Hen. Her sight did ravish; but her grace in speech,
 * Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,
 * Makes me, from wondering, fall to weeping joys;
 * Such is the fulness of my heart's content.—
 * Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love.
 All. Long live Queen Margaret, England's happiness!

Q. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish.]
Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace,
 Here are the articles of contracted peace,
 Between our sovereign and the French king Charles,
 For eighteen months concluded by consent.
Glo. [Reads.] Inorimis, It is agreed between the French king, Charles, and William de la Poole, marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry king of England,—that the said Henry shall espouse the lady Margaret, daughter unto Reigner king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem; and crown her queen of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.—Item.—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king her father—

K. Hen. Uncle, how now?
Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord;
 Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart,
 And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no farther.

K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.
Win. Item,—It is farther agreed between them, that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father; and she renounce over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having dowry.

K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel down the first duke of Suffolk,
 We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
 And girt thee with the sword.—

COUNTESS OF York, we here discharge your grace
From being regent in the parts of France,
Till term of eighteen months be full expired.—
Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloster, York, and Buckingham,

Somerset, Salisbury, and Werwick;
We thank you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.
Come, let us in; and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.]

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,
To you duke Humphrey must unload his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coin, and people, in the wars?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toil his wits,
To keep by policy what Henry got?

Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
Received deep scars in France and Normandy?
Or hath mine uncle Beaufort, and myself,
With all the learned council of the realm,
Studied so long, sat in the council-house,
Early and late, debating in and out
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?
And hath his highness in his infancy
Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes?
And shall these labours, and these honours, die?
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die?
O peers of England, shameful is this league!
Fatal this marriage, cancelling your fame;
Blotting your names from books of memory;
Razing the characters of your renown;
Defacing monuments of conquer'd France;
Undoing all, as all had never been!

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse?
This peroration with such circumstance?

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;

But now it is impossible we should;

Suffolk, the new-made duke, that rules the roast,
Hath given the duchies of Anjou and Maine
Unto the poor King Henrich, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now, by the death of Him who died for all,
These counties were the keys of Normandy:—
But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?

War. For grief, that they are past recovery:
For, were there hope to conquer them again,
My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.
Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;
Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer:
And are the cities, that I got with wounds,
Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?
Mort Dieu!

[York. For Suffolk's duke—may he suffocate,

That dims the honour of this warlike isle!

France should have torn and rent my very heart,

Before I would have yielded to this league.]

I never read but England's kings have had

Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives:

And our King Henry gives away his own.

To match with her that brings no vantage.

Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before,

That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth,

For costs and charges in transporting her:

She should have staid in France, and starved in France,

Before—

Car. My lord of Gloster, now you grow too hot;

it was the pleasure of my lord the king.

Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind:]

'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike;

But 'tis my presence that doth trouble you.

Rancour will out: Proud prelate, in thy face

I see thy fury: if I longer stay,

We shall begin our ancient bickerings.

Lords, farewell; and say, when I am gone,

I prophesied—France will be lost ere long.

[Exit.]

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.

Tis known to you, he is mine enemy;

[Nay, more, an enemy unto you all

And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.

Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,

And heir apparent to the English crown;

Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,

And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,

There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.

Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing words

Bewitch your hearts; be wise, and circumspect.]

What though the common people favour him,

Calling him—Humphrey, the good duke of Gloster;

Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice—

Jesu maintain your royal excellence!

With—God preserve the good duke Humphrey!

I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,

He will be found a dangerous protector.

[Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,

He being of age to govern himself?—]

Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,

And all together—with the duke of Suffolk,—

We'll quickly hoise duke Humphrey from his seat.

[Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;

I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently.] [Exit.]

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's

And greatness of his piety be grief to us,

Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal;

His insolence is more intolerable

Than all the princes in the land beside;

If Gloster be displaced, he'll be protector.

Buck. Or thou, or I, Somerset, will be protector,

[Despite duke Humphrey, or the cardinal.]

[Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset.]

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him,

While these do labour for their own preferment,

Behoves it us to labour for the realm.

I never saw but Humphrey duke of Gloster

Did bear him like a noble gentleman—

Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal—

More like a soldier than a man of the church,

As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,—

Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself

Unlike the ruler of a common-weal.—

Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age!

Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping

Hath won the greatest favour of the common,

Excepting none but good duke Humphrey.—

And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,

In bringing them to civil discipline;

Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France,

When thou wert regent for our sovereign,

Have made thee fear'd and honour'd of the people:—

Join we together, for the public good;

In what we can to bridle and suppress

The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal,

With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;

And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds,

While they do tend the profit of the land.

[War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,

And common profit of his country!

York. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.]

Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

[War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is lost;

That Maine, which by main force Warwick did win,

[And would have kept, so long as breath did last.]

Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine,

Which I will win from France, or else be slain.

[Exeunt Warwick and Salisbury.]

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;

[Paris is lost; the state of Normandy

Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:

Suffolk concluded on the articles;

The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd

To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.

I cannot blame them all: that 'tis't to them?

'Tis'thine they give away, and not their own.

Prates may make cheap penniesworths of their pillage,

And purchase friends, and give to courtizens,

Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone:

While as the silly owner of the goods

Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands,

And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,

While all is shared, and all is borne away;

Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own.

So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,

While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.

Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ireland,

Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood,

As did the fatal brand Althea burn'd,

Unto the prince's heart of Calydou.]

Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French!

Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,

Even as I have of fertile England's soil.

A day will come, when York shall claim his own;

And therefore I will take the Neville's part.

And make a show of love to proud duke Humphrey,

And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,

For that's the golden mark I seek to hit:

Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,

Nor hold his sceptre in his childish fist,

Nor wear the diadem upon his head,

Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.
Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:
Watch thou, and wake, when others hee sleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state;
Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
With his new bride, and England's dear thought queen,
And Humphrey with the peers befall'n at jars:
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfumed;
And in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
And, force per force, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose hookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House.

Enter GLOSTER and the Duchess.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres' plentifuld nook?
[Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows,
As frowning at the favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?]
[What seest thou, that King Henry's diadem, [Enchased with all the honours of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same.]
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold:—
What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine:]
[Aud, having both together heaved it up,
We'll both together lift our heads to heaven;
And never more abase our sight so low,
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.]

Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,
Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts:
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world!
My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.
Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it.

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
Glo. Methought this staff, mine office-badge lu court,

Was broke in twain; by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand
Were placed the heads of Edmund duke of Somerset,
And William de la Poole, first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream: what it doth bode, God knows.
Duch. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,
That he, that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove,
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:
Methought, I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster,
And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd;
Where Henry and dame Margaret kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright:
[Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtured Eleanor!]
Art thou not second woman in the realm;
And the protector's wife, beloved of him?
[Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?]
And wilt thou still be hammering teachery,
[To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?]
Away from me, and let me hear no more.

Duch. What, what, my lord, are you so choleric
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time, I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
And not be check'd.
Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure,
You do perchance ride unto Saint Alban's.
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.
Glo. I go.—Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us?
Duch. Yes, good my lord, I'll follow presently.

[Reënter Gloster and Messenger.]

Follow I must, I cannot go before,
[While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
And, being a woman, I will not be slack
To play my part in fortune's pageant.]
Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not, man,
We are alone; here's none but these and I.

Enter HUME.

Hume. Jesu preserve your royal majesty!
Duch. What say'st thou, majesty! I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice,
Your grace's title shall be multiplied.
Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet confer'd

With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch;
And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?
And wilt they undertake to do me good?
Hume. This they have promis'd,—to shew your highness
A spirit, raised from depth of under ground,
That shall make answer to such questions
As by your grace shall be propounded him.
Duch. It is enough: I'll think upon the questions:
When from St Alban's we do make return,
We'll see these things effected to the full.
Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man,
With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit Duchess.]

[Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess'
gold.]

Marry, and shall. But how now, Sir John Hume?
Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum!
The business asketh silent secrecy.
[Dame Eleanor gives gold, to bring the witch:
Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.]
Yet have I gold, flies from another coast:
I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,
And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,
Have hir'd me to undermine the duchess,
And box these conjurations in her brain.
[They say, a crafty knave does need no broker;
I saw a Suffolk, and the cardinals' broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
To call them both—a pair of crafty knaves.
Well, so it stands: And thus, I fear, at last,
Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck;
And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall:
Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all.]

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter PETER, and others, with petitions.

Pet. My masters, let's stand close; my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.
Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he is a good man! Jesu bless him!

Enter SUFFOLK and QUEEN MARGARET.

[Pet. Here 'a comes, methinks, and the queen with him: I'll be the first, sure.]
Pet. Come hack, fool; this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.
Suf. How now, fellow? wouldst any thing with me?
Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me! I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. [Reading the superscription.] To my lord protector: are your supplications to his lordship?
Let me see them: What is this?

Pet. Mine is, an' please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife, and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too? that is some wrong, indeed.—
What's yours?—What's here! [Reads.] Against the Duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford.
—How now, sir knave?

Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

[Peter. Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying that the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.]

Q. Mar. What say'st thou? Did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? No, forsooth: my master said, That he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently.—We'll hear more of your matter here the king.

[Reënter Servants, with Peter.]

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected
Under the wings of our protector's grace,
Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Tears the petition.]

Away, base cullions!—Suffolk, let them go.

[All. Come, let's be gone. [Exeunt Petitioners.

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise,

Is this the fashion in the court of England?

Is this the government of Britain's isle,

And this the royalty of Albion's king?

What, shall King Henry be a pupil still,

Under the surly Gloster's governance?

Am I a queen in title and in style,

And must be made a subject to a duke?

'I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours

'Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love,

'And stolest away the ladies' hearts of France;

'I thought King Henry had resembled thee,

'In courage, courtship, and proportion;

'But all his mind is bent to holiness,

[To number Ave-Maries on his beads:

His champions are—the prophets and apostles;

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;

His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves

Are brazen images of canonized saints.

I would the college of cardinals

Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head;

That were a state fit for his holiness.]

'Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause

'Your highness came to England, so will I

'In England work your grace's full content.

Q. Mar. Beside the haught protector, have we

Beaufort,

[The imperious churchman; Somerset, Buckingham,

And grumbling York; and not the least of these,

But can do more in England than the king.

Suf. And he of these, that can do most of all,

Cannot do more in England than the Nevils;

Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.]

'Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,

'As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.

'She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,

'More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife;

'Strangers in court do take her for the queen:

[She bears a duke's revenues on her back,

And in her heart she scorns our poverty:

Shall I not live to be avenged on her?

Contemptuous base-born call as she is,]

'She vaunted 'mongst her missions 't other day,

The very train of her worst wearing-gown

Was better worth than all my father's lands,

[Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.]

'Suf. Madam, myself have lined a bush for her;

[And placed a quire of such enticing birds,

That she will light to listen to their lays,

And never mount to trouble you again.

So, let her rest: And, madam, list to me;

For I am bold to counsel you in this,

Although we fancy not the cardinal,

Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,

'Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.

As for the duke of York,—this late complaint

Will make but little for his benefit:

So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last,

And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.]

Enter KING HENRY, YORK and SOMERSET conversing with him; Duke and Duchess of GLOSTER, Cardinal BEAUFORT, BUCKINGHAM, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;

Or Somerset, or York, all's one to me.

York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,

Then let him be deny'd the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,

Let York be regent, I will yield to him.

War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,

Dispute not that: York is the worthier.

Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speak.

War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.

War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

[Sal. Peace, son— and shew some reason, Buck-

ingham,

Why Somerset should be prefer'd in this.

Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.]

'Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself

'To give his censure: these are no women's matters.

'Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your grace

'To be protector of his excellence?

'Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm;

'And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

'Suf. Resign it then, and leave thine insolence,

'Since thou wert king, (as who is king, but thou?)

'The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck:

[The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas;

And all the peers and nobles of the realm

Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

Car. The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's

Are lank and lean with thy extortions. [bags

Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,

Have cost a mass of public treasury.

Buck. Thy cruelty in execution,

Upon offenders, hath exceeded law,

And left thee to the mercy of the law.

Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices, and towns in France,

If they were known, as the suspect is great,—

Would make thee quickly hush without thy head.]

[Exit Gloster. The Queen drops her fan.

'Give me my fan: What, minion! can you not?

[Gives the Duchess a box on the ear.]

'I cry you mercy, madam: Was it you?

'Duch. Was't I? yea, I it was, proud Frenchwoman;

'Could I come near your beauty with my nails,

I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet; 'twas against her will.

'Duch. Against her will! Good king, look to't in time;

'She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby;

'[Though in this place most master wear no breeches,]

She shall not strike dame Eleanor unrevenged.

[Exit Duchess.

'[Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,

And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds;

She's tickled now; her fume can need no spurs,

She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.]

[Exit Buckingham

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler being overblown,

With walking once about the quadrangle,

I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.

As for your spiteful false objections,

Prove them, and I lie open to the law:

But God in mercy so deal with my soul,

As I in duty love my king and country!

But to the matter that we have in hand—

I say, my sovereign, York is meetest man

To be your regent in the realm of France.

'Suf. Before we make election, give me leave]

'To shew some reason of no little force,

'That York is most unmeet of any man.

'York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.

'First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride;

[Next, if I be appointed for the place,

My lord of Somerset will keep me here,

Without discharge, money, or furniture,

Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands.

Last time, I danced attendance on his will,

Till Paris was besieged, famish'd, and lost.

War. That I can witness; and a fouler fact

Did never traitor in the land commit.]

Suf. Peace, headstrong Warwick!

War. Inuague of pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter Servants of SUFFOLK, bringing in HORNER and PETER.

Suf. Because here is a man accused of treason:

Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!

[York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?

K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me: what are these?]

'Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man

'That doth accuse his master of high treason

'His words were these,—that Richard, duke of York,

'Was rightful heir unto the English crown;

'And that your majesty was an usurper.

'K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?

Hor. An 't shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.

'Pet. By these ten bones, my lords, [holding up his hands,] he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my lord of York's armour.

[York. Base dunghill villain, and mechanical,

I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech.—]

'I do beseech your royal majesty,

'Let him have all the rigour of the law.

Hor. Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my pretence; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this; therefore, I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

'Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge.

'Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,

'Because in York this breeds suspicion:

'And let these have a day appointed them

* For single combat in convenient place ;
 For he hath witness of his servant's malice ;
 This is the law, and this duke Humphrey's doom.
K. Hen. Then be it so. My lord of Somerset,
 We make your grace lord regent o'er the French.
Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.
Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.
Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight ; [for God's sake, pity my case ! the spite of man prevaileth against me.
 O Lord have mercy upon me ! I shall never be able to fight a blow : O Lord, my heart !]
Glo. Sirral, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.
K. Hen. Away with them to prison : and the day of combat shall be the last of the next month.—
 * Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Duke of Gloucester's Garden.

Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTHWELL, and BOLINGBROKE.

[Hume. Come, my masters ; the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.]

Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided : Will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms ?

Hume. Ay : What else ? fear you not her course.
Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit ; But it shall be convenient, master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busy below ; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us. [Exit Hume.] * Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth :—[John Southwell, read you ; and let us to our work.]

Enter Duchess, above.

[Duch. Well said, my masters ; and welcome all. To this gear ; the sooner the better.]

Boling. Patience, good lady ; wizards know their times !]

Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
 * The time of night when Troy was set on fire ;
 * The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl,
 * And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves,
 * That time best fits the work we have in hand.
 * Malnam, sit you, and fear not ; whom we raise,
 * We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

[Here they perform the ceremonies appertaining, and make the circle ; Bolingbroke, or Southwell, reads Conjuror te, &c. It thunders and lightens terribly ; then the Spirit riseth.]

[Spir. Adsum.
M. Jourd. Asmath.

By the eternal God, whose name and power
 Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask ;
 For, till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.]

Spir. Ask what thou wilt :—That I had said and done !]

Boling. First, of the king.—What shall of him become ? [Reading out of a paper.]

Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose,
 But him outlive, and die a violent death.

[As the Spirit speaks, Southwell writes the answer.]

Boling. What fate awaits the duke of Suffolk ?
Spir. By water shall he die, and take his end.]

Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset ?
Spir. Let him shun castles ;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains
 Than where castles mounted stand.

* Have done, for more I hardly can endure.
Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake :

* False fiend, avoid !
 [Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends.]

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM hastily, with their Guards, and others.

* York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.
 * Boldame, I think, we watch'd you at an inch.—
 * What, madam, are you there ? the king and common-
 * Are deeply indebted for this piece of pain ; [weal
 * My lord protector will, I doubt it not,
 * See you well guardon'd for these good deserts.]

[Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,
 Injurious duke ; that thraet'st where is no cause.]

Buck. True, madam, none at all. What call you this ?
 [Showing her the papers.]

* Away with them ; let them be clapp'd up close,
 * And kept asunder :—You, madam, shall with us :—
 * Stafford, take her to thee.—

[Exit Duchess from above.
 * We'll see your trinkets here all forbecoming ;
 * Ali.—Away !

[Exeunt Guards, with South. Boling. &c.]

[York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her well ;

A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon !]
 Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.

What have we here ? [Reads.]

*The Duke yet lives that Henry shall depose ;
 But him outlive, and die a violent death.*

[*Why, this is just.
 Aio te, Aiacida, Romanos vincere posse.*]

Well, to the rest ;
 Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk ?

*By water shall he die, and take his end.—
 What shall betide the duke of Somerset ?*

*Let him shun castles ;
 Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains,
 Than where castles mounted stand.*

[*Come, come, my lords ;
 These oracles are hardly attain'd,
 And hardly understood.*]

* The king is now in progress toward Saint Alban's,
 * With him the husband of this lovely lady :

* Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them ;
 * A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

* Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of
 * To be the post, in hope of his reward. [York.]

* York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—*Who's * within there, ho ?*

Enter a Servant.

* Invite my lords of Salisbury and Warwick
 * To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away ! [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Alban's.

Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER, Cardinal, and SUFFOLK, with Falconers hollaing.

* Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,
 * I saw not better sport these seven years' day ;

* Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high ;
 * And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.

* K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon
 * And what a pitch she flew above the rest !— [made,

* To see how God in all his creatures works !
 * [Yes, man and birds are fain of climbing high.]

Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,
 * My lord protector's hawks do tower so well ;

They know their master loves to be aloft,
 * [And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.]

* Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind,
 * That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

* Car. I thought as much ; he'd be above the clouds.
 * Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal : How think you by that ?

Were it not good, your grace could fly to heaven ?
 * [K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy !]

* Car. Thy heaven is on earth ; thine eyes and
 * thoughts

* Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart ;
 * Pernicious protector, dangerous peer,

That smooth'st it so with king and commonweal !
 * Glo. 'What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown per-

* sumptory ?
 * [Tantane animis caelestibus iræ]

* Churchmen so hot ? good uncle, hide such malice ;
 * With such holiness can you do it ?

* Suf. No malice, sir ; no more than well becomes
 * So good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.

Glo. As who, my lord ?
 * Suf. Why, as you, my lord ;

As 't like your lordly lord-protectorship.
 * Glo. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine insolence.

Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloucester.
 * K. Hen. I pry thee, peace,

Good queen ; and whet not on these furious peers,
 * For blessed are the peace-makers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,
 * Against this proud protector, with my sword !

Glo. 'Falth, holy uncle, 'would 'twere come to that !
 * [Aside to the Cardinal.]

* Car. Marry, when thou darest. [Aside.]
 * Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter,

* In thine own person answer thy abuse. [Aside.]
 * Car. Ay, where thou darest not peep : an if thou darest,

 * This evening on the east side of the grove. [Aside.]

* K. Hen. How now, my lords ?
 * Car. Believe me, cousin Gloucester,

* Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,
 * We had had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand

* sword. [Aside to Glo.]

Glo. True, uncle,

Car. Are you advised?—the east side of the grove?

Glo. Cardinal, I am with you. (Aside.)

K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gosler?

Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—
Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown for this, (Aside.)

[Or all my fence shall fail.

Car. Medice teipsum.]

Protector, see to 't well, protect yourself. (Aside.)

K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.

[How irksome is this music to my heart!
When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.]

Enter an Inhabitant of St Alban's, crying, A Miracle!

Glo. What means this noise?

Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

Inhab. A miracle! a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle.

Inhab. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban's shrine,
Within this half hour, hath received his sight;

A man, that ne'er saw in his life before.

K. Hen. Now, God be praised! that to believing souls

* Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Alban's, and his Brethren; and SIMPCOX, borne between two ladies in a chair; his Wife and a great Multitude following.

Car. Here come the townsmen in procession,
To present your highness with the man.

K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,
Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

Glo. Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king,

His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.

K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.]

What, hast thou been long blind, and now restored?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, was he?

Suf. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.

K. Hen. Where wert thou born?

Simp. At Berwick, in the north, an't like your grace.

K. Hen. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee!

* Let never day nor night unhallo'd pass,
* But still remember what the Lord hath done.

[Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, camest thou here by chance,

Or of devotion; to this holy shrine?]

Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd

* A hundred times, and oft'ner, in my sleep

* By good Saint Alban; who said,—Simpcox, come;

* Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.

[Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft Myself have heard a voice to call him so.]

Car. What, art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suf. How camest thou so? A fall off a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master.

Glo. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

Glo. What, and wouldst climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth,

[Wife. Too true; and hought his climbing very dear,

Glo. 'Mass, thou lovedst plums well, that wouldst venture so.]

* Simp. Alas! good master, my wife desired some damsons,

* And made me climb, with danger of my life.

[Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.—]

* Let me see thine eyes;—wink now; now open them;—

* In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.

* Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God and Saint Alban.

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of?

Simp. Red, master; red as blood.

Glo. Why, that's well said! What colour is my gown of?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

K. Hen. Why, then, thou know'st what colour jet is of?

Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.

Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day, a many.

[Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.]

Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glo. What's thine own name?

Simp. Sautler S' speox, an if it please you, master.

Glo. Then, Sautler, sit thou there, the lyingest knave

In Christendom. I thou hadst been born blind,

Thou mightst as we I have known our names, as thus
To name the severa, colours we do wear.

Sight may distinguish of colours; but suddenly

To nominate them all 's impossible,—

My lords, Saut Allan here hath done a miracle;

And would ye not think that cunning to be great,

That could restore this cripple to his legs?

Simp. O, master, that you could!

Glo. My masters of Saint Alban's, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glo. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight.

[Exit an Attendant.

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by. [A stool brought out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool, and run away.

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand alone;

You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, with the Beadle.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs.—

Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool, and runs away; and the people follow, and cry, A miracle!

[K. Hen. O God, see'st thou this, and bear'st so long?

Q. Mar. It made me laugh, to see the villain run.

Glo. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need.]

Glo. Let them be whipp'd through every market town, till they come to Berwick, whence they came.

[Execut Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c.

* Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

* Suf. True; made the lame to leap, and fly away.

* Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;

* You made, in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

* K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckling hath?

* Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

* A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,—

* Under the countenance and confederacy

* Of lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,

* The ringleader and head of all this rout,—

* Have practised dangerously against your state,

* Dealing with witches, and with conjurers;

* Whom we have apprehended in the fact;

* Raising up wicked spirits from underground,

* Demanding of King Henry's life and death,

* And other of your highness' privy council,

* As more at large your grace shall understand.

* Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means

* Your lady is forthcoming yet at London.

* This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;

* 'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.

[(Aside to Gloster.)

* Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart!

[Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;

And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,

Or to the meanest groom.

K. Hen. O God, what mischiefs work the wicked ones;

Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;

And, look, thyself be faultless, thou wert best.]

* Glo. Madam, for myself, to Heaven I do appeal,

* How I have loved my king, and commonweal;

* And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;

* Sorry I am to hear what I have heard;

* Noble she is; but if she have forgot

* Honour and virtue, and conversed with such

* As, like to pitch, defile nobility,

'I banish her my hed and company;
 And give her, as a prey, to law and shame,
 That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.
 'K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:
 'To-morrow, toward London, back again,
 'To look into this business thoroughly,
 'And coll these foul offenders to their answers;
 'And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
 'Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.
 [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. The Duke of York's Garden.

Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

'York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
 'Our simple supper ended, give me leave,
 'In this close walk, to satisfy myself,
 'In craving your opinion of my title,
 'Which is infallible, to England's crown.
 [Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.]
 'War. Sweet York, begin: and if thy claim be good,
 The Nevils are thy subjects to command.
 'York. Then thus—
 'Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons:
 'The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;
 'The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
 'Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,
 'Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster;
 'The fifth, was Edmond Langley, duke of York;
 'The sixth, was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;
 'William of Windsor was the seventh and last.
 'Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father;
 'And left behind him Richard, his only son,
 'Who, after Edward the Third's death, reign'd as king;
 'Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
 'The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
 'Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,
 'Seiz'd on the realm; deposed the rightful king;
 'Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,
 'And him to Pomfret; where, as all you know,
 'Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.
 [War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
 Thus wot the house of Lancaster the crown. [right;
 York. Which now they hold by force, and not by
 For Richard, the first son's heir being dead,
 The issue of the next son should have reign'd.
 Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
 York. The third son, duke of Clarence, (from whose line

I claim the crown,) had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
 Who married Edmund Mortimer, earl of March;
 Edmund had issue—Roger, earl of March;
 Roger had issue—Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.]
 'Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
 'As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
 'And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
 'Who kept him in captivity, till he died.
 [But, to the rest.]

'York. His eldest sister, Anne,
 My mother, being heir unto the crown,
 Married Richard, earl of Cambridge; who was son
 To Edmond Langley, Edward the Third's fifth son.
 'By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
 'To Roger, earl of March; who was the son
 'Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe,
 'Sole daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence:
 'So, if the issue of the elder son
 'Succeeded before the younger, I am king. [this ?
 'War. What plain proceedings are more plain than
 'Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
 'This fourth son; York claims it from the third.
 'Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
 'It fails not yet; but flourishes in thee,
 'And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—
 'Then, father Salisbury, kneel we both together;
 'And, in this private plot, be we the first,
 'That shall salute our rightful sovereign
 'With honour of his birthright to the crown.
 Both. Long live our sovereign Richard, England's king!

'York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your
 'Till I be crown'd; and that my sword be stain'd
 'With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster:
 [And that's not suddenly to be perform'd;
 But with advice, and silent secrecy.
 Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
 Wink at the duke of Suffolk's insolence,
 At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
 At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
 Till they have snared the shepherd of the flock,
 That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:

'Tis that they seek; and they, in seeking that,
 Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.
 'Sal. My lord, break we off; we know your mind at full.]

'War. My heart assures me, that the earl of Warwick
 'Shall one day make the duke of York a king.
 'York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,—
 'Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
 'The greatest man in England, but the king.
 [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Hall of Justice.

Trumpets sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN
 MARGARET, GLOSTER, YORK, SUFFOLK, and SALISBURY; the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, MARGERY JOURDAIN, SOUTHWELL, HUME, and BOLINGBROKE, under guard.

'K. Hen. Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham, Gloster's wife:
 'In sight of God, and us, your guilt is greet;
 'Receive the sentence of the law, for sins
 'Such as by God's book ore adjudged to death.—
 [You four, from hence to prison back again; (To Jourd. &c.)

From thence unto the place of execution:
 The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes,
 And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.—
 'You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
 'Despoiled of your honour in your life,
 'Shall, after three days' open penance done,
 'Live in your country here, in banishment,
 'With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man. [death.
 'Duch. Welcome is banishment, welcome were my [Glo. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged thee;
 I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—
 [Exeunt the Duchess and the other

Prisoners guarded.
 'Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
 'Al! Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
 'Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground!—
 'I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go:
 'Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.
 'K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey, duke of Gloster: ere 'Give us thy staff; Henry will to himself [thou go,
 'Protector be: and God shall be my hope,
 'My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet;
 'And go in peace, Humphrey; no less beloved,
 'Than when thou wert protector to thy king.
 [Q. Mar. I see no reason, why a kind of years
 Should be to be protected like a child.—
 'God and King Henry govern England's helm:
 'Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.
 'Glo. My staff?—here, noble Henry, is my staff:
 'As willingly do I the same resign,
 'As ere thy father Henry made it mine;
 'And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
 'As others would ambitiously receive it.
 'Farewell, good king: When I am dead and gone,
 'May honourable peace attend thy throne! [Exit [Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;

And Humphrey, duke of Gloster, scarce himself,
 That bears so shrewd a maim; and two pulls at once,—
 His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off;
 This staff of honour rought.—There let it stand.]
 'Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.
 [Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;

Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.]
 'York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,
 'This is the day appointed for the combat;
 'And ready are the appellant and defendant,
 'The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
 'So please your highness to behold the fight.
 [Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely therefore Let I the court, to see this quarrel tried.]
 'K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things
 'Here let them end it, and God defend the right! [sit;
 [York. I never saw a fellow worse bested,
 Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
 The servant of this armourer, my lords.]

Enter, on one side, HORNER, and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it; a drum before him: at the other side, PETER, with a drum and a similar staff; accompanied by Prentices drinking to him.

I Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack: And fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneo.

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let it come, I'faith, and I'll pledge you all: And a fig for Peter!

1 Prent. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and he not afraid.

2 Prent. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master; fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all: [drink, and pray for me, I pray you; for, I think, I have taken my last draught in this world].—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer:—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord, bless me, I pray God! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

Sal. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.—Sirrah, what's thy name?

Peter. Peter, forsooth.

Sal. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thump.

Sal. Thump! then see thou thump thy master well.

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man: [and touching the duke of York, —will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen:] And therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow, as Bevis of Southampton fell upon Ascapart.

[York. Despatch.—This knave's tongue begins to double.—

Sound trumpets, alarum to the combatants.]

[Alarum. They fight, and Peter strikes down his master.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.

[Dies.]

[York. Take away his weapon:—Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.]

Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in 'right!

K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight; For, by his death, we do perceive his guilt:

And God, in justice, hath reveal'd to us: The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,

Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Street.

Enter GLOSTER and Servants, in mourning cloaks.

[Glo. Thus, sometimes, hath the brightest day And, after summer, evermore succeeds [cloud; Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold: So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.]

Sirs, what's o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me,

To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess;

'Neath may she endure the flinty streets,

To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind brook

The abject people, gazing on the face,

With envious looks still laughing at his shame;

That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,

When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.

[But, soft! I think she comes; and I'll prepare

My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.]

Enter the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, in a white sheet, with papers pinned upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand; SIR JOHN STANLEY, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.

Glo. No, stir not, for your lives; let her pass by.

Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame? Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze!

'See, how the giddy multitude do point,

And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee!

Ah, Gloster, hide thee from their hateful looks;

And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame,

And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine.

Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.

Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget my misery.

For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,

And thou a prince, protector of this land,

'Methinks, I should not thus be led along,

Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back;

[And follow'd with a rabble, that rejoice To see my tears, and hear my deep-fet groans.]

The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;

And, when I start, the envious people laugh,

And bid me be advis'd how I tread.

'Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?

[Trow'st thou, that e'er I'll look upon the world,

Or count them happy that enjoy the sun?

No; dark shall be my light, and night my day;

To think upon my pomp, shall be my hell.]

Sometime I'll say, I am duke Humphrey's wife;

And he a prince, and ruler of the land;

Yet so be ruled, and such a prince he was,

As be stood by, whilst I, his former duchess,

'Was made a wender, and a pointing-stock,

To every idle rascal follower.

But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;

Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death

Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will.

For Suffolk,—he, that can do all in all,

'With her that hateth thee, and hates us all,—

And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

Have all limed bushes to betray thy wings,

And, fly, thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:

[But fear not thou, until thy foot be snared,

Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.

Glo. Ah, Nell, forbear; thou almost all awry;

I must offend, before I be attained;

And had I twenty times so many foes,

And each of them had twenty times their power,

All these could not procure me any scathe,

So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.]

'Wouldst have me rescue thee from this reproach?

'Why, yet thy scandal were not wiped away,

'But I in danger for the breach of law,

'Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell:

'I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;

'These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, helden at Bury the first of this next month.

Glo. And my consent ne'er asked herein before!

This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.]

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,

Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.

'Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission

'And Sir John Stanley is appointed now [stays:]

'To take her with him to the Isle of Man.

Glo. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here?

'Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.

Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray

You use her well: the world may laugh again;

And I may live to do you kindness, if

You do it her. And so, Sir John, farewell.

Duch. What, gone, my lord; and bid me not farewell?

Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt Gloster and Servants.]

'Duch. Art thou gone too? [All comfort go with thee!

For none abides with me; my joy is—death;

Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid,

Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—

'Stanley, I pry thee go, and take me hence;

'I care not whither, for I beg no favour,

'Only convey me where thou art commanded.

[Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man,

There to be used according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:

And shall I then be used reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a duchess, and duke Humphrey's lady,

According to that state you shall be used.]

'Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare;

'Although thou hast been conduct of my shame!

'Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

'Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharged.—

'Come, Stanley, shall we go? [sheet:]

'Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this

'And go we to attire you for our journey,

'Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet;

'No, it will hang upon my richest robes,

And shew itself, attire me how I can.

Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Abbey at Bury.

Enter to the Parliament, KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, Cardinal BEAUFORT, SUFFOLK, YORK, BUCKINGHAM, and others.

K. Hen. I muse, my lord of Gloster is not come:

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,

'Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Q. Mar. Can you not see? or will you not observe ' The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
 ' With what a majesty he bears himself;
 ' How insolent of late he is become.
 ' How proud, peremptory, and unlike himself?
 ' We know the time, since he was mild and affable;
 ' And, if we did but glance a far-off look,
 ' Immediately he was upon his knee,
 ' That all the court admired him for submission:
 ' But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
 ' When every one will give the time of day,
 ' He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,
 ' And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,
 ' Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
 ' Small curs are not regarded when they grin;
 ' But great men tremble when the lion roars;
 ' And Humphrey is no little man in England.
 ' First, note, that he is near you in descent;
 ' And should you fall he is the next will mourn.
 ' Me seemeth then, it is no policy,—
 ' Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
 ' And his advantage following your decease,—
 ' That he should come about your royal person,
 ' Or he admitted to your highness's council.
 ' By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts;
 ' And, when he please to make commotion,
 ' 'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.
 ' Now, 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;
 ' Suffer them now, and they 'll o'ergrow the garden,
 ' And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
 ' The reverent care I bear unto my lord,
 ' Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
 ' If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
 ' Which fear, if better reasons can supplant,
 ' I will subscribe and say—I wrong'd the duke.
 ' My lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and York,—
 ' Reprove my allegation, if you can;
 ' Or else conclude my words effectual.

Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;
 ' And, had I first been put to speak my mind,
 ' I think, I should have told your grace's tale.
 [The duchess, by his subornation,
 ' Upon my life, began her devilish practices;
 ' Or if he were not privy to those faults,
 ' Yet, by repute of his high descent,
 ' (As next the king, he was successive heir.)
 ' And such high vaunts of his nobility,
 ' Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess,
 ' By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.]
 ' Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep;
 ' [And in his simple show he harbours treason.]
 ' The fox harks not, when he would steal the lamb.
 ' No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man
 ' Unsound'd yet, and full of deep deceit.

[Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
 ' Devise strange deaths, for small offences done?]
York. And did he not, in his protectorship,
 ' [Levy great sums of money through the realm,
 ' For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
 ' By means whereof, the towns each day revolted.
 ' Buck. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown,
 ' Which time will bring to light in smooth duke Hum-
 ' phrey.

K. Hen. My lords, at once: The care you have of us,
 ' To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,
 ' Is worthy praise: But shall I speak my conscience?
 ' Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent
 ' From meaning treason to our royal person,
 ' As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove:
 ' The duke is virtuous, mild; and too well given,
 ' To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Q. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond ' affiance?
 ' Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
 ' For he's dispos'd as the hateful raven.
 ' Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
 ' For he's inclined as are the ravenous wolves.
 ' Who cannot steal a sheep, that means deceit?
 ' Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
 ' Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter SOMERSET.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!]

K. Hen. Welcome, lord Somerset. What news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories
 ' Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

K. Hen. Cold news, lord Somerset: Not God's will ' be done!

York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,
 ' As firm as I hope for fertile England.
 ' [Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
 ' And caterpillars eat my leaves away:]

But I will remedy this gear ere long,
 ' Or sell my title for a glorious grave. (Exit.)

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!]
 ' Pardon, my liege, that I have staid so long.
 ' Suf. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too soon.
 ' Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art:
 ' I do arrest thee of high treason here.

Glo. Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,
 ' Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
 ' [A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
 ' The purest spring is not so free from mud,
 ' As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:]
 ' Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of
 ' France,

And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay;
 ' By means whereof, his highness hath lost France.

Glo. Is it but thought so? What are they that think it?
 ' I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay,
 ' Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.
 ' So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,—
 ' Ay, night by night,—in studying good for England!
 ' That do it, that e'er I wrested from the king,
 ' Or any groat I hoarded to my use,
 ' Be brought against me at my trial day!
 ' No! many a pound of mine own proper store,
 ' Because I would not tax the needy commons,
 ' Have I dishurs'd to the garrisons,
 ' And never ask'd for restitution.

[Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.

Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me God!]

York. In your protectorship, you did devise
 ' Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of,
 ' That England was defamed by tyranny.

Glo. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was pro' vided for all the fault that was in me; [Exit.]
 ' [For I should melt at an offender's tears,
 ' And lowly words were ransom for their fault.]

' Unless it were a bloody murderer,
 ' Or foul felonious thief, that fleeced poor passengers.

' I never gave them condign punishment:
 ' Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I tortured

' Above the felon, or what trespass else.

' Suf. My lord, these faults are easy, quickly an-
 ' swer'd:

' But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,

' Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.

' I do arrest you in his highness' name;

' And here commit you to my lord cardinal

' To keep, until your farther time of trial.

' K. Hen. My lord of Gloster, 'tis my special hope ' That you will clear yourself from all suspects;

' My conscience tells me you are innocent.

Glo. Ah, gracious lord, these days are dangerous!

[Virtue is choked with foul ambition,
 ' And charity chased hence by rancour's hand;
 ' Foul subornation is predominant,
 ' And equity exiled your highness' land.
 ' I know, their plot is to have my life:]

' And, if my death might make this island happy,

' And prove the period of their tyranny,

' I would expend it with all willingness;

' But mine is made the prologue to their play;

' For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,

' Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.

' Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,

' And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;

' Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue

' The envious load that lies upon his heart;

' And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
 ' Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
 ' By false accuse doth level at my life:—
 ' And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
 ' Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
 ' [And, with your best endeavour, have stir'd up
 ' My liefeft liege to be mine enemy:—
 ' Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,
 ' Myself had notice of your conventicles.]
 ' And all to make away my guiltless life:
 ' I shall not want false witness to condemn me,
 ' Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
 ' The ancient proverb will be well affected,—
 ' A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

[Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:

if those, that care to keep your royal person

From treason's secret knife, and traitors' rage,

Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,

And the offender granted scope of speech,

'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.]

Suf. Hath he not twist our sovereign lady here

' With ignominious words, though clerksly couch'd,

* As if she had surnamed some to swear
 * False allegations, to o'erthrow his state ?
 * Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide.
 * Glo. Far truer spoke, than meant ; I lose, indeed ;—
 * Besrew the winners, for they play'd me false !
 * [And well such losers may have leave to speak.]
 * Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day.—
 * Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner.
 * Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.
 * Glo. Ah, thus King Henry throws away his crutch,
 Before his legs be firm to bear his body :
 * Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
 * And wolves are gnawing who shall gnaw thee first.
 * Ah, that my fear were false ! ah, that it were !
 * For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exeunt Attendants, with Gloster.]

K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,
 Do, or undo, as if myself were here.

Q. Mar. What, will your highness leave the parliament ?

K. Hen. Ay, Margaret ; my heart is drown'd with [Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes ;
 My body round enwrap with misery ;
 For what's more miserable than discontent ?—
 Ah, uncle Humphrey ! in thy face I see
 The map of honour, truth, and loyalty ;
 And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,
 That e'er I proved thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
 What low'ring star now envies thy estate,
 That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,
 Do seek subversion of thy harmless life ?
 Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong :
 As if the hatcher takes away the calf,
 And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,
 Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house ;
 Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence,
 And as the dam runs howling up and down,
 Looking the way her harmless young one went,
 And can do nought but wail her darling's loss ;
 Even so myself bewails good Gloster's case
 With sad unhelpful tears ; and with dimm'd eyes
 Look after him, and cannot do him good ;
 So mighty are his vowed enmities.]

* His fortunes I will weep ; and, 'twixt each groan,
 * Say,—Who's a traitor ! Gloster he is none. [Exit.]
 * [Q. Mar. Free lords, cold snow melts with the sun's Henry my lord is cold in great affairs, [hot beams.
 Too full of foolish pity ; and Gloster's show
 Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile
 With sorrow snares relenting passengers ;
 Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering bank,
 With shining chameleon's slough, doth sting a child,
 That, for the beauty thinks it excellent,
 Believe, me, lords, were none more wise than I,
 (And yet, herein, I judge mine own wit good,)]
 * This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,
 * To rid us from the fear we have of him.

[*Car. That he should die is worthy policy ;
 But yet we want a colour for his death ;
 'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law.*]
 * Suf. But, in my mind, that were no policy :
 The king will labour still to save his life,
 The commons haply rise to save his life ;
 And yet we have but trivial argument,
 More than niktust, that shows him worthy death.

York. So that by this, you would not have him die.
 Suf. Ah, York, no man alive so fair as I.
 York. 'Tis York, that hath more reason for his death.—
 But, my lord cardinal, and you, my lord of Suffolk,—
 Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,— Were't not all one, an empty eagle were set
 To guard the kitchen from a hungry kite,
 As place duke Humphrey for the king's protector ?]

Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
 * Suf. Madam, 'tis true : And were't not madness,
 * To make the fox surveyor of the fold ? [to these,
 * Who being accused a crafty murderer,
 * His guilt should be but idly posted over,
 * Because his purpose is not executed,
 * No ; let him die, in that he is a fox,
 * By nature proved an enemy to the flock,
 * Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood ;
 * As Humphrey, proved by reasons, to my liege,
 * And do not stand on quilllets, how to slay him :
 * Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
 * Sleeping, or waking, 'tis no matter how,
 * So he be dead ; for that is good deceit
 * Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.]

[Q. Mar. Thrice noble Suffolk, 'tis resolutely spoke.
 Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done :

For things are often spoke, and seldom meant :
 But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
 Seeing the deed is meritorious,
 And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—
 Say but the word, and I will be his priest.

Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,
 Ere you can take due orders for a priest :
 Say, you consent, and censure well the deed,
 And I'll provide his executioner.

I tender so the safety of my liege,
 Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.
 Q. Mar. And so say I.
 York. And I ; and now we three have spoke it,
 It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.]

[Enter a Messenger.]

* Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come amon,
 * To signify—that rebels there are up,

* And put the Englishmen unto the sword ;
 [Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
 Before the wound do grow incurable
 For, being green, there is great hope of help.]

Car. A breach that craves a quick expedient stop !]

* What counsel give you in this weighty cause ?

* York. That Somerset be sent as regent thither :

* 'Tis meet, that lucky ruler be employ'd ;

* Witness the fortune he hath had in France.

* Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,

* Had been the regent there instead of me,

* He never would have staid in France so long.

* York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done :

* I rather would have lost my life betimes,

* [Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
 * By staying there so long, till all were lost.
 * Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin :
 * Men's flesh preserved so whole, do seldom win.]

Q. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a raging fire,

If wind and fuel he brought to feed it with :—

No more, good York ;—sweet Somerset, be still :—

Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there,

Might happily have proved far worse than his.]

York. What, worse than naught ? nay, then a shame take all !

* Som. And in the number, thee, that wishest shame !

* Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.

* The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,

* And temper clay with blood of Englishmen ;

* To Ireland will you lead a band of men,

* Collected choicely, from each county some,

* And try your hap against the Irishmen ?

[Suf. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.

* Suf. Why, our authority is his consent ;

* And, what we do establish, he confirms :

* The noble York, take thou this task in hand.]

* York. I am content : Provide me soldiers, lords,

* Whiles I take order for mine own affairs,

* Suf. A charge, lord York, that I will see perform'd.

* But now return we to the false duke Humphrey.

* Car. No more of him : for I will deal with him,

* That, henceforth, he shall trouble us no more.

* And so break off ; the day is almost spent :

* Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.

* York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,

* At Bristol I expect my soldiers :

* For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.

Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.

[Exeunt all but York.]

* York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful
 thoughts,

* And change misdoubt to resolution :

[*Be that thou hopest to be ; or what thou art
 Resign to death, it is not worth the enjoying ;
 Let pale-faced fear keep with the mean-born man,
 And find no harbour in a royal heart.
 Faster than spring-time showers, comes thought on thought ;
 And not a thought, but thinks on dignity.
 My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
 Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
 Well, noles, well, 'tis politely done,
 To send me packing with an host of men ;
 I fear me, you but warm the starv'd snake,
 Who, cherish'd in your hearts, will sting our hearts.
 'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me :
 I take it kindly ; yet, he well assured
 You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands,
 Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
 [I will stir up in England some black storm,
 Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell ;
 And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
 Until the golden circuit on my head,
 Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,*

Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.]
 'And, for a minister of my intent,
 'I have seduced a headstrong Kentishman,
 John Cade of Ashford,
 'To make commotion, as full well he can,
 'Under the title of John Mortimer.
 [In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
 Oppose himself against a troop of kernes;
 And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
 Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine:
 And, in the end being rescued, I have seen him
 Caper upright like a wild Morisco,
 Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.
 Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kerne,
 Hath he convers'd with the enemy;
 And undiscover'd come to me again,
 And given me notice of their villanies.
 This devil here shall he my substitute;
 For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
 In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble.]
 'Ev' this I shall perceive the commons' mind,
 'How they affect the house and claim of York
 'Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortured;
 'I know, no pain they can inflict upon him,
 'Will make him say—I moved him to those arms.
 'Say, that he thrive, as 'tis great like he will,
 'Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
 'And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd:
 'For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
 'And Henry put apart, the next for me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

1. Mar. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
 [We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.]
 2. Mar. O. that it were to do!—What have we done?
 Didst ever hear a man so penitent?]

Enter SUFFOLK.

1. Mar. Here comes my lord.
 'Suf. Awk. Now, sirs, have you Despatch'd this thing?
 '1. Mar. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.
 'Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;
 'I will reward you for this venturesome deed.
 'The king and all the peers are here at hand.—
 'Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
 'According as I gave directions?
 1. Mar. 'Tis, god my lord.
 'Suf. Away, ye gone! [Exit Murderers.]
 Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET,
 Cardinal BEAUFORT, SOMERSET, Lords, and others.
 'K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight;
 'Say, we intend to try his grace to-day,
 'If he be guilty, as 'tis published.
 'Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit.]
 'K. Hen. Lords, take your places.—And I pray you all,
 'Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloucester,
 'Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
 'He be approved in practise culpable.
 '[Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail,
 That faultless may condemn a nobleman!
 Pray God, he may acquit him of suspicion!
 K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—]

Re-enter SUFFOLK.

'How new? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest
 thou?
 Where is our uncle? what is the matter, Suffolk?
 'Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloucester is dead.
 [Q. Mar. Mary, God forefend!
 'Car. God's secret judgment!—I did dream to-night,
 The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.]
 (The King swoons.)
 'Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords! the king is dead.
 [Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the nose.
 Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help!—O Henry, open thine eyes!
 'Suf. He doth revive again.—Madam, be patient.
 K. Hen. O heavenly God!
 'Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?
 'Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort!
 'K. Hen. What doth my lord of Suffolk comfort me?
 Came he right now to sing a raven's note,
 [Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers;]

And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,
 'By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
 'Can chase away the first-conceiv'd sound?
 [Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words,
 Lay not thy hands on me; for heaven, I say;
 'Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.]
 Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
 'Upon thy eye-balls murder's tyranny
 'Sits in grim majesty to fright the world.
 'Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding!—
 'Yet do not go away!—Come, basilisk,
 'And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:
 [For in the shade of death I shall find joy;
 In life, but double death, now Gloucester's dead.]
 Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk thus?
 [Although the duke was enemy to him,
 Yet he most Christian-like, laments his death:
 And for myself,—for as he was to me,
 Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
 Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
 I would he blind with weeping, sick with groans,
 Look pale as primrose, with blood drinking sighs,
 And all to have the noble duke alive.]
 'What know I how the world may deem of me?
 'For it is known, we were but hollow friends;
 'It may be judged, I made the duke away;
 [So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,
 And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.
 This get I by his death: Ah me, unhappy!
 To be a queen, and crown'd with infamy!]
 'K. Hen. Ah, wo is me for Gloucester, wretched man!
 Q. Mar. Be wo for me, more wretched than he is.
 What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?
 I am no loathsome leper, look on me.
 [What, art thou, like the adder, when ween'd?
 Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.
 Is all thy comfort shut in Gloucester's tomb?
 Wh', then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy:
 Erect his statue then, and worship it,
 And make my image but an alehouse sign.]
 Was I, for this, nigh wreck'd upon the sea;
 'And twice by aukward wind from England's bank
 'Drove back again unto my native clime?
 What bodied this, but well-forewarning wind
 Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest,
 [Nor set no footing on this unkind shore?
 What did I then, but cursed the gentle gusts,
 And he that loosed them from their hrezen caves;
 And bid them blow towards England's blessed shore,
 Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock?
 Yet Æolus would not be a murderer,
 But left that hateful office unto thee:
 The pretty vaulting sea refused to drown me;
 Knowing, that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore,
 With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness:
 The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
 And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
 Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
 Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
 As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
 When from the shore the tempest beat us back,
 I stood upon the hatches in the storm:
 And when the dusky sky began to rob
 My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,
 I took a costly jewel from my neck,—
 A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
 And threw it towards thy land,—the sea received it;
 And so, I wish'd, thy body might my heart:
 And even with this, I lost fair England's view,
 And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart:
 And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,
 For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
 How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue
 (The agent of thy foul inconstancy)
 To sit and watch me, as Aesculus did,
 When he to madding Dido would unfold
 His father's acts, commenced in burning Troy?
 Am I not witch'd like her? or thou net false like him?
 Ah me, I can no more! Die, Margaret!
 For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.]

Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY.

The Commons press to the door.

'War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
 'That good duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd
 'By Suffolk and the cardinal Beaufort's means.
 'The commons, like an angry hive of bees,
 'That want their leader, scatter up and down,
 'And care not who they sting in his revenge.
 'Mussell have calm'd their spiteful mutiny,
 'Until they hear the order of his death.
 'K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true;

But how he died, God knows, not Henry:
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege.—Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude, till I return.

[Warwick goes into an inner room, and Salisbury retires.]

[K. Hen. O thou, that judgest all things, stay my thoughts;
My thoughts, that labour to persuade my soul,
Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life!
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee!
Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain
Upon his face an ocean of salt tears;
To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling:
But all in vain are these mean obsequies;
And to survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?]

The folding doors of an inner chamber are thrown open, and GLOSTER is discovered dead in his bed: WARWICK and others standing by it.

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made:
For, with his soul, fled all my worldly solace;
For seeing him, I see my life in death.]

War. As surely as my soul intends to live
With that dread King, that took our state upon him,
To free us from his Father's wrathful curse,
I do believe, that violent hands were laid
Upon the life of this thrice-fam'd duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue!

What instance gives lord Warwick for his vow?

War. See, how the blood is settled in his face!

Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,

Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,

Being all descended to the labouring heart;

Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,

Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy;

Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again.

But, see, his face is black, and full of blood;

His eye-balls farther out than when he lived,

Staring full ghastly like a strangled man;

His hair uprear'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggling;

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd

And tuggd for life, and was by strength subdued.

Look on the sheets, his hair, you see, is sticking;

His well-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodged.

It cannot be, but he was murder'd here;

The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?

Myself, and Beaufort, had him in protection;

And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.

War. But both of you were word'd duke Humphrey's foes;

And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep;

'Tis like, you would not feast him like a friend;

[And 'tis well seen he found an enemy.]

Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen

[As guilty of duke Humphrey's timeless death.]

War. Who finds the heifer dead, and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an ax,

But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter?

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,

But may imagine how the bird was dead,

Although the kite soar with unblooded beak?

Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk; where's your knife?

Is Beaufort term'd a kite? where are his talons?

Suf. I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men;

But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,

That shall be scour'd in his rancorous heart,

That slanders me with murder's crimson badge:—

Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwick-hire,
That I am faintly in duke Humphrey's death.

[Exeunt Cardinal, Somerset, and others.]

War. What dar'st not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?

Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,

Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still; with reverence may I say;

For every word you speak in his behalf,

Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour!

If every lady wrong'd her lord so much,

Thy mother took into her harmful bed

Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock

Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou art,

And never of the Nevils' noble race.

War. But that the guilt of murderer hucklers thee,

And I should rob the deathman of his fee,

Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,

And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,

I would, false murderers coward, on thy knee

Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,

And say—it was thy mother, that thou meant'st,

That thou thyself wast born in bastardy;

And, after all this fearful homage done;

Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to bell,

Pernicious bloodsucker of sleeping men!

Suf. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy blood,

If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence:

[Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to duke Humphrey's ghost.]

[Exeunt Suffolk and Warwick.]

K. Hen. What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted?

Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just;

And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.]

Q. Mar. What noise is this? (A noise within.)

Re-enter SUFFOLK and WARWICK, with their weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, how now, lords? your wrathful weapons drawn

Here in our presence? dare you be so bold?—

Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?

Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury,
Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a crowd within. Re-enter SALISBURY.

[Sal. Sirs, stand apart; the king shall know your mind.—] (Speaking to those within.)

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,

Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death,
Or banish'd fair England's territories,

They will by violence tear him from your palace,

[And torture him with grievous lingering death.]

They say, by him the good duke Humphrey died;

They say, in him they fear your highness' death;

And mere instinct of love, and loyalty,—

Free from a stubborn opposite intent,

As being thought to contradict your liking,—

Makes them thus forward in his banishment.

[They say, in care of your most royal person,
That, if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge—that no man should disturb your rest,
In pain of your dislike, or pain of death,
Yet notwithstanding such a strait edict,
Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That slyly glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were waked;
Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal;
And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, whie'er you will, or no,
From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenom'd and fatal sting,
Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.]

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, my lord of Salisbury.

Suf. 'Tis like, the commons, rude unpolish'd binds,
Could send such message to their sovereign;

But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,

To shew how quaint an orator you are;

But all the honour Salisbury hath won,
Is—that he was the lord ambassador,
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, or we will all break in.

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,

I thank them for their tender loving care;

And had I not been cited so by them,

Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;

For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy

Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means.

And therefore—by his Majesty I swear,

Whose far unworthy deputy I am,—

'He shall not breathe in action in this air
'But three days longer, on the pain of death.
[Exit Salisbury.]
'Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk!
'K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.
'No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him,
'Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
'Had I but said, I would have kept my word;
'But when I swear, it is irrevocable—
[If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found
On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life, —]
'Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me;
'I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Reënt K. Henry, Warwick, Lords, &c.]
'Q. Mar. Mischance and sorrow go along with you!
'Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,
'Be playfellows to keep you company!
'There's two of you; the devil make a third,
'And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps.
[Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.]
'Q. Mar. Py, coward woman, and soft-hearted wretch!
'Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies?
'Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse
them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
'I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
[As curses, as harsh, and horrible to hear,] Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
'With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-faced envy in her loathsome cave;
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
My hair be fix'd on end, as one distract;
Ay, every joint should seem to crouch and ban;
And even now my burden'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!
Their chiefest prospects, murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch, as smart as lizards' stings!
Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss;
And boding screech-owls make the concert full!
All the foul-terrors in dark-seated hell—

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself;

[And these dread curses—like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun,—recoil,
And turn the force of them upon thyself.]

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where biting cold would never let grass grow,
And think it but a minute spent in sport.

[Q. Mar. O, let me entreat thee, cease! Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears;
Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woful monuments.]
'O, could this kiss be printed in thy hand;

[Kisses his hand.]

[That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,]

'Through whom a thousand sighs are breathed for thee!

'So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;

'Tis but surmised whilst thou art standing by,

[As one that surfeits thinking on a want.]

'I will repeal thee, or, be well assured,

'Adventure to be banished myself:

[And banished I am, if but from thee.

Go, speak not to me; even now be gone.—

O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends, condemn'd,

Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,

Leather a hundred times to part than die.

Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!]

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banish'd,

Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.

]Tis not the laud I care for, wert thou hence:

A wilderness is populous enough,

So Suffolk bad thy heavenly company;

For where thou art, there is the world itself,

With every several pleasure in the world:

And where thou art not, desolation.

I can no more:—Live thou to joy thy life;

Myself no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.]

Enter VAUX.

'Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pr'ythee?

'Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,

That Cardinal Beaufort is at point of death:

'For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,
'That makes him gasp, and staro, and catch the air,
'Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
'Sometime, he talks as if duke Humphrey's ghost
'Were by his side; sometime, he calls the king,
'And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
[The secrets of his overcharged soul:]
'And I am sent to tell his majesty,
'That even now he cries aloud for bim.

'Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exit Vaux.]

'Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?

'But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,
'Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?

'Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,
'That with the southern clouds contend in tears?

'Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows?
'Now, get thee hence: The king, thou know'st is coming.'

'If thou be depart from me, thou art but dead.

'Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live:

'And in thy sight to die, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?

Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
'As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,

Dying with mother's dug between its lips:

Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,

'And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes;

'To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;

'So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,

And then it lived in sweet Elysium.

To die by thee, were but to die to jest;

From thee to die, were torture more than death:

O, let me stay, befall what may befall.

'Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful corrosive,
'It is applied to a deathful wound.

'To France, sweet Suffolk; Let us hear from thee;

'For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.

Suf. I go.

Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woful'st cask
That evergild contain a thing of worth.

Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we:
This way fall I to death.

Q. Mar. This way for me. [Reënt, severally]

SCENE III.—London. Cardinal Beaufort's Bed-chamber.

Enter KING HENRY, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and others. The Cardinal in bed; Attendants with him.

[K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.]

'Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's treasure.

'Enough to purchase such another island,

'So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.

[K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
When death's approach is seen so terrible!]

War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.]

'Died he not in his bed? where should he die?

Can I make men live, wh'er they will or no?—

[O! torture me no more, I will confess.—]

'Alive again? then shew me where he is;

'I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.—

[He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.—]

'Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,

'Like him—twigs set to catch my winged soul!—

'Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary

'Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

[K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!]

O, beat away the busy meddling fiend,

That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,

And from his bosom purge this black despair!

'War. See bow the pangs of death do make him grin.

[Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peacefully.

K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!]

'Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,

'Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—

'He dies, and makes no sign; O God, forgive him!

'War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.

'K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all.—

'Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;

'And let us all to meditation. [Reënt.]

John. So be had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentlemen came up.

[Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicraftsmen.]

John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

[Geo. Nay, more, the king's council are no good workmen.]

John. True: And yet it is said,—Labour in thy vocation: which is as much to say, as,—let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Geo. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better sign of a brave mind than a hard hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham:—

Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies, to make dog's leather of.

John. And Dick the butcher,—

Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

John. And Smith the weaver.

Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

John. Come, come, let's fall in with them.]

Drum. Enter CADE, DICK the butcher, SMITH the weaver, and others in great number.

CADE. We, John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,—

DICK. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herrings.

[Aside.]
CADE. —for our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes,— Command silence.

DICK. Silence!

CADE. My father was a Mortimer,—

DICK. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer.

CADE. My mother a Plantagenet,—

DICK. I knew her well, she was a midwife.

CADE. My wife descended of the Lacies,—

DICK. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces.

SMITH. But, now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home.

CADE. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

DICK. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable; and there was he born, under a bedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage.

CADE. Valiant I am.

SMITH. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant.

CADE. I am able to endure much.

DICK. No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market days together.

CADE. I fear neither sword nor fire.

SMITH. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.

DICK. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt in the hand for stealing of sheep.

CADE. Be brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be, in England, seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass. And when I am king, (as king I will be)—

ALL. God save your majesty!

CADE. I thank you, good people:—there shall be no money: all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.

DICK. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

CADE. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say, the bee stings; but I say, 'tis the bee's wax. For I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now? who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of CHATHAM.

SMITH. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and cast account.

CADE. O monstrous!

SMITH. We took him setting of boys' copies.

CADE. Here's a villain!

SMITH. He has a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.

CADE. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

DICK. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.

CADE. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee:

What is thy name?

CLERK. Emmanuel.

DICK. They use to write it on the top of letters;—

'Twill go hard with you.

CADE. Let me alone:—Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

CLERK. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

ALL. He hath confessed: away with him; he's a villain, and a traitor.

CADE. Away with him, I say: bang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exeunt some with the Clerk.]

Enter MICHAEL.

MICH. Where's our general?

CADE. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

MICH. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

CADE. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down:

He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself:

He is but a knight, is 'a?

MICH. No.

CADE. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently; rise up, Sir John Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter SIR HUMPHREY STAFFORD, and WILLIAM, his brother, with drum and Forces.

[Staff. Rebellious hinds, the filth and scum of Kent,

Mark'd for the gallows,—lay your weapons down,

Home to your cottages, forsake this groom;—

The king is merciful, if you revolt.

W. Staff. But angry, wrathful, and inclined to blood,

If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.]

CADE. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not;

It is to you, good people, that I speak,

[O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign;

For I am rightful heir unto the crown.]

Staff. Villain, thy father was a plasterer;

And thou thyself a sheersman, art 'a'bout not?

CADE. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staff. And what of that?

CADE. Marry, this:—Edmund Mortimer, earl of

March,

Married the duke of Clarence's daughter: Did he not?

W. Staff. Ay, sir.

CADE. By her, he had two children at one birth.

W. Staff. That's false.

CADE. Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 'tis true:

The elder of them, being put to nurse,

Was by a beggar-woman stolen away;

And, ignorant of his birth and parentage,

Became a bricklayer, when he came to age;

His son am I; deny it, if you can.

DICK. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be king.

SMITH. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore, deny it not.

[Staff. And will you credit this base drudge's words,

That speaks he knows not what?

ALL. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.]

W. Staff. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you this.

[CADE. Helies, for I invented it myself.]

[Aside.]—Go to, sirrah, tell the king from me, that — for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to spang-counter for French crowns, — I am content he shall reign, but I'll be protector over him.

DICK. And, furthermore, we'll have the lord Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

CADE. And good reason; for thereby is England maimed, and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you, that that lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch: and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.

Staff. O gross and miserable ignorance

CADE. Nay, answer, if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go to then, I ask but this: Can he, that speaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good counsellor, or no?

[ALL. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.]

W. Staff. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail,

Assail them with the army of the king.]

Staff. Herald, away: and, throughout every town,

Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;
 That those, which fly before the battle end,
 May, even in their wives' and children's sight,
 Be bang'd up for example at their doors—
 And you, that he the king's friends, follow me.
[Exeunt the two Staffords, and Forces.]
[Cade, And you, that love the commons, follow me.—
Now show yourselves men, 'tis for liberty.
We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:
Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoon;
For they are thrifty honest men, and such
As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.
Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.
Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward.] [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another part of Blackheath.

Alarums. The two parties enter, and fight, and both the STAFFORDS are slain.

Cade. Where's Dick the butcher of Ashford?
Dick. Here, sir.
Cade. They feed before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavest thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will I reward thee,—The Lent shall be as long again as it is;
and thou shalt have a licence to kill for a hundred lacking one.
Dick. I desire no more.
Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less.
This monument of the victory will I hear; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels, till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.
Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the goals, and let out the prisoners.
Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London.] [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, reading a supplication; the Duke of BUCKINGHAM, and Lord SAY, with him: at a distance, QUEEN MARGARET, mourning over SUFFOLK'S head.

[Q. Mar. Oft have I heard—that grief softens the
And makes it fearful and degenerate; [mild,
Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep.
But who can cease to weep and look on this?
Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast;
But where 's the bolts that I should embrace?]
'Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?
[K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat:]
For God forbid, so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword! And I myself,
Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade, their general.—
But stay, I'll read it over once again. [face
[Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely Ruled, like a wandering planet, over me;
And could it not enforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same?]
'K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.
'Say. Ay, but I hope, your highness shall have his.
K. Hen. How now, madam? Still
Lamenting, and mourning for Suffolk's death?
I fear, my love, if that I had been dead,
Thou wouldst not have mourn'd so much for me.
Q. Mar. No, my love, I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

[K. Hen. How now! what news? why comest thou in such haste?]
'Mess. The rebels are in Southwark; Fly, my lord:
Jack Cade proclaims himself Lord Mortimer;
Descended from the duke of Clarence's house;
And calls your grace usurper, opulent,
And vows to crown himself in Westminster;
His army is a ragged multitude
Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death
Hath given them heart and courage to proceed:
All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call—false caterpillars, and intend their death.
[K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.]
Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenilworth,
Until a power be raised to put them down.

[Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive,
These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.]
'K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with us to Kenilworth.
'Say. So might your grace's person be in danger:
The sight of me is odious in their eyes
And therefore in this city will I stay,
And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

[2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bridge; the citizens
Fly and forsake their houses:
The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear,
To spoil the city, and your royal court.
Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away, take horse.
K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will account us.
Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd.
K. Hen. Farewell, my lord; (to Lord Say) trust not the Kentish rebels.
Buck. Trust no body, for fear you be betray'd.]
'Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same. The Tower.

Enter LORD SCALES, and others, on the walls.
 Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scalus. How now? is Jack Cade slain?
I Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.
Scalus. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command;
But I am troubled here with them myself,
The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will send you Matthew Gough:
Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;
And so farewell, for I must hence again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. Cannon-street.

Enter JACK CADE, and his Followers. He strikes his staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command, that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me
other than—lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade
Cade. Knock him down there. (They kill him.)
[Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more; I think he hath a very fair warning.]
Dick. My lord, there 's an army gathered together in Smithfield.
Cade. Come then, let's go fight with them: But, first, go and set London-bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The same. Smithfield.

Alarums. Enter, on one side, CADE and his Company;
 on the other, Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by MATTHEW GOUGH. They fight the Citizens are routed and MATTHEW GOUGH is slain.

Cade. So, sirs.—Now, go some and pull down the Swoy; others to the inns of court; down with them
all.
Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.
Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.
Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.
'John. Mass, 'twill be sore law then; for he was thrust in the month with a spear, and 'tis not whole
'yet. (Aside.)
'Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his 'breath stinks with eating toasted cheese. (Aside.)
'Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so. Away,
'burn all the records of the realm; my mouth shall be
'the Parliament of England.
[John. Then we are like to have blinding statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. (Aside.)

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.]

Enter a Messenger.

'Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here 's the lord 's Say, which sold the towns in France; [he that made us pay one-and-twenty fifteen, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.]

Enter GEORGE BEVIS, with the LORD SAY.

'Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.
'—Ah, thou say, thou serge, nay, thou huckran lord!
'Now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction: regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for getting up of Normandy unto monsieur Basimecu, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presence, even the presence of lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb; and such abominable words, as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison: and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

[Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.]

Say. You men of Kent,—

Dick. What say you of Kent?

'Cade. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.
Say. Away with him, away with him! lie speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you will.]

'Kent, in the commentaries Cæsar writ,
'Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle:
'Sweet is the country, because full of riches;
'The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy;
'Which makes me hope you are not roid of pity.
'I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy;
[Yet, to recover them would lose my life.
Justice with favour have I always done;
Prayers and tears have moved me, gifts could never.
When have I aught exacted at your hands,
Kent to maintain, the king, the realm, and you?
Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks,
Because my book prefer'd me to the king:
And—seeing ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven,—
Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits,
You cannot but forbear to murder me.
This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings
For your behoof,—

Cade. Tut! when struck'st thou one blow in the field.

Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck

Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.

Geo. O monstrous coward! what, to come behind folks?

Say. These cheeks are pale for watching for your good.

Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

Say. Long sitting to determine poor men's causes] Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

[Cade. Ye shall have a henpen caudle then, and the pap of a hatchet.]

'Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

'Say. The palsy, and no fear provoketh me.

'Cade. Nay, he nods at us; as who should say, 'I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand stender on a pole, or no: Take him away, and behead him.

[Say. Tell me, wherein I have offended most?

Have I affected wealth, or honour; speak?

Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?

Is my apparel sumptuous to behold?

Whom have I injured, that ye seek my death?

These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding.

This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts. O, let me live!

Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll bridle it; he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue; he speaks not o' God's name.] 'Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

[Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your prayers,

God should be so obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls?
And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye.]

[Exit some, with Lord Say.

'The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead ere they have it: Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

'Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O brave!

Re-enter Rebels, with the heads of LORD SAY, and his Son-in-law.

Cade. But is not this braver?—Let them kiss one another, for they loved well, when they were alive.
'Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night; for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets; and at every corner, have them kiss.—
Away! [Exit.

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Alorvm. Enter CADE, and all his Rabblement.

[Cade. Up Fish-street! down St Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!—[A parley sounded, then a retreat.] What noise is this I hear? dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter BUCKINGHAM and Old CLIFFORD, with Forces.

'Buck. Ay, here they be, that dare and will disturb thee:

'Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king
'Unto the commons, whom thou hast misled;
'And here pronounce free pardon to them all,
'That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

'Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent,
'And yield to mercy, whilst 'tis offer'd you;
'Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths?

'Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon,
'Pling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty!

'Who hate him, and honour not his father,
'Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake,

'Snake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What, Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him?

'Will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London Gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought, ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recovered your ancient freedom: but you are all recresants, and dastards; and delight to live in slavery to the nobility.

'Let them break your backs with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces: For me,—I will make shift for one; and so—God's curse light upon you all!

All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth?

'That thus you do exclaim—you'll go with him?

'Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
'And make the meanest of you carls and dukes?

'Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to;
'Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil,

'Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.

'Were't not a shame, that whilst you live at Jar,

'The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
'Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you?

'Methinks, already, in this civil broil,
'I see them lording it in London streets,

'Crying—Villages unto all they meet.

Better, ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry,
 Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy.
 To France, to France, and get what you have lost;
 Spare England, for it is your native coast;
 Henry hath money, you are strong and manly;
 God on our side, doubt not of victory.
All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king, and Clifford.
Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro, as this multitude? the name of Henry the Fifth hales them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together, to surprise me; my sword make way for me, for here is no staying.—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you! and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels. [Exit.
Buck. What, is he fled? go some, and follow him;
 And he, that brings his head unto the king,
 Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.—
[Exeunt some of them.
 Follow me, soldiers; we'll devise a mean
 To reconcile you all unto the king. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Kenesworth Castle.

*Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET,
 and SOMERSET, on the terrace of the Castle.*

[K. Hen. Was ever king, that joy'd an earthly throne,
 And could command no more contented than I?
 No sooner was I crept out of my cradle,
 But I was made a king, at nine months' old;
 Was never subject long'd to be a king,
 As I do long and wish to be a subject.]

Enter BUCKINGHAM and CLIFFORD.

[Buck. Health and glad tidings to your majesty!
K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor Cade surprised?
 Or is he but retired to make him strong?]

Enter, below, a great number of CADE'S Followers, with halbers about their necks.

Clif. He's my lord, and all his powers do yield;
 And bumbly thus, with halbers on their necks,
 Expect your highness' doom, of life or death.
K. Hen. Then, Heaven, set ope thy everlasting
 gates,
 To entertain my vows of thanks and praise! —
 Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
 And shew'd how well you love your prince and country:
 Continue still in this so good a mind,
 And Henry, though he be unfortunate,
 Assure yourselves, will never be unkind:
 And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,
 I do dismiss you to your several countries.
All. God save the king! God save the king!

Enter a Messenger.

[Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised,
 The duke of York is newly come from Ireland:
 And with a puissant and a mighty power,
 Of Gallow-glasses, and stout Kernes,
 Is marching hitherward in proud array;
 And still proclaimeth, as he comes along,
 His arms are only to remove from thee]
 The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.
[K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd;
 Like to a ship, that, having 'scaped a tempest,
 Is straightway calm'd and boarded with a pirate:
 But now is Cade driven back, his men dispersed;
 And now is York in arms to second him.—
 I pray thee, Buckingham, go forth and meet him;
 And ask him, what's the reason of these arms.
 Tell him, I'll send duke Edmund to the Tower;
 And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,
 Until his army be dismiss'd from him.
Som. My lord,
 I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
 Or unto death, to do my country good.
K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms;
 For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.
Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal,
 As all things shall redound unto your good.
K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better;
 For yet may England curse my wretched reign.]
[Exeunt

SCENE X.—Kent. Iden's Garden.

Enter CADE.

[Cade. Fly on ambition! fly on myself: that have a sword, and yet am ready to faint! These five days have I hid me in these woods; and durst not peep out, for all the country is lay'd for me; but now I am so hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick-wall have I climbed into this garden; to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather.
 And, I think, this word sallet was born to do me good:
 for, many a time, but for a sallet, my brain-pain had been cleft with a brown bill; and, many a time when I have been dry and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.]

Enter IDEN, with Servants.

Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court,
 And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?
 This small inheritance, my father left me,
 Contenteth me, and is worth a monarchy.
 I seek not to wax great by others' waning;
 Or gather wealth, I care not with what eny:
 Sufficeth, that I have maintains my state,
 And sends the poor well pleas'd from my gate.
Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave.
 —Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king for carrying my head to him; but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why, rude companion, whatsoever thou he,
 I know thee not: Why then should I betray thee?
 Is't not enough, to break into my garden,
 And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
 Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
 But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and beard thee too. Look on me well:
 I have eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door nail, I pray God, I may never eat grass more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England
 That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent, [stands,
 Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.

Oppose thy steadfast gazing eyes to mine,
 See if thou canst outface me with thy looks.
 Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
 Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
 Thy leg a stick, compar'd with this truncheon;
 My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
 And if my arm be heav'd in the air,
 Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
 As for more words, whose greatness answers words,
 Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

[Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard.]—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the huzley-boned clown in chine of heef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech God on my knees, thou mayest be turned to hobnails. (They fight. Cade falls.) O, I am slain! famine, and no other hath slain me; let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
 And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead:
 [Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point;
 But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
 To emblaze the honour that thy master got.]

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory; Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour.

(Dies.)

[Iden. How much thou wrong'st me, Heaven be my judge.

Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare thee!
 And as I thrust thy body in with my sword,
 So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.]
 Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
 Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,
 And there cut off thy most ungracious head;
 Which I will bear in triumph to the king,
 Leaving thy trunk for crows to feed upon.

[Exit, dragging out the body.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The same. Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The King's Camp on one side. On the other, enter YORK attended, with drum and colours: his Forces at some distance.

* York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right.
 * And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
 * Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfire, clear and bright,
 * To entertain great England's lawful king.
 Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?
 * Let them obey that know not how to rule;
 * This hand was made to handle nought but gold:
 * I cannot give due action to my words,
 Except a sword, or sceptre, balance it.
 A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul;
 On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?
 * The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.
 * Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well.
 * York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.
 * Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?
 * Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,
 * To know the reason of these arms in peace;
 * Or why, thou—being a subject as I am—
 * Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,
 Shouldst raise so great a power without his leave,
 * Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.
 * York. Scarce can I speak, my choleric is so great.

O, I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint,
 * I am so angry at these abject terms;
 * And now, like Ajax Telamonius,
 * On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury!
 * I am far better born than is the king;
 * More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts;
 * But I must make fair weather yet a while,
 * Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.
 O Buckingham, I pry thee, pardon me,
 * That I have given no answer all this while:
 * My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
 * The cause why I have brought this army hither,
 * Is—to remove proud Somerset from the king,
 * Seditious to his grace, and to the state.
 * Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part:
 * But if thy arms be to no other end,
 * The king hath yielded unto thy demand;
 The duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon this honour, is he prisoner?
 Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.
 * York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.—
 * Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves;
 * Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
 * You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.
 [And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
 Command my eldest son—Nay, all my sons,
 As pledges of my fealty and love,
 I'll send them all as willing as I live;
 Lands, goods, horse, armour, any thing I have
 Is his to use, so Somerset may die.]
 * Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:
 * We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter KING HENRY, attended.

* K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us,
 * That thus he marcheth with three arm in arm?
 [York. In all submission and humility,
 York doth present himself unto your highness.
 K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring?]
 * York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence:
 * And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
 * Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter IDEN, with CADE'S head.

* Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,
 May pass into the presence of a king,
 * Lo, I present your grace a traitor's head,
 * The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
 * K. Hen. The head of Cade?—Great God, how just art thou!
 * O let me view his visage being dead,
 * That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
 * Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?

* Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.
 * K. Hen. How art thou call'd? and what is thy degree?
 * Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
 * A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.
 [Buck. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss
 He were created knight for his good service.]
 * K. Hen. Iden, kneel down; (kneels) Rise up a knight.
 * We give thee for reward a thousand marks:
 * Am I will, that thou henceforth attend on us.
 * Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
 * And never live but true unto his liege!
 * K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen;
 * Go bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and SOMERSET.

* Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
 * But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
 * York. How now! is Somerset at liberty?
 * Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
 * And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
 * Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—
 * False king! why hast thou broken faith with me,
 * Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
 * King did I call thee? no, thou art not king:
 * Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
 * Which darest not, no, nor caust not rule a traitor.
 * That head of thine doth not become a crown;
 * Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
 * And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
 * That gold must round enquire these brows of mine;
 * Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,
 * Is able with the change to kill and cure.
 * Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
 * And with the same to act controlling laws.
 * Give place; by Heaven, thou shalt rule no more
 * O'er him, whom Heaven created for thy ruler.
 * Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,
 * Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown:
 [Obey, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.

York. Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask of these,
 If they can brook I bow a knee to man.—
 Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail;

[Exit an Attendant.

I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
 They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.]

* Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come again,
 * That for his duty he should have been here.

York. O blood-spotted Neapolitan,
 Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge!
 * The sons of York, thy betters in their birth,
 * Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those
 * That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter EDWARD and RICHARD PLANTAGENET, with Forces, at one side: at the other, with Forces also, Old CLIFFORD and his Son.

[See, where they come; I'll warrant they'll make it good.

* Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.
 * Cliff. Health and happiness to my lord the king!

[Kneels.]
 * York. I thank thee, Clifford: Say, what news with
 * Nay, do not fright us with an angry look; [thee?
 * We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again;
 * For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.

* Cliff. This is my king, York, I do not mistake;
 * But thou mistakest me much, to think I do;—
 * To bedlam with him? is the man grown mad?
 * K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour

* Makes him oppose himself against his kin.
 * Cliff. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
 * And chop away that factious pate of his.

* Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;
 * His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.
 * York. Will you not, sons?

* Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.
 * Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall!

[Cliff. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!
 * York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
 I am thy king, and thou a false-hearted traitor.—]

* Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
 [That with the very shaking of their chains,
 They may astonish these fell lurking curs;
 Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.]

Drums. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY, with Forces.

'Clif. Are these thy hears? we'll bait thy hears to death.

'And manacle the bear-ward in their chains,
'If thou darest bring them to the baiting-place.

[Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld;
Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs, and cried:
And such a piece of service will you do,
If you oppose yourself to match lord Warwick.

Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,
As eroked in thy mainers as thy shape!

York, Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

Clif. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourself.

K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot to bow!

Old Salisbury.—shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad mis-leader of thy brain-sick son!
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,
And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?
O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?—
Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honourable age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,
That bows unto the grave with mickle age.

Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself
The title of this most renowned duke;
And in my conscience do repute his grace
The rightful heir of England's royal seat.

K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?

Sal. I have.

K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with Heaven for such an oath?

Sal. It is great sin, to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin, to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right;
And have no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.

York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou
I am resolv'd for death, or dignity. [Hast,
'Clif. The first, I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.

'War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm,
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I'll write upon thy burget,
Might I but know thee by thy household badge.

War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevill's crest,
The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear aloft my burget,
(As on a mountain-top the cedar shews,
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,
Even to aspright thee with the view thereof.)

Clif. And from thy burget I'll rend thy bear,
And tread it under foot with all contempt,
'Despite the hearward that protects the bear.

'Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,
To quell the rebels, and their 'complices.

Rich. Fy! charity, for shame! speak not in spite,
For you shall sup with Jesu Christ to-night.

'Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou can tell.

'Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell.

[Receunt severally.]

SCENE II.—St Albans.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter WARWICK.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,—
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter YORK.

'How now, my noble lord? what, all a-foot?

'York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;

'But match to match I have encounter'd him,

'And made a prey for carrion kites and crows

'Even of the bonny beast he loved so well.

Enter CLIFFORD.

'War. Of one or both of us the time is come.

York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must hunt this deer to death.

War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou sight'st,—

'As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,

It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd

[Exit Warwick.]

'Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?

'York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love.

'But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

'Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,

'But that 'tis shewn ignobly, and in treason.

'York. So let it help me now against thy sword,

'As I in justice and true right express it!

'Clif. My soul and body on the action both!—

'York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.

[They fight, and Clifford falls.]

'Clif. La fin couronne les averts. [Dies.]

'York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.—

'Peace with his soul, Heaven, if it he thy will! [Exit.]

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

[Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout;

Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds

Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell,

Whom angry Heavens do make their minister,

Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part

Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly:

He, that is truly dedicate to war,

Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,

Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,

The name of valour.—O, let the vile world end,

And the promis'd flames of the last day

Knit earth and heaven together!

Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,

Particularities and petty sounds

To cease!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,

To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve

The silver livery of advis'd age;

And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus

To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight,

My heart is turnd to stone: and, while 'tis mine,

It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;

Nor more will I their babes: tears virginal

Shall he to me even as the dew to fire;

And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,

Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.

Henceforth, I will not have to do with youth;

Meet I an infant of the house of York,

Into as many gobbets will I cut it,

As wild Medea young Absyrus did;

In cruelty will I seek out my fame.]

'Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house;

[Taking up the body.]

'As did Æneas old Anchises bear,

'So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;

[But then Æneas bare a living load,

Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.] [Exit.]

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET and SOMER-
SET fighting, and SOMERSET is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there:—

'For, underneath an alehouse paltry sign,
The Castle in St Albans, Somerset

Hath made the wizard famous in his death.—

[Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still;

Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill.] [Exit.]

Alarums: Excursions. Enter KING HENRY,
QUEEN MARGARET, and others, retreating.

'Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame,
away!

[K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay. [nor fly.]

Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll not fight,

Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way: and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

(Alarum, afar off.)
If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes: but, if we happily escape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect.)
We shall to London get; where you are loved:
And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

Y. Cliff. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak hlasphem, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must; incurable discontent
Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away, for your relief: and we will live
To see their day, and them our fortune give:
Away, my lord, away!] [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Albans.

Alarum: Retreat. Flourish: then enter YORK, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, WARWICK, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him;
[That winter lion, who, in rage, forgets
Aged contusions, and all brush of time;
And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,
Repairs him with occasion? this happy day

Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.]

Rich. My noble father,
Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
Three times hestrid him, thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any farther act;
But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
[And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.
But, noble as he is, look where he comes.]

Enter SALISBURY.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day;

By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:

God knows, how long it is I have to live;

And it hath pleased him, that three times to-day

You have defended me from imminent death.—

[Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:

'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.]

York. I know, our safety is to follow them;

For, as I hear, the king is fled to London;

To call a present court of parliament.

Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth:—

What says lord Warwick? shall we after them?—

War. After them! nay, before them, if we can.

Now by my faith, lords, 'twas a glorious day:

Saint Albans' battle, won by famous York;

Shall be eternized in all age to come.—

Sound, drums and trumpets;—and to London all:

And more such days as these to us befall! [Exeunt.

SCENE,—During part of the third Act in France; during all the rest of the Play, in England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. The Parliament-House.

Drums. Some Soldiers of York's Party break in.
Then, enter the DUKE OF YORK, EDWARD,
RICHARD, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, WAR-
WICK, and others, with white roses in their hats.

War. I wonder how the king escaped our hands,
York. While we pursued the horsemen of the north,
He slyly stole away, and left his men:

Whereat the great lord of Northumberland,

Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,

• Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,

Lord Clifford, and lord Stafford, all a-breast.

• Charged our main battle's front, and, breaking in,

• Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham,

• Is either slain, or wounded dangerous:

I cleft his beaver with a downright blow;

• That this is true, father, behold his blood.

(Showing his bloody sword.)

Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood. (To York, showing his.)

Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.

(Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's head.)

[York. Richard hath best deserved of all my sons.]

What, is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.

War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York,
Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
I vow by Heaven, these eyes shall never close.
This is the palace of the fearful king,
* And this the regal seat:—sness it, York;
For this is thine, and not King Henry's heirs.
York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will;
* For hither we have broken in by force.
Norw. We'll all assist you; he, that flies, shall die.
York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk.—Stay by me, my lords;—
* And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.
War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence,
* Unless he seek to thrust you out by force.

(They retire.)
[York. The queen, this day, here holds her parliament,

But little thinks we shall be of her council:
By words, or blows, here let us win our right.]

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.
War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,
Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king;
And bashful Henry deposed, whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

* York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute;
I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
* The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bells.

* I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares—
Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.

(Warwick leads York to the throne, who seats himself.)

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, CLIFFORD,
NORTHUMBERLAND, WESTMORELAND,
EXETER, and others, with red roses in their hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits,
Even in the chair of state! belike, he means,
(Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer),
To sapire unto the crown, and reign as king.—
Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father:—
And thine, lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

* North. If I be not, heavens, he revenged on me!
Clif. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.
West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down:

My heart for anger burns, I cannot brook it.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.
Clif. Patience is for polltroons, and such as be:
He durst not sit there, had our father lived.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin; be it so.
K. Hen. Ab, know you not, the city favours them,
And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Eze. But, when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly.
K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament-house!
Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,
Shall be the war that Henry means to use.—
(They advance to the Duke.)

Thou factious duke of York, descend my throne,
And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;
I see thy sovereignty.

York. Thou art deceived, I am thine.
Eze. For shame, come down; he made thee duke of York.

York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the earldom was.
Eze. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.
War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown.

In following this usurping Henry.
Clif. Who should he follow, but his natural king?
War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard, duke of York.

* K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?
* York. It must, and shall be so. Content thyself.
War. Be duke of Lancaster, let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster;
And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget,
That we are those which chased you from the field,
And slew your fathers, and with colours spread
March'd through the city to the palace gates.

* North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;
And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

* West. Plantagenet, of thee, and those thy sons,
Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives,
Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.
Clif. Urge it no more; lest that, instead of words,
I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger,
As shall revenge his death, before I stir.
* War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats!

York. Will you, we shew our title to the crown?
* If not, our swords shall plead it in: the field.
K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?
York. Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York;
Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March:
I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop,
And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.
K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I;
When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.
Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks, you lose—
Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.
Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.
Mont. Good brother, (to York), as thou lovest and honour'st arms,
Let's fight it out, and not stand cavilling thus.
Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king w
York. Sons, peace!

K. Hen. Peace thou! and give King Henry leave to speak.
War. Plantagenet shall speak first—hear him, lords;
And he you silent and attentive too,
For he that interrupts him shall not live.
* K. Hen. Think'st thou that I will leave my kingly throne,
Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?
No: first shall war unpeep the sky;
* Ay, and their colours—often borne in France;
And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—
Shall be my winding-sheet.—Why faint you, lords?
* My title's good, and better far than his.
War. But prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.
K. Hen. Henry the Fourth, by conquest got the crown.
York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.
K. Hen. I know not what to say; my title's weak.
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?
York. What then?
* K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king:
* For Richard, in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth;
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.
York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And made him to resign his crown perforce.
War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrain'd,
Think you, 'twere prejudicial to his crown?
Eze. No; for he could not so resign his crown;
But that the next heir should succeed and reign.
K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?
Eze. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?]
Eze. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.
K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Thi k not, that Henry shall be so deposed.
* War. Deposed he shall be, in despite of all.
North. Thou art deceived: 'tis not thy southern
* Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,—I power,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,
Can set the duke up, in despite of me.
Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
* Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!
York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown;—
What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely duke of York;
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.
(He stamps, and the Soldiers shew themselves.)
* K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear us but one word,—
* Let me, for this my life time, reign as king.
York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs.
And thou shalt reign in quiet, while thou livest.
K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England, and himself?
West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!
Clif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us?
West. I cannot stay to hear these trifles.

North. Nor I.

Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
[West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,
In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.]

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in hands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome!
Or live in peace, abandon'd and despis'd!

[Exeunt Northumberland, Clifford, and Westmoreland.]

[War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.]
Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not yield.

K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!

War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my son,
Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But, be it as it may—[I here entail

The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever;

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,
To honour me as thy king and sovereign;
[And neither by treason, nor hostility,
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.]

Yor. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.

[Coming from the throne.]
War. Long live King Henry!—Plantageuet, embrace him.

K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconciled.

Exe. Accused he he, that seeks to make them foes!
[Senet. The Lords come forward.]

York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.

War. And I'll keep London, with my soldiers.

Norf. And I to Norfolk, with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.
[*Exeunt York, and his Sons, Warwick, Norfolk,
Montague, Soldiers, and Attendants.*]

[K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.]

ENTER QUEEN MARGARET, and the PRINCE OF WALES.

Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger:

I'll steel away.

K. Hen. Exeter, so will I. [Going.]

Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me, I will follow thee.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.

Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes?

[Ah wretched man! would I had died a maid.

And never seen thee, never born thee son,—

Seeing thou hast proved so unnatural a father!

Hath he deserved to lose his hirthing thus?

Hadst thou but loved him half so well as I,

Or felt that pain which I did for him once,

Or nourish'd him as I did with my blood,

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,

And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me:

If you be king, why should not I succeed?

K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son:—

The Earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforced me.

Q. Mar. Enforced thee? art thou king, and wilt be forced?

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!

Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me;

And given unto the house of York such head,

[As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.

To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,

What is it but to make thy sepulchre,

And creep into it far before thy time?

Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calais:]

Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas;

The duke is made protector of the realm;

And yet shalt thou be safe? [such safety finds

The trembling lamb, environed with wolves.]

Had I been there, which am a silly woman,

The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes,

Before I would have granted to that act.

[But thou preferst thy life before thine honour:]

And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself,

Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,

Until that act of Parliament be repeal'd,

Whereby my son is disinherited.

The northern lords, that have forsworn thy colours,

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread;

And spread they shall be: to thy foul disgrace,

And utter ruin of the house of York

' Thus do I leave thee.—Come, son, let's away;

' Our army's ready; and come, we'll after them.

K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already; get thee gone.

K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?

Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.

Prince. When I return with victory from the field,

I'll see your grace; till then, I'll follow her.

Q. Marg. Come, son, away; we may not linger thus.

[Exeunt Q. Marg. and the Prince.]

K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son,

' Hath made her break out into terms of rage!

' Revenged may she be on that hateful duke;

' Whose haughty spirit winged with desire,

' Will cost my crown, and, like an empty eagle,

' Tire on the flesh of me, and of my son!

' The loss of those three lords torments my heart:

' I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair;—

' Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger.

Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.]

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire.

Enter EDWARD, RICHARD, and MONTAGUE.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the orator.

Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter YORK.

York. Why, how now, sons and brother, at a strife?

' What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.

York. About what?

Rich. About that, which concerns your grace and us,—

' The crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, hoy? not till King Henry be dead.

[Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.

Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now;

By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,

It will outrun you, father, in the end.]

York. I took an oath, that he should quietly reign.

Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken:

' I'd break a thousand oaths, to reign one year.

Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn.

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.

York. Thou canst not, son; 't is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

' Before a true and lawful magistrate,

' That hath authority over him that swears:

' Henry had none, but did usurp the place;

' Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

' Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

' Therefore, to arms. [And, father, do but think,

How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;

Within whose circuit is Elysium,

And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.

Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,

Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed

Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.]

York. Richard, enough; I will be king, or die.—

' Brother, thou shalt to London presently,

' And whet on Warwick to this enterprise.—

' Thou, Richard, shalt unto the duke of Norfolk,

' And tell him privily of our intent.—

' You, Edward, shall unto my lord Cobham,

With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise;

' In them I trust; for they are soldiers,

' Witty and courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—

' While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more,

' But that I seek occasion how to rise;

' And set the king not privy to my drift,

' Nor any of the house of Lancaster?]

Enter a Messenger.

' But, stay; What news? Why comest thou in such post? [Lords.]

Mess. The queen, with all the northern earls and

' Intend here to besiege you in your castle:

' She is hard by with twenty thousand men;

' And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

[York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou that we fear them?]

' Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;—

' My brother Montague shall post to London;

'Let noble Warwick, Coham, and the rest,
Whom we have left protectors of the king,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his orphans.
Mont. Brother! I go; I'll win them, fear it not:
And thus most bumbly I do take my leave.] [Exit.

Enter SIR JOHN and SIR HUGH MORTIMER.

York. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles!
'You are come to Sandal in a happy hour;
The army of the queen mean to besiege us. [field.
Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the 'York. What, with five thousand men?
Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.
A woman's general: What should we fear?

'Edw. I hear their drums; let's set our men in order;
'And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.
'York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be
I doubt not, uncle, of our victory. [great,
'Many a battle have I won in France,
When as the enemy hath been ten to one;
'Why should I not now have the like success?
[Alarum. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter RUTLAND and his Tutor.

'Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands?
Ah, tutor! look, where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter CLIFFORD and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.
As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father, he shall die.
Tut. And I, my lord, will hear him company.
Clif. Soldiers, away with him.
'Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child,
'Lest thou be hated both of God and man.

[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.
Clif. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear,
That makes him close his eyes?—I'll open them.
'Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws:
And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey;
And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.—
Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,
And not with such a cruel threaten'ing look.
Sweet Clifford, bear me speak before I die;
I am too mean a subject for thy wrath.
Be thou revenged on men, and let me live.
Clif. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy; my father's blood

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.
Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again;
He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.

Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives and thine
Were not revenge sufficient for me!
No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;
'And till I root out their accursed line,
'And leave not one alive, I live in hell.
Therefore— [Lifting his hand,]

Rut. O, let me pray before I take thy death:—
To thee I pray; Sweet Clifford, pity me!
Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.
'Rut. I never did thee harm: Why wilt thou slay me?
Clif. Thy father hath.

Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.
Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me;
Lest in revenge thereof,—sith God is just,—
He be as miserably slain as I.
Ah, let me live in prison all my days;
And when I give occasion of offence,
Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.
Clif. No cause?

Thy father slew my father; therefore die.
[Clifford stabs him.]
Rut. Dii faciunt, laudis summa sit ista tua! [Dies.]

Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!
And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade,
Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood,
Georged with this, do make me wipe off both. [Exit.

SCENE IV. The same.

Alarum. Enter YORK.

'York. The army of the queen hath got the field:
'My uncles both are slain in rescuing me;
'And all my followers to the eager foe
'Turn back and fly, like ships before the wind,
'Or lambs pursued by hunger-starv'd wolves.
'My sons—God knows what hath becham'd them:
But this I know,—they have demean'd themselves
Like men born to renown, by life or death.
'Three times did Richard make a lane to me;
And thrice cried,—Courage, father! fight it out!
'And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple falchion, painted to the hilt
'In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
'And when the hardest warriors did retire,
'Richard cried,—Charge I and give no foot of ground!
'And cried,—A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
'A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!
With this, we charged again; but, out, alas!
'We bodged again; as I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.
[A short alarum within.]
'Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue;
'And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury;
'And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury:
'The sands are number'd that make up my life;
'Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, and Soldiers.

'Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage;
'I am your built, and I abide your shot.
North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.
Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm,
With downright payment, shew'd unto my father.
Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noontide prick.
York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth
'A bird, that will revenge upon you all:
'And, in that hope, I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whatever you can afflict me with.
'Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?
Clif. So cowards fight, when they can fly no farther;
'So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;
'So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.
York. O Clifford, but bethink thee once again,
'And in thy thought o'er-run my former time;
[And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face.]
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice,
'Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this.
Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word;
But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

[Draws.]
Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes,
I would prolong awhile the traitor's life:—
Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.
North. Hold, Clifford; do not honour him so much,
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away?
It is war's prize to take all vantages;
'And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

[They lay hands on York, who struggles.]
Clif. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gun.
North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

[York is taken prisoner.]
York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;
So true men yield, with robbers so o'er-match'd.
North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

[Loud.]
Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford, and Northumberland, make him stand upon this mole-hill here;
'That taught at mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.—
[What! was it you that would be England's king?]
Was't you, that reprov'd in our parliament,
And made a preaching of your high descent?
Where are your mess of sons to back you now?
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
'And where's that vallant crook-back prodigy,
Dick, your boy, that, with his grumbling voice,
Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?
Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?

Look, York; I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That reliant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy:
Aud, if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.
'Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I pry'thee, grieve to make me merry, York;
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dence.
Wbet, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
I wry'ert thou patient, man? thou shouldst be mad;
And I, to make thee mad, doth mock thee thus.
Thou wouldst be fed'd, I see, to make me sport;
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—
A crown for York;—and, lords, bow low to him.—
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.—
(Putting a paper crown upon his head.)

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!
Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chalr,
And this is he was his adopted heir.—
But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be king,
Till our king Henry had shook hands with death.
And will you pale your heed in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the dedem,
Now in his life, against your holy oath?
O'tis a fault, too, too unpardonable!—
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head;
And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.
Cliff. That is my office, for my father's sake.
Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.
York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,
'Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!
How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian trull,
'Upon their woes whom fortune ceiv'lyvetes?
But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Maid impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would assay, proud queen, to make thee blush:
To tell thee whence thou camest, of whom derived,
Were shame enough to sheme thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem;
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen:
Unless the adage must be verified.—
That heggars, mounted, run their horse to death.
'Tis beauty, that doth oft make women proud;
But God, he knows, thy share thereof is small:
'Tis virtue, that doth make them most admired
The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at:
'Tis government, that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable:
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the Antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O, tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!
How couldst thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to beer a women's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
'Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
'Bidst thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
'Wouldst have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will:
'For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies;
'And every drop cries vengeance for his death,—
'Gainst thee, fell Clifford,— and thee, false French-woman.

North. Beshrew me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood:
But you ere more inhuman, more inexorable,—
O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou didst in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go host of this:
(He gives back the handkerchief.)
And, if thou tell't the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears,
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—Alas, it was a piteous deed!—
There, take the crown, and with the crown, my curse:
And, in thy need, such comfort come to thee,

As now I reap et thy too cruel hand!
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!
North. Had been slaughter-man to all my kin,
'I should not for my life but weep with him,
To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.
Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my lord Northumber
Think but upon the wrong he did us all, [lens]
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.
Cliff. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death. (Stabbing him.)
Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. (Stabbing him.)
York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
'My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee.
(Dies.)
Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates:
So York may overlook the town of York. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire.

Drums. Enter EDWARD, and RICHARD, with their Forces, marching.

[Edw. I wonder, how our princely father 'scaped;
Or whether he be 'scaped away or no,
From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit:
Had he been taken, we should have heard the news:]
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;
[Or, had he 'scaped, methinks, we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.—]
'How fares my brother? why is he so sad?
Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolved
Where our right valient father is become.
'I saw him in the battle rage about;
'And watch'd him, how he singled Clifford forth.
'Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,
As doth a lion in a herd of neat:
[Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs;
Who having slouch'd a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.
So far'd our father with his enemies:]
'So fled his enemies my warlike father:
'Methinks, 'tis prize enough to be his son.
See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun
[How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a yonker, prancing to his love!]
Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?
Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.
See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable:
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.
In this the heaven figures some event.
[Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never heard of.]

I think, it cites us, brother, to the field;
That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,
'Each one already blazing by our deeds,
Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,
'And over-shine the earth, as this the world.
'Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns.
[Rich. Nay, bear three daughters;—by your leave speak it,
You love the breeder better than the male.]

Enter a Messenger.

'But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
'Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
Mess. Ah, one that was a woeful looker on,
When as the noble duke of York was slain,
[Your princely father, and my loving lord.]
'Edw. O speak no more! for I have heard too much,
'Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.
'Mes. Environed he was with many foes;
[And stood against them as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy.
But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
And many strokes, though with a little axe,
Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.]
'By many hands your father was subdued;
'But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
'Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen:
'Who crown'd the gracious duke in high despite;
'Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief he wept,
'The ruthless queen gave him, to dry his cheeks,
'A napkin steep'd in the harmless blood

* Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain :

* And, after many scorn, many foul taunings,

* They took his head, and on the gates of York

* They set the same; and there it doth remain,

* The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet duke of York, our prop to lean upon ;

* Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay !—

[O Clifford, boisterous Clifford, thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry ;

And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,

For, hand to hand, he would have vanquish'd thee !]

Now my soul's palace is become a prison :

Alas, would she break from hence ! that this my body

* Might in the ground be clos'd up in rest ;

* For never henceforth shall I joy again,

* Never, O never, shall I see more joy.

* Rich. I cannot weep ; for all my body's moisture

Scarcely serves to quench my furnace-burning heart :

[Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden ;

For self-same wind that I should speak withal,

Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast,

And burn me up with flames, that tears would quench.

To weep, is to make less the depth of grief :

Tears, then, for babes ; blows and revenge for me !—]

* Richard, I bid thee weep, 'till I engage thy death,

* Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with thee ;

* His dukedom and his chair with me is left.

* Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Shew thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun :

For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say ;

Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter WARWICK and MONTAGUE,
with Forces.

War. How now, fair lords ? What fare ? what news
abroad ?

* Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount

Our painful news, and, at each word's deliverance,

Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,

The words would add more anguish than the wounds.

O valiant lord, the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O Warwick ! Warwick ! that Plantagenet,

Which held thee dearly, as his soul's redemption,

Is by the stern lord Clifford done to death.

* War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in tears :

And now, to add more measure to your woes,

I come to tell you things since then befall'n.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,

Where your brave father breathed his latest gasp,

Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,

Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.

I then in London, keeper of the king,

Must'rd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends,

And very well appointed, as I thought,

March'd towards St Alban's to intercept the queen,

Bearing the king in my behalf along :

For by my scouts I was advertis'd,

That she was coming with a full intent

To dash our late decree in parliament,

* Touching King Henry's oath, and your succession.

Short tale to make,—we at Saint Alban's met,

Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought :

But, whether 'twas the coldness of the king,

Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,

That robb'd my soldiers of their bated spleen,

Or whether 'twas report of her success :

Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigor,

Who thunders to his captives—blood and death,

I cannot judge : hut, to conclude with truth,

Their weapons like to lightning came and went ;

Our soldiers—like the night-owl's lazy flight,

* Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,—

Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.

I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,

With promise of high pay, and great rewards :

But all in vain ; they had no heart to fight,

And we, in them, no hope to win the day,

So that we fled ; the king, unto the queen ;

Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,

In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you ;

For in the marches here, we heard, you were,

Making another head to fight again. [twick ?

* Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle War-

And when came George from Burgundy to England ?

* War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers ;

And for your brother,—he was lately sent

From your kind aunt, duchess of Burgundy,

* With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

* Rich. 'Twas odds, believe, when valiant Warwick fled :

Of late have I heard his praises in pursuit.

But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear

For thou shalt know, this strong right hand of mine

Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,

And wring the awful sceptre from his fist ;

Were he as famous and as bold in war,

As he is famed for mildness, peace, and prayer.

* Rich. I know it well, lord Warwick ; blame me not ;

* 'Tis love I bear thy glories, makes me speak.

But, in this troublous time, what's to be done ?

Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,

And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,

Numbering our Ave-Maries with our beads ?

Or shall we on the helmets of our foes

Tell our devotion with revengeful arms ?

If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords.

* War. Why, therefore Warwick come to seek you out

And therefore comes my brother Montague.

Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,

With Clifford and the haught Northumberland,

And of their feather many more proud birds,

Have wrought the easy-melting link like wax.

He swore consent to your succession,

His oath enrolled in the parliament ;

And now to London all the crew are gone,

And frustrate both his oath, and that beside

May make against the house of Lancaster.

* Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong ;

Now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself,

With all the friends that thou, brave earl of March,

Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,

* Will hut amount to five and twenty thousand,

Why, Via ! to London will we march amain ;

And once again bestride our foaming steeds,

* And once again cry—Charge upon our foes !

But never once again turn back, and fly. [speak :

* Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I hear great Warwick

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,

* That cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

* Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean ;

* And when thou fall'st, (as God forbid the hour !)

Must Edward fall, which perill Heaven forbid !

* War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York ;

* The next degree is, England's royal throne :

For king of England shalt thou be proclaim'd

In every borough as we pass along ;

And he, that throws not up his cap for joy,

* Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.

King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—

Stay we no longer dreaming of renown,

* But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

[Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,

(As thou hast shewn it flinty by thy deeds,)

I come to pierce it,—or to give thee mine.

* Edw. Then strike up, drums ;—God, and Saint

George, for us !]

Enter a Messenger.

* War. How now ? what news ?

* Mess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,

The queen is coming with a puissant host ;

And craves your company for speedy counsel.

* War. Why then it sorts, brave warriors : Let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before York.

Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, the

PRINCE OF WALES, CLIFFORD, and NOR-

THUMBERLAND, with Forces.

* Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder's the head of that arch-enemy,

That sought to be encompass'd with your crown :

* Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord ?

* K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them, that fear their wreck :—

To see this sight, it irks my very soul,—

Withhold revenge, dear God ! 'tis not my fault,

Not willingly have I infringed my vow.

* Clif. My gracious liege, this too much lenity

And harmful pity must be laid aside.

To whom do lions cast their gentle looks ?

Not to the beast that would usurp their den.

Whose hand is that the forest hear doth lick ?

Not his, that spoils her young before her face.

Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting ?

Not he, that sets his foot upon her back.

The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on ;

* And doves will peck, in safeguard of their brood.

Ambitious York did level at thy crown,

Thou smiling, while he knit his angry brows ;

He, by a duke, would have his son a king,

And raise his issue, like a loving sire;
Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him,
'Which argued thee a most unloving father.
Unreasonable creatures feed their young;
And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,
Yet, in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not seen them (even with those wings
'Which sometime they have used with fearful flight,)
Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest,
Offering their own lives in their young's defence?
For shame, my liege, make them your precedent!
Were it not pity, that this goodly hoy
Should lose his birthright by his father's fault;
And long hereafter say unto his child,—
*What my great-grandfather and grandsire got,
My careless father fondly gave away!*
Ab, what a shame were this! Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart,
To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him.

K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, Inferring arguments of mighty force.

'But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,—
That things ill got bad ever bad success?
And happy always was it for that son,
Whose father, for his hoarding, went to hell?
I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;
And 'would my father had left me no more!

For all the rest is held at such a rate,
'As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep,
'Than in possession any lot of pleasure.
Ab, cousin York! 'would thy best friends did know,
How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!
'Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are nigh.

'And this soft courage makes your followers faint.
'You promised knighthood to our forward son;
'Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently.—
Edward, kneel down.

K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
And learn this lesson,—Draw thy sword in right.

Prince. My gracious father, by your kindly leave,
I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it to the death.

Clif. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness;
For, with a band of thirty thousand men,
Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;
And, in the towns as they do march along,
Proclaims him king, and many fly to him:
'Derraign your battle, for they are at hand.

Clif. I would, your highness would depart the field;
The queen hath best success when you are absent.

Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune. [stay.]

K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Unsheath your sword, good father, cry Saint George!

March. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD,
WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, and Soldiers.

'Edw. Now, perjured Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace,
And set thy diadem upon my head,
[Or bid the mortal fortune of the field?]

'Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy!
'Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms,
'Before thy sovereign and thy lawful king?

Edw. I am his king, and be should bow his knee;

I was adopted heir by his consent:

Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear,

You—that are king, though he do wear the crown,—

Have caused him, by new act of parliament,

'To blot out me, and put his own son in.

'Clif. And reason too;

Who should succeed the father, but the son?

'Rich. Are you there, butcher?—O, I cannot speak!

'Clif. Ay, crook-back; here I stand, to answer thee!

'Or any be the proudest of thy sort.

'Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?

'Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.

'Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.

'War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?

'Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongued Warwick?
dare you speak?

When you and I met at Saint Alban's last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.

'War. Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.
Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.
War. 'Twas not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence.
'North. No, nor your manhood, that durst make you stay.

'Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently;—
Break off the parley; for scarce I can refrain

The execution of my big-sworn child—
Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

'Clif. I slew thy father: Call'st thou him a coward?

'Rich. Ay, like a dastard, and a treacherous coward,

As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;

But, ere sun-set, I'll make thee curse the deed.

'K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.

'Q. Mar. Defy them, then, or else hold close thy lips.

'K. Hen. I prythee, give no limits to my tongue;
I am a king, and privileged to speak.

'Clif. My liege, the wound, that bred this meeting
Cannot be cured by words; therefore be still. [here,

'Rich. Then, executioner, unsheath thy sword;

By Him that made us all, I am resolved,

'That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.

'Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right, or no?

A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,

That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.

'War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;

For York in justice puts his armour on.

'Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right,
There is no wrong, but every thing is right.

'Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;

For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.

'Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire nor dam;

But like a foul mishapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,

'As venom'd toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.

'Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt,
Whose father bears the title of a king,

(As if a channel should be call'd the sea,)

'Shamest thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
'To let thy tongue detect thy base-horn head?

'Edw. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns,
To make this shameless callet know herself,— [Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be Menelaus;
And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
By that false woman, as this king by thee.]

'His father revell'd in the heart of France,
And tamed the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;

And, had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day.

But, when he took a hegger to his bed,
And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal day;

'Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
'That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.

'For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?
Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept;

And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had slipp'd our claim unto another age.

'Geo. But, when we saw our sunshine made thy spring,
'And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root:
And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
'Yet know thou, since we have begun to strike,
'We'll never leave, till we have hewn thee down,
Or hateth thy growing with our heated bloods.

'Edw. And, in this resolution, I defy thee;
Not willing any longer conference,
Since thou deny'st the gentle king to speak.—
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colours wave!

And either victory, or else a grave.

'Q. Mar. Stay, Edward.

'Edw. No, wrangling woman; we'll no longer stay:
These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle between Towton and Saxton, in Yorkshire.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter WARWICK.

'War. Forespent with toil, as runners with a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe:

For strokes received, and many blows repaid,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,

'And, spite of spite, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter EDWARD, running.

'Edw. Smile, gentle Heaven! or strike, ungentle
death!

'For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

'War. How now, my lord? what hap? what hope of good?

Enter GEORGE.

[Geo. Our hap is lost, our hope but sad despair:]
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:
What counsel give you, whither shall we fly?
Edu. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;
And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter RICHARD.

Rich. Ab, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thyself?
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance:
And, in the very pangs of death, he cried,—
Like to a dismal clangour heard from far,—
Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!
So underneath the belly of their steeds,
That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:
I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
[Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage;
And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were play'd in jest by counteringfeit actors?]
Here on my knee I vow to God above,
I'll never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.
Edu. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine;
And, in this vow, do chain my soul to thine.—
[And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,]
Thou setter up and plucker down of kings!
Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
That to my foes this body must be prey,—
Yet that the brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—
Now, lords, take leave, until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven, or on earth.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand;—and, gentle Warwick,
Let me embrace thee in my weary arms.—
I, that did never weep, now melt with you,
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell.
Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
And call them pillars that will stand to us;
And, if we thrive, promise them such rewards
As victors wear at the Olympian games:
[This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory.—
Fore-slow no longer, make we hence again.] [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter RICHARD and CLIFFORD.
Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone:
Suppose, this arm is for the duk of York;
And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.
Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:
This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York;
And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;
And here's the heart that triumphs in their death,
And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother,
To execute the like upon thyself;
And so, bave at thee.

[They fight. WARWICK enters:
CLIFFORD flies.]
Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;
For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter KING HENRY.
[K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light;
What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
Can neither call it perfect day nor night.]
Now aways it this way, like a mighty sea,
Forced by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now aways it that way, like the self-same sea,
Forced to retire by fury of the wind;
Sometime, the flood prevails; and then, the wind;
Now, one the better; then, another best;
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered;
So is the equal poise of this fit war.
[Here on this molehill will I sit me down,
To whom God will, there be the victory!]
For Margaret, my queen, and Clifford too,

Have chid me from the battle; swearing both,
They prosper best of all when I am thence.
'Would I were dead! if God's good will were so:
'For what is in this world but grief and wo?
[O God! methinks it were a happy life,
To be no better than a homely swain;
To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
Thereby to see the minutes, how they run:
How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live.
When this is known, then to divide the times:
So many hours must I tend my flock;
So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate;
So many hours must I sport myself;
So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yearn;
So many years ere I shall shear the fleece;
So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years,
Pass'd over to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!
Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,
Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
To kings, that fear their subjects' jealousy?
O, yes, it doth; a thousand-fold it doth.
And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade,
All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies,
His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
His hody couched in a curious bed,
When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.]

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father, dragging in the dead body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits none.—
This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
May be possessed with some store of crowns:
[And I, that haply take them from him now,
May yet, ere night, yield both my life and them
To some man else, as this dead man doth me.—
Who's this?—O God! It is my father's face,
Whom in this conflict I unwares have kill'd.
O heavy times, begetting such events!
From London by the king was I press'd forth;
My father, being the earl of Warwick's man,
Came on the part of York, press'd by his master;
And I, who at his hands received my life,
Have, by my hands, of life bereav'd him.—
Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!—
And pardon, father, for I knew not thee:
[My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
And no more words, till they have flow'd their fill.]
K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times!
Whilst lions war, and bettle for their deus,
Poor harmless lambs abide their ounity.—
[Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear;
And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war,
Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief.]

Enter a Father who has killed his Son, with the body in his arms.

Fath. Thou, that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows.—
But let me see—'tis this our foe's man's face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!—
[Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw up thine eye; see, see, what showers arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!—
O, pity, God, this miserable age!—
What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural,
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
O, boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late!

K. Hen. Wo above wol' grief more than common grief!
O, that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!—
[O pity, pity, gentle Heaven, pity!—
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses:
[The one, his purple blood right well resembles;
The other, his pale cheeks, methinks, present it]
Wither, one rose, and let the other flourish!
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither,

Son. How will my mother, for a father's death,
Take on with me, and ne'er be satisfied?
Fath. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
Shed tears of tears, and ne'er be satisfied?
K. Hen. How will the country, for these woful chances.
Mis-think the king, and not be satisfied?
Son. Was ever son, so rued a father's death?
Fath. Was ever father, so bemoan'd a son?
K. Hen. Was ever king, so grieved for subjects' wo?
Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.
Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill. [Exit, with the body.]
[Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.
My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so obsequious will thy father be,
Sad for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Priam was for all his valiant sons.]
I'll bear thee hence: and let them fight that will,
For I have murder'd where I should not kill.
[Exit, with the body.]
K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care,
Here sits a king more woful than you are.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter QUEEN MARGA-RET, PRINCE OF WALES, and EXETER.
Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chafed bull.
Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.
Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord, towards Berwick post again:
Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds
Having the fearful flying hare in sight,
With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,
And bloody steel grasp'd in their ireful hands,
Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain.
Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them;
Nay, stay not to exostulate, make speed;
Or else come after, I'll away before.
K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter;
Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
Whither the queen intends. Forward; away!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same.

A loud Alarm. Enter CLIFFORD, wounded.
Clif. Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
O Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,
More than my body's parting with my soul.
My love and fear klew'd many friends to thee;
And now I fall, thy tough mixtures melt.
Impairing Henry, strength'ning mis-proud York,
The common people swarn like summer flies:
And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
And who shines now but Henry's enemies?
O Phœbus! hadst thou never given consent
That Phœton should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had scorch'd the earth:
And Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
Or as thy father, and his father, did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
[They never then had sprung like summer flies:]
I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
Had left no mourning widows for our death,
And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds, but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold, but too much lenity?
Bootless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:
The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
For, at their hands, I have deserved no pity.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds.
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint:—
Come, York and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast,
(Ho faints.)

Alarm and retreat. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now breathe we, lords; good fortune bids us pause;
And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks.—
[Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen.—]
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,

Command an argosy to stem the waves.
But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape
For, though before his face I speak the words,
Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave:
And, whereso'er he is, he's surely dead.
(Clifford groans and dies.)
Edw. Whose soul it is that which takes her heavy leave?
Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's departing.
Edw. See who it is; and, now the hattle's ended,
If friend, or foe, let him be gently used.
Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford;
Who, not contented that he lopp'd the branch
In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
But set his murdering knife unto the root
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,
I mean, our princely father, duke of York.
War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head,
Your father's head, which Clifford plac'd there:
'instead whereof, let this supply the room;
Measure for measure must be answered. [house]
Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our ears:
That nothing sung but death to us and ours:
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.
(Attendants bring the body forward.)
War. I think his understanding is bereft.
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?—
Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us what we say.

Rich. O, would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth;
'Tis but his policy to counterfeit;
'Because he would avoid such bitter taunts,
Which in the time of death he gave our father.
Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.
Rich. Clifford, ask mercy, and obtain no grace.
Edw. Clifford, repent in bootless penitence.
War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Edw. Thou pittiedst Rutland, I will pity thee.
Geo. Where's that captain Margaret, to fence you now?
War. They mock thee, Clifford! swear as thou wast wont.
Rich. What, not an oath? nay then the world goes hard,

When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath:—
I know by that, he's dead: And, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
That I in all despite might rail at him,
This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing
blood
Stifle the villain, whose unstanch'd thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy. [head]
War. Ay, but he's dead: Off with the traitor's
And rear it in the place your father's stands.—
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crown'd England's royal king.
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,
And ask the lady Bona for thy queen:
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;
And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread
The scatter'd foe, that hopes to rise again:
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them buzz, to offend thine ears.
First, will I see the coronation;
And then to Britany I'll cross the sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.
Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be:
[For on thy shoulder do I build my seat;
And never will I undertake the thing,
Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—]
Richard, I will create thee duke of Gloucester:—
*And George, of Clarence;—Warwick, as yourself,
Shall do, and undo, as him pleaseth best.*
Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence; George of Gloucester;
For Gloucester's dukedom is too ominous.
War. Tut, that's a foolish observation;
Richard, be duke of Gloucester; Now to London,
To see these honours in possession. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Chase in the North of England.

Enter Two Keepers, with cross-bows in their hands
1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;
For through this laund anon the deer will come;

' And in this covert will we make our stand,
' Cutting the principal of all the doer.
[2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.
1 Keep. That cannot be, the noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.
Here stand we both, and aim we at the best ;
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what heffell me on a day
In this self-place, where now we mean to stand.]
' 2 Keep. Here comes a man, let 's stay till he be past.

Enter KING HENRY, disguised, with a prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stolen, even of pure love,
' To great mine own land with my wishful sight.
' No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine ;
[Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrang from thee,
[Thy helm wash'd off, wherewith thou wast anointed ;
' Nn bending knee will call thee Cæsar now,
[No humble suitors press to speak for right,]
No, not a man comes for redress of thee ;
For how can I help them, and not myself ?
' I Keep. Ay, here 's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee :

' This is the quondam king ; let 's seize upon him.
[K. Hen. Let me embrace these sour adversities ;
For wise men say, it is the wisest course.
2 Keep. Why linger w-? let us lay hands upon him.
1 Keep. Forbear a while ; we'll hear a little more.]
K. Hen. My queen and son arc gone to France for aid ;

And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick
' Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister
' To wife for Edward ; if this news be true,
' Poor queen and son, your labour is but lost ;
' For Warwick is a subtle orator,
' And Lewis a prince soon won with moving wrnds.

' By this account, then, Margaret may win him,
' For she 's a woman to be pitied much ;
[Her sighs will make a battery in his breast ;
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart ;
The tiger will be mild, while she doth mourn ;
And Nero will be tainted with remorse.

To hear, and see, her plaints, her british tears,
Ay, but she 's come to heg ; Warwick, to give :]
She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry ;
He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward ;
She weeps, and says—her Henry is deposed ;
He smiles, and says—his Edward is install'd ;

[That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more ;
[While Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,
Infereth arguments of mighty strength ;
And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,
With promise of his sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support King Edward's place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be ; and thou, poor soul,
Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorn.]

2 Keep. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings and queens ?
' K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was born
' A man at least, for less I should not be ; [to :
And men may talk of kings, and why not I ?

2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.
' K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind ; and that 's enough.
2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown ?
K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not in my head ;
[Not deck'd with diamonds and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen : my crown is call'd content.]
' A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy

2 Keep. Well, if you be a king, crown'd with content,
Your crown content, and you, must be contented
' To go along with us : for, as we think,
' You are the king, King Edward hath deposed ;
' And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
' Will apprehend you as his enemy.

[K. Hen. But did you never swear and break an oath ?
2 Keep. No, never such an oath, nor will not now.
K. Hen. Where did you dwell, when I was king of England ?
2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain.

K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old ;
My father and my grandfather were kings ;
And you were sworn true subjects unto me ;
And tell me then, have you not broke your oaths ?
1 Keep. No ;
For we were subjects, but while you were king.

[K. Hen. Why, am I dead ? do I not breathe a man ?
Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear,
Look as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,

Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust ;
Such is the lightness of you common men,
B it do not break your oaths ; for, of that sin
My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be commanded ;
And be you kings ; command, and I'll obey.
1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, King Edward.

K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,
If he were seated as King Edward is.]
1 Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and in the king's,
To go with us unto the officers.

' K. Hen. In God's name, lead ; your king's name be obey'd ;
[And what God will, then let your king perform ;
And what he will, I humbly yield unto.] [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, CLARENCE, and Lady GREY.

' K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Alban's field
' This lady's husband, Sir John Grey, was slain,
K. Edw. It were no less ; but yet I'll make a pause,
Her suit is now, to repossess those lands ;
' Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York
' The worthy gentleman did lose his life.

Glo. Your highness shall do well to grant her suit ;
[It were dishonour to deny 't her.]
K. Edw. It were no less ; but yet I'll make a pause,
' Glo. Yea ! is it so ? [Aside to Clarence.]
I see the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.

Clar. He knows the game : How true he keeps the wind ! [Aside.]
Glo. Silence ! [Aside.]
' K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit ;
' And come some other time, to know our mind.

' L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay ;
' May it please your highness to resolve me now ;
' And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.
' Glo. [Aside.] Ay, widow ? then I'll warrant you all your lands,

' An if what pleases him shall pleasure you.
' Fight close-er, or good faith, you'll catch a blow.
[Clar. I fear her not, unless she chance to fall. [Aside.]
Glo. God forbid that ! for he'll take vantages. [Aside.]

' K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow ? tell Clar. I think, he means to beg a child of her. [me. [Aside.]
Glo. Nay, whip me then ; he'll rather give her two. [Aside.]

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.
Glo. You shall have four, if you'll be ruled by him. [Aside.]
' K. Edw. 'Twere pity, they should lose their father's land.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.
K. Edw. Lords, give us leave ; I'll try this widow's wit.
Glo. Ay, good leave have you ; for you will have leave,
' Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.
[Gloster and Clarence retire to the other side.]

[K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children ?
L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.
K. Edw. And would you not do much, to do them good ? [harm.]
L. Grey. To do them good, I would sustain some
K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.]
K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.
[L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness' service.

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them ?
L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.
K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.
L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.
K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask.
L. Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace commands.

Glo. He plies her hard ; and much rain wears the marble. [Aside.]
Clar. As red as fire : nay, then her wax must melt.] [Aside.]

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edw. An easy task; 'tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject. [thee.]

K. Edw. Why then, thy husband's lands I freely give

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glo. The match is made; she seals it with a curt'sy.

K. Edw. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I mean.

[L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.]

What love, thinkst thou, I see so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;

That love, which virtue begs, and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

[L. Grey. Why, then you mean not as I thought you did.]

K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive

Your highness aims at, if I am aright.]

K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

[L. Grey. To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.]

K. Edw. Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower;

For by that loss I will not purchase them.

K. Edw. The-rein thou wrong'st thy children mightily. [me.]

L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and

But, mighty lord, this merry inclination

'accords not with the sadness of my suit;

Please you dismiss me, either with ay, or no.

K. Edw. Ay; if thou wilt say ay, to my request;

No; if thou dost say no, to my demand.

L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.

Glo. The widow likes him not, she kulls her brows.

[Aside.]

Clar. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.

[Aside.]

K. Edw. [Aside.] Her looks do argue her replete with modesty;

[Her words do shew her wit incomparable;

All her perfections challenge sovereignty.]

One way, or other, she is for a king;

And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—

Say, that King Edward take thee for his queen?

L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord:

I am a subject fit to jest withal,

But far unfit to be a sovereign.

K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee,

I speak no more than what my soul intends;

And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.

L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto:

I know, I am too mean to be your queen;

And yet too good to be your concubine.

K. Edw. You call, widow; I did mean, my queen.

L. Grey. 'Twill grieve your grace, my sons should call you—father.

K. Edw. No more, than when my daughters call thee mother.

Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;

And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,

Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing

To be the father unto many sons.

Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.

Glo. The ghostly father now hath done his shrift.

[Aside.]

Clar. When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift.

[Aside.]

K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what chat we two have had.

[Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks sad.]

K. Edw. You'd think it strange, if I should marry her.

Clar. To whom, my lord?

K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.

Glo. That would be ten days' wonder at the least.

Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.

Glo. By so much is the wonder in extremes.

K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both,

Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry, your foe, is taken,

And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.

K. Edw. See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:—

And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,

To question of his apprehension.—

Widow, go you along;—Lords, use her honourable.

[Exit King Edward, Lady Grey, Clarence, and Lord.]

Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.

'Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,

'That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,

'To cross me from the golden time I look for!

'And yet, between my soul's desire and me,

[[The lustful Edward's title buried,]]

'Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,

'And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,

'To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:

A cold premeditation for my purpose!

[Why, then I do but dream on sovereignty;

Like one that stands upon a promontory,

And spies a far-off shore, where he would tread.

Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;

And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,

Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way;

So do I wish the crown, being so far off;

And so I chide the means, that keep me from it;

And so I say—I'll cut the causes off,

Plattering me with impossibilities.—

My eye's too quick, my heart o'erwears too much,

Unless my hand and strength could equal them.

Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;

What other pleasure can the world afford?]

'I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,

'And deck my body in gay ornaments,

'And with sweet ladies with my words and looks,

'O miserable thought! and more unlikely,

'Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns

Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:

'And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,

'She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe

'To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;

'To make an envious moumain on my back,

Where sits deformity to mock my body;

'To shape my legs of an unequal size,

['To disproportion me in every part,

Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd hear-whelp,

That carries no impression like the dam.]

And am I then a man to be beloved?

'O monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!

[Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,

But to command, to check, to o'erbear such

As are of better person than myself,

I'll make my heaven—to dream upon the crown;

And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell,

Until my mis-shap'd trunk that bears this head,

Be round impald with a glorious crown.

And yet I know not how to get the crown,

For many lives stand between me and home:

And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,

That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns;

Seeking a way, and straying from the way;

Not knowing how to find the open air,

But toiling desperately to find it out,—

Torment myself to catch the English crown:

And from that torment I will free myself,

Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.]

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile;

'And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart;

[And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,

And frame my face to all occasions.

I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;

I'll pluck the orator as well as Nestor,

Decieve more slyly than Ulysses could,

And, like a Sinon, take another Troy:]

I can add colours to the cameleon;

'Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,

'And set the murderous Machiavel to school.

Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?

'Tut! were it farther off, I'll pluck it down. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—France. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter LEWIS, the French King, and

Lady BONA, attended; the King takes his state.

Then enter QUEEN MARGARET, Prince ED-

WARD, her son, and the Earl of OXFORD.

K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,

'Sit down with us; it ill befits thy state [sit.]

'And birth, that thou shouldst stand, while Lewis doth

[Q. Mar. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret

Must strike her sail, and learn a while to serve,

Where kings command. I was, I must confess,

Great Albion's queen in former golden days:

But now mischance hath trod my title down,

And with dishonour laid me on the ground;

Where I must take like seat unto my fortunes,

And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears,

And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

K. Lew. Whate'er it be, be thou still like thyself,

And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck

(Seats her by him.)

To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.

Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

It shall be eased, if France can yield relief.

Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping

thoughts,

And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave in speak.

Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,—

That Henry, sole possessor of my love,

Is, of a king, become a banish'd man;

And forced to live in Scotland a forlorn;

While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,

Usurps the regal title, and the seat

Of England's true-anointed lawful king.

This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,—

With this my son, prince Edward, Henry's heir,—

Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;

And, if thou fail us, all our hope is done:

[Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;

Our people and our peers are both misled,

Our treasure seized, our soldiers put to flight,

And, as thou see'st, ourselves in heavy plight.

K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,

While we hethink a means to break it off. [foe.]

Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our

K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.

Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:

And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.]

Enter WARWICK, attended.

K. Lew. What 's he, approacheth boldly to our presence?

Q. Mar. Our earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest friend.

K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?

(Descending from his state. Queen Margaret rises.)

[Q. Mar. Ay, now begins the second storm to rise;

For this is he that moves both wind and tide.]

War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,

My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,

come,—in kindness, and unfeigned love,—

First to do greetings to thy royal person;

And, then, to crave a league of amity;

And, lastly, to confirm that amity

With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant

That virtuous lady Bona, thy fair sister,

To England's king in lawful marriage.

Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.

War. And, gracious madam, (to Bona) in our king's behalf,

I am commanded, with your leave and favour,

Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue

To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart:

Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,

Hath placed thy beauty's image, and thy virtue.

Q. Mar. King Lewis,—and lady Bona,—hear me

speak,

Before you answer Warwick. His demand

[Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,

But from deceit, bred by necessity.]

For how can tyrants safely govern home,

Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?

To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,—

That Henry liveth still: but were he dead,

Yet here prince Edward stands, King Henry's son.

Look, therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage.

Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour:

For though usurpers away the rule awhile,

Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.]

War. Injurious Margaret!

Prince. And why not queen?

War. Because thy father Henry did usurp;

And thou no more art prince, than she is queen.

Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,

Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;

And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,

'Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;

And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,

Who by his prowess conquered all France:

From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,

You told not, how Henry the Sixth hath lost

All that Henry the Fifth had gotten?

Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that.

But for the rest,—You tell a pedigree

Of threescore and two years; a silly time

To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.

Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,

'Whom thou obey'dst thirty and six years,

And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,

Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?

For shame, leave Henry, and call Edward king.

Oxf. Call him my king by whose injurious doom

'My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere,

Was done to death? and more than so, my father,

Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,

'When nature brought him to the door of death?

No, Warwick, no; while life unholds this arm,

This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York. [Oxford,

K. Lew. Queen Margaret, prince Edward, and

'Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside,

'While I use farther conference with Warwick.

[Q. Mar. Heaven grant that Warwick's words bewitch him not!]

(Retiring with the Prince and Oxford.)

K. Lew. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

'Is Edward your true king? for I were loath

'To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour.

K. Lew. But is he gracious in the people's eye?

War. The more that Henry was unfortunate.

K. Lew. Then farther, all dissembling set aside,

'Tell me for truth the measure of his love

'Unto our sister Bona.

War. Such it seems,

As may besem a monarch like himself.

Myself have often heard him say, and swear,—

That this his love was an eternal plant;

Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,

The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun;

Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,

Unless the lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.

Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine.—

Yet I confess, (to War.) that often ere this day,

When I have heard your king's desert recounted,

Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

[K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus,—Our sister shall be

Edward's;

And now forthwith shall articles be drawn

Touching the jointure that your king must make,

Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd.—]

Draw near, Queen Margaret; and be a witness,

That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.

[Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device

By this alliance to make void my suit;

Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.

K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret:

But if your title to the crown be weak,—

As may appear by Edward's good success,—

Then 'tis but reason, that I be released

From giving aid, which late I promised.

Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand,

That your estate requires, and mine can yield.]

War. Henry now lives in Scotland at his ease;

Where, having nothing, nothing he can lose.

And as for you yourself, our quondam queen,—

You have a father able to maintain you;

And better 'twere, you trouble him than France.

[Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick,

Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings!]

I will not hence, till with my talk and tears,

Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold

Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love;

For both of you are birds of self-same feather.]

(A horn sounded within.)

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you

Sent from your brother, marquis Montague.—

These from our king unto your majesty.—

And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.

(To Margaret. They all read their letters.)

Oxf. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress

Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark, how Lewis stamps as if he were

[I hope, all's for the best.]

K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen? [foes.]

Q. Mar. Mute, such as fill my heart with unhop'd

War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.
K. Lew. What! has your king married the lady Grey?
 And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
 Sends me a paper to persuade me patience?
 Is this the alliance that he seeks with France?
 Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

[Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before:]
 This proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.
War. King Lewis I here protest,—in sight of
 And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,— [Heaven,
 That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's;
 No more my king, for he dishonours me;
 But most himself, if he could see his shame.—
 Did I forget, that by the house of York
 My father came untimely to his death?
 Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece?
 Did I impale him with the regal crown?
 Did I put Henry from his native right;
 And am I guerdon'd at the last with shame?
 [Shame on himself! for my desert is honour,
 And, to repair my honour lost for him,
 I here renounce him and return to Henry.]

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
 And henceforth I am thy true servitor;
 I will revenge his wrong to lady Bona,
 And replant Henry in his former state. [to love;
Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate
 And I forgive and quite forget old faults,
 And joy, that thou becomest King Henry's friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend,
 That, if King Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
 With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
 I'll undertake to land them on our coast,
 And force the tyrant from his seat by war.
 Tis not his new-made bridle shall succour him:
 He's very likely now to fall from him;
 For matching more for reason, lest than honour,
 Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be revenged,
 But by thy help to this distressed queen?
Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live,
 Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?

Bona. My quarrel, and this English queen's are one.
War. And mine, fair lady Bona, joins with yours.
K. Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margaret's.]

Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolved,
 You shall have aid.

[Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.]
K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in post;
 And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—
 That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
 To reveal it with him and his new bride.
 [Thou seest what's past, go fear thy king withal.]

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

'll wear the willow garland for his sake. [aside,
Q. Mar. Tell him, My mourning weeds are laid
 And I am ready to put armour on. [wrong;

War. Tell him from me, That he hath done me
 And therefore I'll uncrown him, ere 't be long.
 There's thy reward; be gone. [Exit Mess.]

K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou
 And Oxford, with five thousand men,
 Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle:
 [And, as occasion serves, bid false Edward queen
 And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.]
 'Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt;—
 What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty;—
 That if our queen and this young prince agree,
 I'll join mine eldest daughter, and my joy,
 To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands. [motion:—

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,
 Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;
 And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
 That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.

[Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it;
 And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.]
 (He gives his hand to Warwick.)

K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied,
 And thou, lord Bourbon, our high admiral,
 Shall wait them over with our royal feet.—
 I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
 For mocking marriage with a dame of France.

[Exeunt all but Warwick.
War. I came from Edward as ambassador,
 But I return his sworn and mortal foe:
 Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,
 But dreadful war shall answer his demand.

Had he none else to make a state but me?
 Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
 I was the chief that raised him to the crown,
 And I'll be chief to bring him down again:
 Not that I pity Henry's misery,
 But seek revenge on Edward's mockery, [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE, SOMERSET,
MONTAGUE, and others.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you
 Of this new marriage with the lady Grey?
 [Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?
Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France;
 How could he stay till Warwick made return?
Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.]

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, attended:
 LADY GREY, as Queen; PEMBROKE, STAFF-
 FORD, HASTINGS, and others.

[Glo. And his well-chosen bride.
Clar. I would to tell him plainly what I think.]
K. Edu. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,

That you stand pensive as half malcontent?
Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick;

Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment,
 That they'll take no offence at our abuse,
K. Edu. Suppose they take offence without a cause,
 They are but Lewis and Warwick; I am Edward,
 Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.

Glo. And you shall have; our will, because our king;
 'Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well. [No;
K. Edu. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended
 'Glo. Not I?

'No; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd,
 Whom God hath join'd together: ay, and 'twere pity
 To sunder them that yoke so well together.

K. Edu. Setting your scorns and your dislike aside,
 Tell me some reason why the lady Grey
 Should not become my wife, and England's queen:
 And you, too, Somerset and Montague,

Speak freely what you think.
Clar. Then this is my opinion,—that King Lewis Becomes your enemy, for mocking him

About the marriage of the lady Bona.
Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,
 Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.

K. Edu. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd,
 By such invention as I can devise?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance,
 Would more have strengthen'd this our commonwealth
 'Gainst foreign storms, than any home-bred marriage.

Hast. Why, knows not Montague, that of itself
 'England is safe, if true within itself? [France, [Mont. Yes; but the safer when it is back'd with Hast. 'Tis better using France, than trusting France:

Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
 Which he hath given for fence impregnable;
 And with their help defend ourselves;
 In them, and in ourselves, our safety lies.]

Clar. For this one speech, lord Hastings well deserves

To have the heir of the lord Hungerford.
K. Edu. Ay, what of that? It was my will and grant;
 [And, for this once, my will shall stand for law.]

Glo. And yet, methinks, your grace hath not done
 To give the heir and daughter of lord Scalse [well,
 'Unto the brother of your loving bride;
 'She better would have fitted me or Clarence;

'But in your bride you bury brotherhood.
Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir
 Of the lord Bonville on your new wife's son,
 And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edu. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife,
 That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.

Clar. In choosing for yourself, you shew'd your judgment;

Which, being shaker, you shall give me leave
 To play the broiler in mine own behalf;
 And, in that end, I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edu. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,
 And not be tied unto his brother's will.

Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleased his majesty
 To raise my state to title of a queen,
 'Do me but right, and you must all confer

'That I was not ignoble of descent,
 [And meaner than myself have had like fortune.
 But as this title honours me and mine,
 So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
 Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.]
 'K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:
 'What danger, or what sorrow, can befall thee,
 'So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
 'And their true sovereign, whom they must obey?
 'Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
 'Unless they seek for hatred at my hands:
 'Which, if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
 'And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.
 [Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.]
 (Aside.)

Enter a Messenger.

'K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what news,
 From France?
 'Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few words,
 'But such as I, without your special pardon,
 Dare not relate.
 'K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief,
 'Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them.
 'What answer makes King Lewis unto our letters?
 'Mess. At my depart, these were his very words:
 'Go, tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—
 'That Lewis of France is sending over maskers.
 'To revel it with him and his new bride. [Henry,
 'K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave? belike, he thinks me
 'But what said lady Bona to my marriage?
 'Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain;
 'Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
 'I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.
 'K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less;
 'She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen?
 'For I have heard that she was there in place.
 'Mess. Tell him, quoth she, my mourning weeds are done,
 And I am ready to put armour on.
 'K. Edw. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon.
 But what said Warwick to these injuries?
 'Mess. He, more incensed against your majesty
 'Than all the rest, discharged me with these words:
 'Tell him from me that he hath done me wrong,
 And therefore I'll uncover him ere 't be long.
 'K. Edw. Ha! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words?
 'Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd:
 'They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.
 'But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?
 'Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship, [Ter.
 'That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter—
 'Clar. Belike, the elder; Clarence will have the younger.
 'Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,
 'For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter;
 'That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage
 I may not prove inferior to yourself.—
 'You, that love me and Warwick, follow me.
 [Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.]

[Glo. Not I:
 My thoughts aim at a farther matter; I
 Stay not for love of Edward, but the crown.] (Aside.)
 'K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both goue to Warwick!
 [Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen;
 And haste is needful in this desperate case.—]
 'Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf
 'Go levy men, and make prepare for war;
 'They are already, or quickly will be landed;
 'Myself in person will straight follow you.
 [Exit Pembroke and Stafford.]
 'But, ere I go, Hastings, — and Montague, —
 'Resolve my doubt. You wain, of all the rest,
 'Are near to Warwick, by blood, and by alliance;
 'Tell me, if you love Warwick more than me?
 'If it be so, then both depart to him;
 'I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends;
 'But if you mind to hold your true obedience,
 'Give me assurance with some friendly vow,
 'That I may never have you in suspect.
 'Mont. So God help Montague, as he proves true!
 'Hast. And Hastings, as he favours Edward's cause!
 'K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?
 'Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.
 'K. Edw. Why so; then am I sure of victory.
 Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour,
 'Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.
 [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter WARWICK and OXFORD, with French and other Forces.

'War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well;
 The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter CLARENCE and SOMERSET.

But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come;—
 Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends?
 'Clar. Fear not that, my lord.
 'War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick.
 And welcome, Somerset;—I hold it cowardice
 To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
 Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love;
 Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother,
 Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:
 But welcome, Clarence, my daughter shall be thine.
 And now what rests, but, in night's coverture,
 Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd,
 His soldiers lurking in the towns about,
 And but attended by a simple guard,
 We may surprise and take him at our pleasure?
 Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:
 [That as Ulysses, and stout Diomedes,
 With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents,
 And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds;
 So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle,
 At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
 And seize himself; I say not—slaughter him,
 For I intend but only to surprise him.—]
 'You, that will follow me in this attempt,
 Applaud the name of Henry, your leader.
 (They all cry, Henry!)

Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort:
 For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George!
 [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Edward's Camp, near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's tent.

[1 Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand;
 'The king, by this, is set him down to sleep.
 '2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?
 '1 Watch. Why, no; for he hath made a solemn vow Never to lie and take his natural rest,
 'Till Warwick, or himself, he quite suppress'd.
 '2 Watch. To-morrow, then, helike, shall be the day,
 If Warwick be so near as men report.
 '3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that,
 That with the king here resteth in his tent?
 '1 Watch. 'Tis the lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.
 '3 Watch. O, is it so? But why commands the king,
 That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
 While he himself keepeth in the cold field?
 '2 Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.
 '3 Watch. Ay; but give me worship and quietness,
 I like it better than a dangerous honour.
 If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,
 'Tis to be doubted, he would waken him.
 '1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his passage.
 '2 Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal tent,
 But to defend his person from night-foes?]

Enter WARWICK, CLARENCE, OXFORD,
 SOMERSET, and Forces.

'War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his guard.
 'Courage, my masters: honour now, or never!
 'But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.
 '1 Watch. Who goes there?
 '2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.
 [Warwick, and the rest, cry all—Warwick!
 Warwick! and set upon the Guard: who fly, crying—Arm! arm! Warwick and the rest following them.]

The drum beating, and trumpets sounding, re-enter WARWICK, and the rest, bringing the King out in a gown, sitting in a chair: Gloster and Hastings fly.

'Som. What are they that fly there?
 'War. Richard and Hastings: let them go, here's the duke. [Last,
 'K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we parted
 Thou call'dst me king?
 'War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:
 'When you disgraced me in my embassy,
 'Then I degraded you from being king,

And come now to create you duke of York.
Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,
That know not bow to use ambassadors;
Nor how to be contented with one wife;
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly;
[Nor how to study for the people's welfare;]
Nor how to shrowd yourself from enemies?

[K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?
Nay, then I see, that Edward needs must down.—]

* Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,
Of thee thyself, and all thy complices,
Edward will always bear himself as king:
[Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.]

War. Then, for his mind, be Edward England's king: (Takes off his crown.)

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,
[And be true king indeed: thou but the shadow.—]

* My lord of Somerset, at my request,
See that forthwith duke Edward be convey'd
* Unto my brother, archbishop of York.

* When I have fought with Penbrooke and his fellows,
I'll follow you, and tell what answer

* Lewis, and the lady Boia, send to him:

Now, for a while, farewell, good duke of York.

[K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs abide;

It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit King Edward, led out by Somerset with him.

Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do;

But march to London with our soldiers?]

War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do;

* To free King Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the regal throne. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and RIVERS.

* Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change?

* Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn,

What late misfortune is befall'n King Edward?

Riv. What, loss of some pitch'd battle against

Warwick?

* Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

* Riv. Then is my sovereign slain?

* Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;

* Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard,

* Or by his foe surprised at unawares;

* And as I farther have to understand,

* Is new committed to the bishop of York,

* Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.

* Riv. These news, I must confess, are full of grief:

* Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may;

* Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

[Q. Eliz. Till then, fair hope must hinder life's decay.

And I the rather wean me from despair,

For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:

This is it that makes me hridle passion,

And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross;

Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,

And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,

Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown

King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English crown.

* Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick then become?

* Q. Eliz. I am inform'd that he comes towards

London,

[To set the crown once more on Henry's head:

Guess thou the rest; King Edward's friends must

down.]

* But, to prevent the tyrant's violence,

* (For trust not him, that hath one broken faith),

* I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,

* To save at least the heir of Edward's right;

* There shall I rest secure from force and fraud.

* Come therefore, let us fly, while we may fly: [Exeunt.

* If Warwick take us, we are sure to die.]

SCENE V.—A Park near Middleham Castle, in Yorkshire.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, Sir WILLIAM STANLEY, and others.

* Glo. Now, my lord Hastings, and Sir William

Stanley,

* Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,

* Into this chiefest thicket of the park,

* Thus stands the case: You know our king, my brother,

* Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands

* He hath good usage and great liberty;

* And often, but attended with weak guard,

* Comes bunting this way to disport himself.

I have advertised him by secret messes,

* That if about this hour he make this way,

* Under the colour of his usual game,

* He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,

* To set him free from his captivity.

Enter KING EDWARD, and a Huntsman.

* Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game,

* K. Edw. Nay, this way, man; see, where the huntsmen stand.—

* Now, brother of Gloster, lord Hastings, and the rest,

* Stand you thus close to steal the bishop's deer?

* Glo. Brother, the time and case requirith haste;

* Your horse stands ready at the park corner.

* K. Edw. But whither shall we then?

* Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to

Flanders. [Meaning,

* Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my

* K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.

[Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talk.]

* K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?

* Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.

[Glo. Come, then, away; let's have no more ado.]

* K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown:

And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.

Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, WARWICK, SOMERSET, Young RICHMOND, OXFORD, MONTAGUE, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

[K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and Have shaken Edward from the regal seat; [friends And turn'd my captive state to liberty, My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys;

At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

But, if an humble prayer may prevail,

I then crave pardon of your majesty.

* K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?

Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,

For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure:

Ay, such a pleasure as incag'd birds

Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,

At last, by notes of household harmony,

They quite forget their loss of liberty.—

But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,

And chiefly therefore I thank God, and thee;

He was the author, thou the instrument.

Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,

By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me;

And that the people of this blessed land

May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars;]

* Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,

* I here resign my government to thee.

* For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

[War. Your grace hath still been famed for virtuous;

And now may seem as wise as virtuous,

By spying, and avoiding, fortune's malice,

For few men rightly temper with the stars:

Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,

For choosing me, when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,

To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,

Adjudged an olive branch, and laurel crown,

As likely to be blest in peace and war;

And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.

* K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands;

Now join your hands, and, with your hands your hearts,

That no dissention hinder government:]

* I make you both protectors of this land;

* While I myself will lead a private life,

* And in devotion spend my latter days,

To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise. [will?

War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's

[Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent;

For on thy fortune I repose myself.

War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be content

We'll yoke together, like a double shadow

To Henry's body, and supply his place;

I mean, in bearing weight of government,

While he enjoys the honour, and his ease.

And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful,

Forthwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor,

And all his lands and goods be confiscated.]

Clar. What else? and that succession be determined.

War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,
Let me entreat, (for I command no more,) [Exeunt from above.]
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,
Be sent for, to return from France with speed :
For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear
My joy of liberty is half eclipsed.]

Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.

K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that,

Of whom you seem to have so tender care ?

Som. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond.

K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope : If secret powers

Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,

'Tis this pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.

'His looks are full of peaceful majesty ;

'His head by nature framed to wear a crown,

'His hand to wield a sceptre ; and himself

Likely, in time, to bless a regal throne.

Make much of him, my lords ; for this is he,

'Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.

[War. What news, my friend ?

Mess. That Edward has escap'd from your brother,

And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

War. Unsavoury news : But how made he escape ?

Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,

And the lord Hastings, who attended him

In secret ambush on the forest side,

And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him ;

For hunting was his daily exercise.

War. My brother was too careless of his charge.—

But let us bence, my sovereign, to provide

A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt K. Henry, War, Clar, Lieut. and Attendants.]

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's ;

For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help ;

And we shall have more wars, before 't be long.

As Henry's late presaging prophecy

Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond ;

So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts

What may befall him, to his harm and ours :

Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,

Forthwith we 'll send him hence to Britany,

Till storms be past of civil enmity.

Oxf. Ay : for, if Edward repossess the crown,

'Tis like, that Richmond with the rest shall down.

Som. It shall be so ; he shall to Britany.

Come therefore, let 's about it speedily.] [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, HASTINGS,

and Forces.

K. Edw. Now, brotner Richard, lord Hastings, and the rest ;

' Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,

' And says—that once more I shall interchange

' My want'd state for Henry's regal crown.

' Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,

' And brought desired help from Burgundy :

' What then remains, we being thus arriv'd

' From Ravenspurgh haven before the gates of York,

' But that we enter, as into our dukedom ? [this ;

' Glo. The gates made fast !—Brother, I like not

[For many men, that stumble at the threshold,

Are well foretold—that danger lurks within.

K. Edw. Tush man ! abodeiments must not now

By fair or foul means we must enter in, [affright us :

For hither will our friends repair to us.]

Hast. My liege, I 'll knock once more, to summon

them.]

Enter on the walls, the Mayor of York and his brethren.

May. My lords, we were forewarn'd of your coming,

' And shut the gates for safety of ourselves ;

' For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.

K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,

' Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.

May. True, my good lord ; I know you for no less.

K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom ;

[As being well content with that alone.]

Glo. But, when the fox hath once got in his nose,

He 'll soon find means to make the body follow.

(Aside.)

Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt ?

Open the gates, we are King Henry's friends.

May. Ay, say you so ? the gates shall then be open'd. [Exeunt from above.]

Glo. A wise stout captain, and persuaded soon

[Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,

So 'twere not 'long of him : but, being enter'd,

I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade

Both him, and all his brothers, unto reason.]

Re-enter the Mayor, and two Aldermen, below.

K. Edw. So, master mayor : these gates must not be shut,

' But in the night, or in the time of war.

' What ! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys ;

(Takes his keys.)

' For Edward will defend the town, and thee,

' And all those friends that deign to follow me.

Drum. Enter MONTGOMERY, and Forces, marching.

Glo. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery,

Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd.

K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John ! But why come you in arms ?

Mont. To help King Edward in his time of storm.

As every loyal subject ought to do.

K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery : But we now forget

Our title to the crown ; and only claim

Our dukedom, till God please to send the rest.

Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again ;

I came to serve a king, and not a duke.—

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

(A march begun.)

K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, awhile, and we 'll debate,

' By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.

Mont. What talk you of debating ? in few words,

' If you 'll not here proclaim yourself our king,

' I 'll leave you to your fortune, and be gone

' To keep them back that come to succour you :

Why should we fight, if you pretend no title ?

Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points ?

[K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we 'll make our claim :

Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous wit ! now arms must rule.

Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.

Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand ;

'Tis the bruit thereof will bring you many friends.

K. Edw. Then be it as you will ; for 'tis my right,

And Henry but usurps the diadem.]

Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself ;

And now will I be Edward's champion.

Hast. Sound, trumpet ; Edward shall be here proclaim'd :—

[Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.]

(Gives him a paper. Flourish.)

Sold. (Reads.) Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c.

Mont. And whoso'er gainsays king Edward's right,

By this I challenge him to single fight.

(Throws down his gauntlet.)

All, long live Edward the Fourth !

K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery ;—and thanks unto you all.

' If fortune serve me, I 'll requite this kindness.

' Now, for this night, let 's harbour here in York :

' And, when the morning sun shall raise his ear

' Above the border of this horizon,

' We 'll forward towards Warwick and his mates ;

' For, well I wot, that Henry is no soldier.—

[To flatter Clarence ?—how evil it becometh thee,

To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother !

Yet, as we may, we 'll meet both thee and Warwick.—

Come on, brave soldiers ; doubt not of the day ;

And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay.] [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, WARWICK, CLARENCE,

MONTAGUE, EXETER, and OXFORD.

War. What counsel, lords ? Edward from Belgia,

With haughty Germans, and blunt Hollanders,

Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas,

And with his troops doth march amain to London,

' And many giddy people flock to him.

[Orf. Let's levy men, and beat him back again.]
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
 Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,
 Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;
 Those will I muster up;—and thou, son Clarence,
 'Shalt stir, in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,
 'The knights and gentlemen to come with thee;—
 'Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham,
 'Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
 'Men well inclined to hear what thou command'st:—
 'And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well beloved,
 In Oxfordshire, shalt muster up thy friends.—
 My sovereign, with the loving citizens,—
 [Like to his island, girt in with the ocean,
 Or modest Dian, circled with her nymphs,—]
 Shall rest in London, till we come to him.
 Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—
 Farewell, my sovereign. [hope.]

K. Hen. Farewell, my Heator, and my Troy's true [Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.
K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!
 Mont. Comfort, my lord!—and so I take my leave.
Orf. And thus [Kissing Henry's hand.] I seal my truth, and bid adieu.

K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,
 And all at once, once more a happy farewell.]
War. Farewell, sweet lords; let's meet at Coventry.
 [Exeunt War, Clar, Orf, and Mont.]

[K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a while.
 Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?
 Methinks, the power, that Edward hath in field,
 Shall not be able to encounter mine.

Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.
K. Hen. That's not my fear, my meed hath got me fame.

I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,
 Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;
 My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
 My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
 My mercy dried their water-flowing tears:
 I have not been desirous of their wealth,
 Nor mued oppress'd them with great subsidies,
 Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd;
 Then why should they love Edward more than me?
 No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace;
 And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,
 The lamb will never cease to follow him.]

[Shout within. A Lancaster! A Lancaster!]
Exe. Hark, bark, my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.
Edw. Seize on the shame-faced Henry, bear him
 hence,

'And once again proclaim us king of England.—
 [You are the fount, that makes small brooks to flow;
 Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry,
 And swell so much the higher by their ebb.—]
 'Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

[Exeunt some with King Henry.]
 'And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,
 'Where peremptory Warwick now remains:
 'The sun shines hot, and, if we use delay,
 'Cold biting winter mars our hoped-for hay.

[Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join,
 And take the great-grown traitor unawares:
 Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.]
 [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter, upon the walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?
 '1 Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?—
 Where is the post that came from Montague?
 '2 Mess. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troop.

Enter SIR JOHN SOMERVILLE.
War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?
 And, by the guess, how nigh is Clarence now?
 'Som. At Southam, I did leave him with his forces,
 And do expect him here some two hours hence.
 (Drum heard.)
 'War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.

[Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies;
 The drum, your honour hears, marcheth from Warwick.
War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for friends.
 Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.]

Drums. Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Forces, marching.

[K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.]

'Glo. See how the surly Warwick mans the wall.
War. O, unbild spite! is sportful Edward come?
 Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduced,
 That we could hear no news of his repair?

[K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city gates.]

'Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee!—
 'Call Edward—king, and at his hands beg mercy,
 'And he shall pardon thee these outrages.

'War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
 Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?—
 Call Warwick—patron, and be penitent,
 And thou shalt still remain the duke of York.

Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said—tha
 king;

Or did he make the jest against his will?
 [War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?
Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give;
 I'll do thee service for so good a gift.]

War. 'Twas I that gave the kingdom to thy brother K. Edw. Why, then, 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

'War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:
 And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again;
 And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

[K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner:
 'And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this,—
 'What is the body, when the head is off?]

'Glo. Alas, that Warwick had no more forecast,
 But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,
 'The king was silly finger'd of the deck!
 'You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace,
 And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. Edw. 'Tis even so; yet you are Warwick still.
 [Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time, kneel down, kneel down.]

Nay, when? strike now, or else the iron eools.
War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,
 And with the other fling it at thy face,
 Than bear so low a sail to strike to thee.

K. Edw. Sail how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend;

This hand, fast wound about thy coal-black hair,
 Shall, whiles the head is warm, and new cut off,
 Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood,—
 'Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter OXFORD, with drum and colours.

[War. O cheerful colours! see, where Oxford comes!]
Orf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster!
 (Oxford and his Forces enter the City.)

'Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.
 'K. Edw. So other foes may set upon our backs:
 [Stand we in good array; for they, no doubt,
 Will issue out again, and bid us battle.]

'If not, the city being but of small defence,
 'We'll quietly rouse the traitors in the same.
War. O, welcome, Oxford! for we want thy help.

Enter MONTAGUE, with drum and colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster!
 (He and his Forces enter the City.)

'Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason,
 'Even with the dearest blood your bodies bear.

[K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory;
 My mind presageth happy gain, and conquest.]

Enter SOMERSET, with drum and colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!
 (He and his Forces enter the City.)

Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset,
 Have sold their lives unto the house of York;
 And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter CLARENCE, with drum and colours.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps along,
 Of force enough to bid his brother battle;
 [With whom an upright zeal to right preails,
 More than the nature of a brother's love;—
 Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick calls.]

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means ?
(Taking the red rose out of his cap.)

' Look here, I throw my infamy at thee :
I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
' And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou, Warwick,
' That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural,
' To bend the fatal instruments of war
' Against his brother, and his lawful king ?
[Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath :
To keep that oath, were more impious
Than Jephtha's, when he sacrificed his daughter.
I am so sorry for my trespass made,
That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,
I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe ;
With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee,
(As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad,)
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.]
And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.—
' Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends ;
' And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,
' For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

' K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more beloved,
Than if thou never hadst deserved our hate.
' Glo. Welcome, good Clarence ; this is brother-like.
' War. O passing traitor, perjured and unjust !
' K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town, and fight ?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears ?
' Wor. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence ;
will away towards Barnet presently.

And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou darest.
' K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way :—

Lords, to the field ; Saint George, and victory !
[March. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Field of Battle, near Barnet.

Alarums, and Excursions. Enter KING EDWARD, bringing in WARWICK wounded.

[K. Edw. So, lie thou there : die thou, and die our fear ;

For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all.—
Now, Montague, sit fast ; I seek for thee,
That Warwick's bones may keep thine company.]

[Exit.
' War. Ah, who is nigh ? come to me, friend or foe,
And tell me, who is victor, York, or Warwick ?
Why ask I that ? my mangled body shews,
[My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shews,]
That I must yield my body to the earth,
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept ;
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
[And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.
These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil,

Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,
To search the secret treasons of the world ;]
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,
Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres ;
For who lived king, but I could dig his grave ?
And who durst smile, when Warwick hent his brow ?
Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood !
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Even now forsake me ; and, of all my lands,
Is nothing left me, but my body's length !
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust ?
And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter OXFORD and SOMERSET.

[Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick ! wert thou as we are,
We might recover all our loss again !]

' The queen from France hath brought a puissant power ;
' Even now we heard the news : Ah, couldst thou fly !
' War. Why, then I would not fly.—Ah, Montague,
[If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy lips keep in my soul a while !
Thou lovest me not ; for, brother, if thou didst,
Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood
That glews my lips, and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.]

[Som. Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breathed his
' And to the latest gasp, cried out for Warwick,
' And said—Commend me to my vallant brother.
' And more he would have said ; and more he spoke,
' Which sounded like a cannon in a vault,

' That might not be distinguish'd ; but, at last,
' I well might hear deliver'd with a groan,—
' O, farewell, Warwick !
' War. Sweet rest to his soul !—
Fly, lords, and save yourselves ; for Warwick bids
You all farewell, to meet again in heaven. (Dies.)
' Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power !
[Exeunt, bearing off Warwick's body.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, in triumph ; with CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and the rest.

' K. Edw. Thus for our fortune keeps an upward
course,

' And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.
' But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,
' I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud,
' That will encounter with our glorious sun,
' Ere he attain his easeful western bed ;
' I mean, my lords,—those powers, that the queen
' Hath raised in Gallia, have arrived our coast,
' And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

[Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,
And blow it to the source from whence it came :
Thy very beams will dry those vapours up ;
For every cloud engenders not a storm.]

' Glo. The queen is valued thirty thousand strong,]
' And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her ;
' If she have time to breathe, be well assured,
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

' K. Edw. We are advertised by our loving friends,
That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury ;
' We, having now the beat at Barnet field,
' Will thither straight, for willingness rids way ;
' And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
In every county as we go along.—
Strike up the drum ; cry—Courage ! and away.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

March. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD, SOMERSET, OXFORD, and Soldiers

[Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wait their loss,

But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.]
' What though the mast be now blown over-board,
' The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
' And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood ?
' Yet lives our pilot still : Is't meet that he ' Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
[With fearful eyes add water to the sea,
And give more strength to that which hath too much ;
While, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock,
Which industry and courage might have saved ?
Ah, what a shame ! ah, what a fault were that ' Say, Warwick was our anchor : what of that ?
' And Montague our top-mast : what of him ?
' Our slaughter'd friends the tackles : what of these ?
' Why, is not Oxford here another anchor ?
' And Somerset another goodly mast ?
' The friends of France our shrouds and tacklings ?
' And though unskillful, why not Ned and I
' For once allow'd the skillful pilot's charge ?
' We will not from the helm, to sit and weep ;
[But keep our course, though the rough wind say—no,
From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.
As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
And what is Edward, but a ruthless sea ?
What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit ?
And Richard, but a ragged fatal rock ?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.

Say, you can swim ; alas, 'tis but a while !
Tread on the sands ; why, there you quickly sink ;
Beside the rock ; the tide will wash you off,]
Or else you fash, that's a threefold death.
[This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
In case some one of you would fly from us,
That there's no hoped-for mercy with the brothers,
More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks.
Why, courage, then ! what cannot be avoided,
' Twere childish weakness to lament or fear.]

' Prince. Methinks a woman of this vallant spirit
Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.]
' I speak not this, as doubting any here :
' For, did I but suspect a fearful man,
' He should have leave to go away betimes ;

'Lest, in our need, he might infect another,
And make him like spirit to himself.
'If any such be here, as God forbid!
'Let him depart, before we need his help.
'Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage!
And warriors faint! why, 'twere perpetual shame.
'O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: Long may'st thou live,
To hear his image, and renew his glories!
'Som. And he, that will not fight for such a hope,
'Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day,
'If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.
[Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset;—sweet Oxford,
thanks.
Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.]

Enter a Messenger.

'Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand,
'Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.
'Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy,
To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.
'Som. But he's deceived, we are in readiness.
Q. Mar. This cheers my heart, to see your forwardness.
Oxf. Here pitch our battle, hence we will not budge.

March. Enter, at a distance, KING EDWARD,
CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces.

'K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
'Which, by the Heavens' assistance and your strength,
'Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
[I need not add more fuel to your fire,
For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out:
Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.]
Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say,
'My tears gainsay; for every word I speak,
'Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes.
'Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your sovereign,
'Is prisoner to the King, his state usque.
'His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain,
'His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;
'And yonder is the wolf, that makes this spoil.
'You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
'Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

[Exeunt both armies.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the same.

Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a retreat.
Then, enter KING EDWARD, CLARENCE,
GLOSTER, and Forces; with QUEEN MARGARET,
OXFORD, and SOMERSET, prisoners.

'K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous broils.
Away with Oxford to Hammes' castle straight:
For Somerset, off with his guilty head.
'Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.
Oxf. For my part, 'I'll not trouble thee with words.
'Som. Nor I, but stoop with patience to my fortune.
[Exeunt Oxford and Somerset, guarded.
[Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous world,
To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.
K. Edw. Is proclamation made,—that who finds Edward,
Shall have a high reward, and he his life?
Glo. It is: and lo, where youthful Edward comes.]

Enter Soldiers, with PRINCE EDWARD.

[K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him
speak.
What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?]
'Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,
'For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
[And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?]
Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!
Suppose, that I am now my father's mouth;
Resign thy chair, and where I stand, kneel thou,
Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,
Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.
Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolved!
Glo. That you might still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er have stolen the breech from Lancaster.
Prince. Let Æsop fable in a winter's night;
His curish riddles sort not with this place.
Glo. By Heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word.
Q. Mar. Ay, that wast born to be a plague to men.
Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.
Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather.
'K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm your Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my duty, you are all undutiful:
Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjured George,—
And thou mis-shapen Dick,—I tell ye all,
I am your better, traitors as ye are:—
[And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine,]
K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this raller here.
(Stabs him.)
[Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony.
(Glo. stabs him.)
Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury.
(Clar. stabs him.)

Q. Mar. O kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. (Offers to kill her.)
'K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we have done too much.

Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?
'K. Edw. What! doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king, my brother;
'I'll hence to London, on a serious matter:
'Ere ye come thence, be sure to hear some news.

'Clar. What? what?'Glo. The Tower, the Tower! [Exit.]'Q. Mar. O Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!

'Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!
They that stabb'd Cæsar, shed no blood at all,
Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,
[If this foul deed were by, to equal it.]
'He was a man; this, in respect, a child;
And men ne'er spend their fury on a child.
What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?
[No, no; my heart will burst, an if I speak:—
And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.—]
'Butchers and villains, bloody cannibals!

[How sweet a plant have you untimely clogg'd!]
'You have no children, butchers! if you had,
'The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse:
'But, if you ever chance to have a child,
Look in his youth to have him so cut off,
'As, deathmen! you have rid this sweet young prince!

'K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence perforce.

Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despatch me
here;

Here sheath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death:

What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.

'Clar. By Heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.'Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou;
do it. [it.]'Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear, I would not do it'Q. Mar. Ay, but thou ushest to forswear thyself;

'Twas sin before, but now 'tis charity.

'What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher,

Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not here: Murder is thy aim'd-deed;

Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put'st back.

'K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, bear her hence.'Q. Mar. So come to you and yours, as to this prince!
[Exit, led out forcibly.]'K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?'Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,

To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

'K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head.

'Now march we hence: discharge the common sort

'With pay and thanks, and let's away to London,

'And see our gentle queen how well she fares;
'By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—London. A Room in the Tower.

KING HENRY is discovered sitting with a book in his hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good day, my lord! What, at your book so hard?'K. Hen. A, my good lord—my lord, I should say rather;

'Tis sin to flatter, good was little better:

Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,

[And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.
Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. [Exit Lieutenant.]
'K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf

So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,

And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—]

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

'Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;

The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

'K. Hen. The bird, that hath been limed in a bush,

'With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush:

And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,

Have now the fatal object in my eye, [kill'd.
Where my poor young was limed, was caught, and

'Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of Crete,
 'That taught his son the office of a fowl?
 'And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.
 'K. Hen. I, Dædalus; my poor boy, Icarus;
 Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;
 'The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy,
 'Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,
 'Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.
 [Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!]
 'My breast can better brook the dagger's point,
 'Than can my ears that tragic history.—
 [But wherefore dost thou come? is't for my life?]
 'Glo. Think'st thou, I am an executioner?
 'K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art;
 'If murdering innocents be executing,
 'Why, then thou art an executioner.
 'Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.
 'K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd, when first thou didst presume,
 Thou hadst not lived to kill a son of mine.
 'And thus I prophesy,—that many a thousand,
 Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear;
 'And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,
 'And many an orphan's water-standing eye,—
 'Men for their sons, wives for their husbands' fate,
 'And orphans for their parents' timeless death,—
 'Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.
 'The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
 'The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time;
 'Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempests shook down trees;
 'The raven rook'd her on the chimney's top,
 'And chattering pies in dismal discords sung.
 'Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
 'And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope:
 'To wit,—an indigest deformed lump,
 'Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.
 'Teeth badst thou in thy head, when thou wast born,
 'To signify,—thou camest to bite the world;
 'And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
 'Thou camest—
 'Glo. I'll hear no more.—Die, prophet, in thy speech;
 (Stabs him.)
 For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.
 'K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.
 O God! forgive my sins, and pardon thee! (Dies.)
 'Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.
 'See, how my sword weeps for the poor king's death!
 'O may such purple tears be always shed
 'From those that wish the downfall of our house!—
 'If any spark of life be yet remaining,
 'Down, down to bell; and say—I sent thee thither,
 (Stabs him again.)
 I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.—
 'Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of;
 'For I have often heard my mother say,
 'I came into the world with my legs forward;
 'Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste?
 'And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right?
 'The midwife wonder'd; and the women cried,
 'O Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth!
 'And so I was; which plainly signified—
 'That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
 'Then, since the Heavens have shaped my body so,
 'Let heh make crook'd my mind to answer it.
 'I have no brother, I am like no brother;
 'And this word—love, which greybeards call divine,
 'Is resident in men like one another.

And not in me. I am myself alone.—
 'Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light;
 'But I will sort a pitchy day for thee:
 'For I will buzz abroad such prophecies,
 'That Edward shall be fearful of his life.
 'And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.
 'King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:
 'Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest;
 'Counting myself but bad, till I be best.—
 'I'll throw thy body in another room.
 'And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

KING EDWARD is discovered sitting on his throne.
 QUEEN ELIZABETH with the infant Prince.
 CLARENCE, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and others, near him.

'K. Edu. Once more we sit in England's royal throne, Repurchased with the blood of enemies.
 'What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,
 'Have we mow'd down, in tops of all their pride?
 'Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd
 'For hardy and undoubted champions:
 'Two Cliffords, as the father and the son;
 'And two Northumberlands: two braver men
 'Ne'er spur'd their coursers at the trumpet's sound;
 'With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and

Montague,
 'That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
 'And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.
 'Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
 'And made our footstool of security.—
 'Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy:—
 'Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles, and myself,
 'Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night;
 'Went all a-foot in summer's scalding heat,
 'That thou might'st repose the crown in peace;
 'And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.

'Glo. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid;
 'For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
 'This shoulder was ordain'd so thick, to heave;
 'And heave it shall some weight, or break my back:—
 'Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute. (Aside.)
 'K. Edu. Clarence and Gloster, love my lovely queen—
 'And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.
 'Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty,
 'I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

'K. Edu. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks, [sprang'st,
 'Glo. And that I love the tree from whence thou
 'Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit:—
 'To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master;
 'And cried—all hail! when as he meant— } Aside.
 all harm.

'K. Edu. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
 'Having my country's peace, and brothers' loves.
 'Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret?
 'Reignier, her father, to the king of France
 'Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
 'And hither have they sent it for her ransom.
 'K. Edu. Away with her, and wait her hence to France.

'And now what rests, but that we spend the time
 'With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
 'Such as befit the pleasures of the court?—
 'Sound, drums and trumpets!—farewell, sour anno!
 'For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exit.

SCENE.—England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent
 Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
 And all the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,
 In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
 Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
 Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
 Our stern alarms changed to merry meetings,
 Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
 Grim-visaged war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
 And now,—instead of mounting barbed steeds,
 To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,—
 He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
 To the lascivious pleasing of a lute,
 But I,—that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
 Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
 I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
 To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
 I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
 Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
 Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
 Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
 And that so lamely and unfashionable,
 That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them;
 Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
 Have no delight to pass away the time;
 Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
 And desert on mine own deformity;
 And therefore,—since I cannot prove a lover,
 To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
 I am determin'd to prove a villain,
 And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
 Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
 By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
 To set my brother Clarence, and the king,
 In deadly hate, the one against the other;
 And, if King Edward be as true and just,
 As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
 This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up;
 About a prophecy, which says,—that G
 O' Edward's heirs the murderer shall be.
 Dive, thoughts, down to my soul! here Clarence comes

Enter CLARENCE, guarded, and BRAKENBURY.

Brother, good day: What means this armed guard,
 That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
 Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
 This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is—George
Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;
 He should, for that, commit your godfathers:—
 O, belike, his majesty hath some intent,
 That you shall be new christen'd in the Tower.
 But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for, I protest,
 As yet I do not: But, as I can learn,
 He hearkens after prophecies and dreams;
 And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
 And says—a wizard told him, that by G
 His issue disinherited should be;

And, for my name of George begins with G,
 It follows in his thought, that I am he:
 These, as I learn, and such like toys as these,
 Have moved his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Why, this it is, when men are ruled by women:—
 'Tis not the king, that sends you to the Tower;
 My lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she,
 That tempers him to this extremity.

Was it not she, and that good man of worship,
 Antony Woodville, her brother there,
 That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower;
 From whence this present day he is deliver'd?

We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.
Clar. By Heaven, I think, there is no man secure,
 But the queen's kindred, and night-walking heralds
 That trudge betwixt the king and mistress Shore.

Heard you not, what an humble suppliant
 Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity,
 Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.
 I'll tell you what,—I think, it is our way,
 If we will keep in favour with the king,
 To be her men, and wear her livery:
 The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself,
 Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
 Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;

His majesty hath straitly given in charge,
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever, with his brother.
Glo. Even so? an please your worship, Brakenbury,
You may partake of any thing we say:
We speak no treason, man; we say, the king
Is wise, and virtuous; and his noble queen
Well struck in years; fair, and not jealous:—
We say, that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip,
A bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;
And the queen's kindred are made gentle-folks:
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?
Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do.
Glo. Naught to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee,
He that doth naught with her, excepting one, [fellow,
Were best to do it secretly, alone.
Brak. What one, my lord?
Glo. Her husband, knave:—Wouldst thou betray me?
Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me; and,
withal,

Forbear your conference with the noble duke. [ohey.
Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will
Glo. We are the queen's subjects, and must obey.
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
And whatsoever you will employ me in,—
Were it to call King Edward's widow—sister,—
I will perform it to enfranchise you.
Meantime, this deep disgrace in brotherhood
Touches me deeper than you can imagine.
Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.
Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you:
Meantime, have patience.

Clar. I must performe; farewell.
[Exeunt Clarence, Brakenbury, and Guards.
Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return,
Simple, plain Clarence!—I do love thee so,
That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,
If heaven will take the present at our hands.
But who comes here? the new deliver'd Hastings?

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!
Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!
Well are you welcome to this open air.
How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?
Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:
But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks,
That were the cause of my imprisonment.
Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;
For they, that were your enemies, are his.
And have prevail'd as much on him, as you.
Hast. More pity, that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and huzzards prey at liberty.
Glo. What news abroad?
Hast. No news so bad abroad, as this at home;
The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy,
And his physicians fear him mightily.
Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is had indeed.
O, he hath kept an evil diet long,
And over-much consumed his royal person;
Tis very grievous to be thought upon.
What, is he in his bed?

Hast. He is.
Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit Hastings.
He cannot live, I hope; and must not die,
Till George be pack'd with posthorns up to heaven.
I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies well steed' with weighty arguments;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live;
Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in!
For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter;
What though I kill'd her husband, and her father?
The readiest way to make the wench amends,
Is—to become her husband and her father:
The which will I; not all so much for love,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her, which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to market;
Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns;
When they are gone, then I must count my gains.

SCENE II.—The same. Another Street.

Enter the corpse of KING HENRY THE SIXTH, borne in an open coffin. Gentlemen bearing halberds, to guard it; and LADY ANNE as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,—
If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,—

Whilst I a while obscuroously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.—
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!
Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,
Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds
Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life,
I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—
O, cursed be the hand that made these holes!
Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it!
Cursed the blood, that led this blood from hence!
More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
That makes us wretched by the death of thee,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!
If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
Whose ugly and unnatural aspect
May fright the hopeful mother at the view;
And that he heir to his unhappiness!
If ever he have wife, let her be made
More miserably by the death of him,
Than I am made by my young lord, and thee!—
Come, now, toward Chertsey with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's to be interred there;
And, still as you are weary of the weight,
Rest you, while I lament King Henry's corpse.

[The bearers take up the corpse, and advance

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corpse, and set it down.
Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds?
Glo. Villains, set down the corpse; or, by St Paul,
I'll make a corpse of him that disobeys.
I Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.
Glo. Unmanner'd dog! stand thou when I com-
Advance thy halber higher than my breast, [mand
Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,
And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The bearers set down the coffin.]

Anne. What, do you tremble? are you all afraid?
Alas, I blame you not, for you are mortal,
And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—
Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell!
Thou hadst but power over his mortal body,
His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.
Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curs'd.
Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell,
Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deep exclams.
If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this pattern of thy butcheries:—
O gentlemen, see, see! dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells;
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,
Provokes this deluge most unnatural.—
O God, which this blood maketh, revenge his death!
O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death!
Either, heaven, with lightning strike the murderer
dead,

Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick;
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd!
Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,
Which renders good for had, blessings for curses.
Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man;
No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.
Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.
Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth!
Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry.—
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.
Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.
Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, still he have Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Foulter than heart can think thee, thou canst
No excuse current, but to hang thyself. [noise
Glo. By such despair, I should excuse myself.
Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excused,
For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.
Glo. Say, that I slew them not?

Anne. Why then, they are not dead :
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.
Glo. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.
Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.
Anne. In thy soul's throat thou liest; Queen
Margaret saw

Thy murderous faulchion smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst hold against her breast,
But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,
That never dreamt on aught but hutcheries:
Didst thou not kill this kiug?

Glo. I grant ye.
Anne. Dost grant me, hedge-hog? then, God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed!
O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him.
Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glo. Let him thank me, that bolp to send him
For he was fitter for that place than earth. [thither]

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.
Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name it.

Anne. Some dungeon.
Glo. Your hed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest!
Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.
Glo. I know so.—But, gentle lady Anne,—

To leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fall somewhat into a slower method,—
Is not the cause of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,
As blameful as the executioner?

Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accursed effect.
Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect;

Your beauty, which did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's
You should not blemish it, if I stood by; [wreck]
As all the world is cheered by the sun,
So I by that; it is my day, my life!

Anne. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death thy Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art both.

Anne. I would I were, to be revenged on thee.
Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,

To be revenged on him that loveth thee.
Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,

To be revenged on him that kill'd my husband.
Glo. He that hereth thee, lady, of thy husband,

Did it to help thee to a better husband.
Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.

Glo. He lives, that loves you better than he could.
Anne. Name him.

Glo. Plantagenet.
Anne. Why, that was he.

Glo. The self-same name, hut one of better nature.
Anne. Where is he?

Glo. Here: (she spits at him.) Why dost thou spit at me?

Anne. 'Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!
Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.

Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.

Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!

Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once;
For now they kill me with a living death.

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sbamed their aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear,—

Not, when my father York and Edward wept,
To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,
When black-faced Clifford shook his sword at him;

Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
And twenty times made pause, to sob and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,
Like trees bedash'd with rain: in that sad time,
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,
Thy beauty hath, and made them hind with weeping.
I never sued to friend nor enemy;
My tongue could never learn sweet soothing word;
But now thy beauty is proposed my fee,
My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speak.
(She looks scornfully at him.)

Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made
For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,
And let the soul forth that adoreth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.
(He lays his breast open; she offers at it with his sword.)

Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry;—
But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me.

Nay, now despitch; 'twas I that stab'd young Edward;— (She again offers at his breast.)

But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on.
(She falls the sword.)

Take up the sword again, or take up me.
Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death,
I will not be thy executioner.

Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.
Anne. I have already.

Glo. 'Twas in thy rage:
Speak it again, and, even with the word,
'Tis hand, which, for thy love, did kill thy love,
Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love:
To both their deaths shall that be necessary.

Anne. I would I knew thy heart.
Glo. 'Tis figured in My tongue.

Anne. I fear me, both are false.
Glo. Then man

Was never true.
Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.

Glo. Say then, my peace is made.
Anne. That shall you know
Hereafter.

Glo. Bnt shall I live in hope?
Anne. All men,
I hope, live so.

Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.
Anne. To take, is not to give.
(She puts on the ring.)

Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger,
Even so thy breast enclouseth my poor heart;

Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy poor devoted servant may

But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.

Anne. What is it?
Glo. That it may please you, leave these sad designs

To him: that hath more cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby-place:

Where—after I have solemnly inter'd,
At Chertsey monast'ry, this noble king,
Aod wet his grave with my repentant tears,—
I will with all expedient duty see you:

For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this boon.

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me too,
To see you are become so penitent.—
Tressel and Berkley, go along with me.

Glo. Bid me farewell.
Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve:

But, since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.

[Exeunt Lady Anne, Tressel, and Berkley.
Glo. Take up the corpse, sirs.

Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?
Glo. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming.

[Exeunt the rest, with the corpse.
Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?

Was ever woman in this humour won?
I'll have her,—but I will not keep her long.

What! I, that kill'd her husband, and his father,
To take her in her heart's extremest hate;
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
The bleeding witness of her hatred by;

With God, her conscience, and these bars against me,
And I no friends to back my suit withal,
But the plain devil, and dissembling looks,
And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing!

Ha! Hath she forgot already that brave prince,
Edward, her lord, whom I some three months since,
Stab'd in a lover's mood at Tewksbury?
A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—
Framed in the prodigality of nature,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—
The spacious world cannot again afford:
And will she yet abuse her eyes on me,
That clogg'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?

On me, that halt, and am misshapen thus?
 My dukedom to a beggarly denier,
 I do mistake my person all this while:
 Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
 Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
 I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
 And entertain a score or two of tailors,
 To study fashions to adorn my body:
 Since I am crept in favour with myself,
 I will maintain it with some little cost.
 But, first, I'll turn you fellow in his grave;
 And then return lamenting to my love.—
 Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
 That I may see my shadow as I pass.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—*The same. A Room in the Palace.*Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, LORD RIVERS, and LORD GREY.

Riv. Have patience, madam; there's no doubt, his majesty

Will soon recover his accustomed health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
 Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
 And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide of me?

Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord.

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Grey. The Heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,
 To be your comforter when he is gone.

Q. Eliz. Ah, he is young; and his minority

Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster,
 A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. Is it concluded he shall be protector?

Q. Eliz. It is determined, not concluded yet:
 But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and STANLEY.

Grey. Here comes the Lords of Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The countess Richmond, good my lord of Stanley,

To your good prayer, will scarcely say—amen.

Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,

And loves not me, be you, good lord, assured,
 I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe

The envious slanders of her false accusers;

Or, if she be accused on true report,

Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds

From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I,

Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully. [him?]

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement

Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers,

And between them and my lord chamberlain;

And sent to warn them to his royal presence. [be:]

Q. Eliz. 'Would all were well!—But that will never

I fear, our happiness is at the height.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and DORSET.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:—

Who are they, that complain unto the king,

That I forsooth, am stern, and love them not?

By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly,

That fill his ears with such dissention rumours,

Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,

Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,

Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,

I must be held a rancorous enemy.

Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,

But thus his simple truth must be abused

By sliken, sly, insinuating Jacks?

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your grace?

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.

When have I injured thee? when do thee wrong?—

Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?

A plague upon you all! His royal grace,—

Whom God preserve better than you would wish!—

Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing-while,

But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the matter:

The king, of his own royal disposition,

And not provoked by any suitor else;
 Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
 That in your outward action shews itself,
 Against my children, brothers, and myself,
 Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather
 The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell;—The world is grown so had,
 That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch:
 Since every Jack became a gentleman,
 There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster;

You envy my advancement, and my friends;
 God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you:
 Our brother is imprison'd by your means,

Myself disgraced, and the nobility
 Held in contempt; while great promotions

Are daily given, to enoble those

That scarce, some two days since, were worth a nobl-

Q. Eliz. By Him, that raised me to this careful height

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,

I never did incense his majesty

Against the duke of Clarence, but have been

An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My lord, you do me shameful injury,

Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the cause

Of my lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord; for— [so?]

Q. Eliz. She may, lord Rivers?—why, who knows not

She may do more, sir, than denying that:

She may help you to many fair preferences;

And then deny her aiding hand therein,

And lay those honours on your high desert.

What may she not? She may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Riv. What, marry, may she?

Glo. What marry, may she? marry with a king,

A bachelor, a handsome stripping too:

I wis, your grandam had a worse match.

Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne

Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs:

By Heaven, I will acquaint his majesty,

Of those gross taunts I often have endured.

I had rather be a country servant-maid,

Than a great queen, with this condition—

To be so baited, scorn'd, and storm'd at as Small joy have I in being England's queen.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, behind.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech thee!

Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me.

Glo. What? threaten you me with telling of the king?

Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said

I will avouch, in presence of the king:

I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.

'Tis time to speak, my pains are quite forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember thee too well:

Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,

And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury.

Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,

I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;

A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends;

To royalize his blood, I spill mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or thine

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband Grey,

Were factious for the house of Lancaster;—

And, Rivers, so were you:—Was not your husband

In Margaret's battle at Saint Alban's slain?

Let me put in your minds, if you forget,

What you have been ere now, and what you are;

Withal, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A murd'rous villain, and so still thou art.

Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,

Ay, and forswore himself,—Which Jesu pardon!—

Q. Mar. Which God revenge!

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the crown;

And, for his meed, poor lord, he is mew'd up:

I would to God, my heart were flint like Edward's,

Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine;

I am too childish-foolish for this world. [world,]

Q. Mar. Hee thee to hell for shame, and leave this

Thou cacodæmon! there thy kingdom is

Thou lord of Gloster, in those busy days,

Which here you urge, to prove us enemies,

We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king;

So should we you, if you should be our king.

Glo. If I should he?—I had rather be a pedlar

Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof!

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose you should enjoy, were you this country's king; As little joy you may suppose in me,

That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof; For I am she, and altogether joyless.

I can no longer hold me patient.—

(Advancing.)

Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out

In sharing that which you have pill'd from me?

Which of you trembles not, that looks on me?

If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects;

Yet that, by you deposed, you quake like rebels?—

Ah, gentle villain, do not turn away!

Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what maketh thou in my sight?

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd;

That wilt I make, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death?

Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banish-

Than death can yield me here by my abode.

A husband, and a son, thou owest to me,—

And thou, a kingdom;—all of you, allegiance:

This sorrow that I have, by right is yours;

And all the pleasures you usurp, are mine.

Glo. The curse your noble father laid on thee,—

When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper,

And with thy scorn'd dews't rivers from his eyes;

And then, to dry them, gavest the duke a clout,

Steep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland;—

His curses, then from bitterness of soul

Denounced against thee, are all fallen upon thee;

And God, not we, hath plagued thy bloody deed.

Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O 'twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,

And the most merciless, that e'er was heard of.

Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dors. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.

Q. Mar. What! were you snarling all, before I came,

Ready to catch each other by the throat,

And turn you all your hatred now on me?

Did York's dread curse prevail so much with Heaven,

That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,

Their kingdom's loss, my woful banishment,

Could all but answer for that peevish brot?

Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven?—

Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses!—

Though not by war, by surfeit die your king,

As ours by murder, to make him a king!

Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,

For Edward, my son, that was prince of Wales,

Die in his youth, by like untimely violence!

Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,

Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self!

Long may'st thou live, to wail thy children's loss;

And see another, as I see thee now,

Dock'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine!

Long die thy happy days before thy death;

And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,

Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!—

Rivers,—and Dorset,—you were standers by,—

And so wast thou, lord Hastings,—when my son

Was stab'd with bloody daggers; God, I pray him,

That none of you may live your natural age,

But by some unlook'd accident cut off!

Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd hag.

Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.

If Heaven have any grievous plague in store,

Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,

O let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe,

And then hurl down their indignation

On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!

The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul!

Thy friends suspect for traitors whilst thou livest,

And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!

No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,

Unless it be while some tormenting dream

Afrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!

Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog!

Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity

The slave of nature, and the son of hell!

Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!

Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!

Thou rag of honour! thou detested—

Glo. Margaret.

Q. Mar. Richard!

Glo. Ha?

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy then; for I did think,

That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.

Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply.

O let me make the period to my curse.

Glo. 'Tis done by me; and ends in—Margaret.

Q. Eliz. Thus have you breathed your curse against yourself.

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune!

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,

Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about?

Fool, fool! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself.

The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me

To help thee curse this poisonous bunch-back'd toad.

Hast. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse

Lest, to thy harm, thou more our patience.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all moved mine.

Riv. Were you well served, you would be taught

Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty.

Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:

O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty.

Dor. Dispute not with her, she is lunatic.

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are malapert:

Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current:

O, that your young nobility could judge

What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable!

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry; learn it, marquis.

Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more: But I was born so high,

Our airy buildeth in the cedar's top.

And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade;—alas! alas!—

Witness my son, now in the shade of death;

Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest—

O God, that see'st it, do not suffer it;

As it was won with blood, lost he it so!

Buck. Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.

Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me;

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,

And shamefully by you my hopes are hutch'd.

My charity is outrage, life my shame,—

And in my shame still live my sorrow's rage!

Buck. Have done, have done.

Q. Mar. O princely Buckingham, I kiss thy hand,

In sign of league and amity with thee:

Now fair befall thee, and thy noble house!

Thy garments are not spotted with our blood,

Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor on one here; for curses never pass

The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I'll not believe but they ascend the sky,

And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace.

O Buckingham, beware of yonder dog;

Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,

His venom tooth will rankle to the death:

Have not to do with him, beware of him;

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks on him;

And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.

Q. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentleness

And soothe the devil that I warn thee from? [counsel]

O, but remember this another day,

When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow;

And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess.—

Live each of you the subjects to his hate,

And he to yours, and all of you to God's!

[Exit.]

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curse.

Riv. And so doth mine; I muse, why she's at liberty.

Glo. I cannot blame her, by God's holy mother;

She hath had too much wrong, and I repeat

My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.

Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,

That is too cold in thinking of it now.

Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;

He is frank'd up to fating for his pains;—

God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a christian-like conclusion,

To pray for them that have done scath to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well advised;—

For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself. [Aside.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,—

And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come.—Lords, will you go with

Riv. Madam, we will attend upon your grace. [me?]

[Exeunt all but Gloster]

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.

The secret mischiefs that I set abroad,

I lay unto the grievous charge of others.
 Clarence — whom I, indeed, have laid in darkness —
 I do bewep to many simple gulls;
 Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;
 And tell them — 'tis the queen and her allies,
 That stir the king against the duke my brother.
 Now they believe it; and withal whet me
 To be revenged on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
 But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,
 Tell them — that God bids us do good for evil:
 And thus I clothe my naked villainy
 With old odd ends, stolen forth of holy writ;
 And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But soft, here come my executioners. —
 How now, my hardy, stout-resolv'd mates?
 Are you now going to despatch this thing?
 I Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the
 That we may be admitted where he is. [warrant,
Glo. Well thought upon, I have it here about me:

(Gives the Warrant.)

When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.
 But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,
 Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;
 For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,
 May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.
 I Murd. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate,
 Talkers are no good doers; he assured,
 We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Glo. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools' eyes drop tears:

I like you, lads; — about your business straight;
 Go, go, despatch.

I Murd. We will, my noble lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. — The same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter CLARENCE and BRAKENBURY.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
 So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
 That, as I am a christian faithful man,
 I would not spend another such a night,
 Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days;
 So full of dismal terror was the time. [tell me.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you,
Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,
 And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;

And, in my company, my brother Gloucester:
 Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
 Upon the hatches; thence we look'd toward England,
 And cited up a thousand heavy times,
 During the wars of York and Lancaster,
 That had befallen us. As we paced along
 Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
 Methought, that Gloucester stumbled; and, in falling,
 Struck me, that thought to stay him, over-board,
 Into the tumbling billows of the main.

O Lord! methought, what pain it was to drown!
 What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
 What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
 Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
 A thousand men, that fishes gnaw'd upon;
 Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
 Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
 All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea,

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and, in those holes
 Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
 (As 'twere in scorn of eyes,) reflecting gems,
 That wou'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
 And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.
Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of death,
 To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?

Clar. Methought I had; and often did I strive
 To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
 Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
 To seek the empty, vast, and wand'ring air;
 But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
 Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awaked you not with this sore agony?
Clar. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;
 O, then began the tempest to my soul!

I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
 With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
 Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
 The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
 Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;
 Who cried aloud, — What scoundrel for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?
 And so he vanish'd: Then came wand'ring by
 A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
 Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud, —

Clarence is come, — false, fleeting, perjured Clarence, —
That stabb'd me in the field by Tewksbury: —
Seize on him, furies, take him to your torments! —
 With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
 Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears,
 Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
 I trembling waked, and, for a season after,
 Could not believe but that I was in hell;
 Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No marvel, lord, though it affrighted you;
 I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O, Brakenbury, I have done these things, —
 That now give evidence against my soul, —
 For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites me! —
 O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
 But thou wilt be avenged on my misdeeds,
 Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:
 O, spare my guiltless wife, and my poor children! —
 I pray thee, gentle keeper, stay by me;
 My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

Brak. I will, my lord; God give your grace good rest! — (Clarence reposes himself on a chair.)
 Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours,
 Makes the night morning, and the noon-time night.
 Princes have but their titles for their glories,
 An outward honour for an inward toil;
 And, for unfelt imaginations,
 They often feel a world of restless cares:
 So that, between their titles, and low name,
 There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the two Murderers.

I Murd. Ho! who's here?
Brak. What wouldst thou, fellow? and how earnest thou hither?

I Murd. I would speak with Clarence, and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What, so brief?
 2 Murd. O, sir, 'tis better to be brief than tedious: —
 Let him see our commission; talk no more.

(A paper is delivered to Brakenbury, who reads it.)

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
 The noble duke of Clarence to your hands: —
 I will not reason what is meant hereby,
 Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.
 Here are the keys; — there sits the duke asleep:
 I'll to the king; and signify to him,
 That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

I Murd. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom:
 Fare you well. [Exit Brakenbury.]

2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?
 I Murd. No; he'll say, 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake until the great judgment day.

I Murd. Why, then, he'll say, we stabb'd him sleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgment, hath bred a kind of remorse in me.

I Murd. What? art thou afraid?
 2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it, but to be damn'd for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.

I Murd. I thought thou hadst been resolute.
 2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

I Murd. I'll back to the duke of Gloucester, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I prythee, stay a little: I hope this holy humour of mine will change; it was wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty.

I Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?
 2 Murd. Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are set within me.

I Murd. Remember our reward when the deed's done.

2 Murd. Come, he dies; I had forgot the reward.
 I Murd. Where's thy conscience now?

2 Murd. In the duke of Gloucester's purse.
 I Murd. So, when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.

2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go; there's few or none will entertain it.

I Murd. What, if it come to thee again?
 2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it, it is a dangerous thing, it makes a man a coward; a man cannot stab, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him. 'Tis a blushing shame-faced spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills one full of obstacles; it made me once restore a purse of gold, that by chance I found; it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man that means to live well, endeavours to trust to himself, and live without it.

1 Murd. 'Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.

2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh.

1 Murd. I am strong-framed, he cannot prevail with 2 Murd. Spoke like a fall fellow, that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work.

1 Murd. Take him over the costard with the hilt of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-butt, in the next room.

2 Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of him.

1 Murd. Soft! he wakes.

2 Murd. Strike.

1 Murd. No, we'll reason with him.

Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine.

1 Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, anon.

Clar. In God's name, what art thou?

1 Murd. A man, as you are,

Clar. But not, as I am, roval.

1 Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.

Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble. [own.]

1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine

Clar. How darkly, and how d-dadly dost thou speak!

Your eyes do menace me: Why look you pale?

Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

Both Murd. To, to, to,— Clar. To murder me?

Both Murd. Ay, ay.

Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so.

And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.

Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?

1 Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.

Clar. I shall be reconciled to him again.

2 Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die.

Clar. Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,

To slay the innocent? what is my offence?

Where is the evidence that doth accuse me?

What lawful quest have given their verdict up

Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounced

The bitter sentence of poor Clarence's death?

Before I be convict by course of law,

To threaten me with death is most unlawful.

I charge you, as you hope for any goodness,

By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins,

That you depart, and lay no hands on me;

The deed you undertake is damnable.

1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command.

2 Murd. And he that hath commanded, is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassal! the great King of kings

Hath in the table of his law commanded,

That thou shalt do no murder: Wilt thou then

Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,

To hurl upon their heads that break his law. [thee.]

2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on

For false forswearing, and for murder too:

Thou didst receive the sacrament, to fight

In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God,

Didst break that vow; and with thy trecherous blade

Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.

2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend. [to us.]

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law

When thou hast broke it in such dire degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?

For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:

He sends you not to murder me for this;

For in that sin he is as deep as I.

If God will be avenged for the deed,

O, know you, that he doth it publicly;

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;

He needs no indirect nor lawless course,

To cut off those that have offended him.

1 Murd. Who made thee then a bloody minister,

When gallant-springing, brave Plantagenet,

That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?

Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.

1 Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy fault,

Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee.

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;

I am his brother, and I love him well.

If you are hired for meed, go back again,

And I will send you to my brother Gloucester;

Who shall reward you better for my life,

Than Edward will for tidings of my death. [Hates you]

2 Murd. You are deceived, your brother Gloucester

Clar. O, no: he loves me, and he holds me dear:
Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Ay, so we will.

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York

Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,

And charged us from his soul to love each other,

He little thought of this divided friendship:

Bid Gloucester think on this, and he will weep.

1 Murd. Ay, mill-stones; as he less'n'd us to weep.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.

1 Murd. Right, as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself;

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

Clar. It cannot be; for he bewept my fortune,

And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sighs,

That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you

From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heaven.

2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die,

my lord.

Clar. Hast thou that holy feeling in thy soul,

To counsel me to make my peace with God,

And art thou set to the awn soul so blind,

That thou wilt war with God, by murdering me?—

Ah, sirs, consider, he, that set you on

To do this deed, will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Cla. Relent, and save your souls.

1 Murd. Relent! 'tis cowardly and womanish.

Clar. Not to relent, is heastly, savage, devilish.—

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,

Being pent from liberty, as I am now,—

If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,—

Would not entreat for life?

My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;

O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,

As you would beg, were you in my distress.

A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

1 Murd. Take that, and that; if all this will not do,

[Stabs him.]

I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within.

[Exit, with the body.]

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately despatch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands

Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter first Murderer.

1 Murd. How now? what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not? [been.]

By Heaven, the duke shall know how slack you have

2 Murd. I would he knew, that I had saved his brother!

Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;

For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit.]

1 Murd. So do not I; go, coward, as thou art.—

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,

Till that the duke give order for his burial:

And when I have my meed, I will away;

For this will out, and then I must not stay. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING EDWARD, (led in sick,) QUEEN ELIZABETH, DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKINGHAM, GREY and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:—now have I done a good day's work:—

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;

And more in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Rivers, and Hastings, take each other's hand;

Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love. [Hates:]

Riv. By Heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!

K. Edw. Take heed, you dally not before your King;

Lest he, that is the supreme King of kings,

Confound your hidden falsehood, and award

Each of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,—

Nor your son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you;

You have been factious one against the other.

Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;

And what you do, do it unfeign'dly.

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings;— I will never more remember
Our former hatred, So thrive I, and mine!

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him,—Hastings, love lord marquis.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I. (Embraces Dorset.)
K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league

With thy embracements to my wife's allies,
And make me happy in your unity.

Buck Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, (to the Queen) but with all duteous
Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me [love
With hate in those where I expect most love!
When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assur'd that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me! This do I beg of Heaven,
When I am cold in love to you or yours.

(Embracing Rivers, &c.)
K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.
There wanteth now our brother Gloucester here,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king and queen;
And, princely peers, a happy time of day!

K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day!—
Brother, we have done deeds of charity;
Made peace of amity, fair love of hate,
Between these swelling wrong-incens'd peers.

Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign liege,—
Among this princely heap, if any here,
By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,
Hold me a foe—

If I unwittingly, or in my rage,
Have aught committed that is hardly borne
By any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me, to be at enmity;
I hate it, and desire all good men's love.—
First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my duteous service;—
Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us;—

Of you, lord Rivers,—and lord Grey, of you,—
That all without desert have frown'd on me;
Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all,
I do not know that Englishman alive,

With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to night;
I thank my God for my humility.

Q. Eliz. A holy-day shall this be kept hereafter:—
I would to God, all strifes were well compounded.—
My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glo. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead?

(They all start.)

You do him injury, to scorn his corpse.
K. Edw. Who knows not, he is dead? who knows he is?

Q. Eliz. All-seeing Heaven, what a world is this!
Buck. Look I so pale, lord Dorset, as the rest?

Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence.
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.

K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was reversed.
Glo. But he, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;

Some tardy cripple bore the couriers' mand,
That came too lag so see him buried:—
God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from suspicion!

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!
K. Edw. I pray thee, peace; my soul is full of sorrow.

Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.
K. Edw. Then say at once, what is it thou request'st.

Stan. The forfeit sovereignty of my servant's life,
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolk.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's
death,
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?

My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,
Kneel'd at my feet, and bade me his aviser?

Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?
Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake

The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?
Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury?

When Oxford had me down, he rescued me,
And said, Dear brother, live, and be a king!

Who told me, when we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me

Even in his garment; and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numh-cold night?

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my mind.
But, when your carters, or your waiting-vassals,

Have done a drunken slaughter, and defaced
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,

You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon;
And I, unjustly too, must grant it you:—

But for my brother, no a man would speak,—
Nor I (ungracious) speak unto myself.

For him, poor soul.—The proudest of you all
Have been beholden to him in his life;

Yet none of you would once plead for his life.—
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold

On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—
Come, Hastings, help me to my closet. O,

Poor Clarence!

(Exeunt King, Queen, Hastings, Rivers, Dorset, and Grey.)

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness!—Mark'd you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen

Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death?
O, they did urge it still unto the king:

To comfort Edward with our company?
Buck. We wait upon your grace. (Exeunt.)

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter the Duchess of YORK, with a Son and Daughter of CLARENCE.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?

Duch. No, boy.

Daugh. Why do you weep so oft? and beat your breast;

And cry—O Clarence, my unhappy son!

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us—orphans, wretches, cast-aways,

If that our noble father be alive?
Duch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me both;

I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father's death;

It were lost sorrow, to wail one that is lost.
Son. Then, grandam, you conclude that he is dead.

The king my uncle is to blame for this:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune

With earnest prayers all to that effect.
Daugh. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well;

Incappable and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caused your father's death.

Son. Grandam, we can: for my good uncle Gloucester
Told me, the king, provok'd to't by the queen,

Devised impeachments to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he wept,

And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek,
Hade me rely on him, as on my father,

And he would love me dearly as his child.
Duch. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,

And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!
He is my son, ay, and therein my shame,

Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.
Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble, grandam?

Duch. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, distractedly; RIVERS and DORSET following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep
To chide my fortune, and torment myself?

I'll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude impatience?
Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence,—

Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead—
Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?

Why wither not the leaves, that want their sap?
If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;

That our swift-winged soul may catch the king's ;
Or, like obedient subjects, follow him
To his new kingdom of perpetual rest

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow,
As I bad title in thy noble husband !
I have wept a worthy husband's death,
And lived by looking on his images :
But now, two mirrors of his princely senlance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant blame ;
And I for comfort have but one false glass,
That grieves me when I see my shame in him.
Thou art a widow ; yet thou art a mother,
And hast the comfort of thy children left thee :
But death hath snatch'd my husband from my arms,
And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence and Edward. O what cause have I,
(Thine being but a moiety of my grief,)
To over-go thy plaints, and drown thy cries ?

Son. Ah, aunt ! you wept not for our father's death ;
How can we aid you with our kindred tears ?

Daugh. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,
Your widow-dolour likewise be unwept !

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth lamentations ;
All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,
May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world !
Ah, for my husband, for my dear lord Edward !

Chil. Ah, for our father, for our dear lord Clarence.
Duch. Alas, for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence !

Q. Eliz. What stay had I, but Edward ? and he's Chil. What stay had we, but Clarence ? and he's gone.

Duch. What stays had I, but they ? and they are
Q. Eliz. Was never widow had so dear a loss.
Chil. Were never orphans had so dear a loss.

Duch. Was never mother had so dear a loss.

Alas ! I am the mother of these griefs ;
Their woes are parcel'd, mine are general.
She for an Edward weeps, and so do I ;
I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she :
These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I ;
I for an Edward weep, so do not they :—
Alas ! you three, on me, threefold distress'd,
Pour all your tears, I am your sorrow's nurse,
And I will pamper it with lamentations.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother ; God is much displeas'd,
That you take with unthankfulness his doing ;
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent ;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heaven,
For it requires the royal debt it lent you.
Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,
Of the young prince your son : send straight for him,
Let him be crown'd ; in him your comfort lives ;
Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,
And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY,
HASTINGS, RATCLIFF, and others.

Glo. Sister, have comfort : all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star ;
But none can cure their harms by wailing them.—
Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy,
I did not see your grace :—Humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing.

Duch. God bless thee ; and put meekness in thy breast,
Love, charity, obedience, and true duty !

Glo. Amen ; and make me die a good old man :—
That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing ;
I marvel, that her grace did leave it out. (Aside.)

Buck. You cloudy princes, and heart-sorrowing peers,
That hear this mutual heavy load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love ;
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swoll'n hearts,
But lately splinted, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserved, cherish'd, and kept ;
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd
Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Riv. Why with some little train, my lord of Buckingham ?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new heal'd wound of malice should break out ;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet ungovern'd ;
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,

As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.
Glo. I hope, the king made peace with all of us ;
And the compact is firm and true in me.

Riv. And so in me ; and so, I think, in all :
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which, haply, by much company, might be urg'd :
Therefore I say, with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.
Glo. Then be it so ; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.
Madam,—and you, my mother,—will you go
To give your censures in this weighty business ?

[Exeunt all but Buckingham and Gloster.]

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two stay at home ;
For, by the way, I'll sort occasion,
As I need to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsellor's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet !—My dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.
Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good morrow, neighbour : Whither away so
2 Cit. I promise you, I scarcely know myself : [Fast ?
Hear you the news abroad ? Yes ; the king's dead.

2 Cit. Ill news, by 'r lady ; seldom comes the better :
I fear, I fear, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3 Cit. Neighbour, God speed !

1 Cit. Give you good morrow, sir.
3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good King Edward's
death ?

2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true ; God help, the while !

3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous world,
1 Cit. No, no ; by God's good grace, his son shall reign.

3 Cit. Wo to that land, that's govern'd by a child !

2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government ;
That, in his nonage, council under him,
And, in his full and ripen'd years, himself,
No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.

1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth
Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

3 Cit. Stood the state so ? no, no, good friends, God
For then this land was famously enrich'd ;
With politic grave counsel ; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. [mother

1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and

3 Cit. Better it were, they all came by his father ;

Or, by his father, there were none at all ;

For emulation now, who shall be nearest,
Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.

O, full of danger is the duke of Gloster ;
And the queen's sons and brothers haught and proud ;
And were they to be ruled, and not to rule,
This sickly land might sooner be before.

1 Cit. Come, come, we fear the worst ; all will be well.
3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their cloaks ;

When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand ;

When the sun sets, who doth not look for night ?

Untimely storms make men expect a death :

All may be well ; but, if God sort it so,

'Tis more than we deserve, or I expect.

2 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear :

You cannot reason almost with a man
That looks not heavily, and full of dread.

3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so :

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust
Ensuing danger ; as, by proof, we see

The water swell before a boist'rous storm.
But leave it all to God. Whither away ?

2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.

3 Cit. And so was I ; I'll bear you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, the Young DUKE OF YORK, QUEEN ELIZABETH, and the DUCHESS OF YORK.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Stratand at Northampton they do rest to-night : [ford ;
To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the prince ;
I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no ; they say, my son of York
Hath almost overtaken him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin ? it is good to grow.

York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper,
My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More than my brother : Ay, quoth my uncle Gloucester,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace :
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste.

Duch. 'Good faith, 'good faith, the saying did not
In him that did object the same to thee : [hold
He was the wretchedest thing, when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Duch. I hope, he is ; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd,
I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth, nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York ? I pry'thee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say, my uncle grew so fast,

That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old ;

'Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I pry'thee, pretty York, who told thee this ?

York. Grandam, his nurse. [born.

Duch. His nurse ! why, she was dead ere thou wast

York. If 'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy : Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger :

What news ?

Mess. Such news, my lord,
As grieves me to unfold.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince ?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news ?

Mess. Lord Rivers, and lord Grey, are sent to Pom-

With them Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners. [fret,

Duch. Who hath committed them ?

Mess. The mighty dukes,

Gloster and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence ?

Mess. The sum of all I can, I have disclosed ;

Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,

Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me, I see the ruin of my house !

The tiger now hath seized the gentle hind ;

Insulting tyrrany begins to jut

Upon the innocent and aweless throne :—

Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre !

I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days !

How many of you have mine eyes beheld ?

My husband lost his life to get the crown ;

And often up and down my sons were tost,

For me to joy and weep their gain and loss ;

And being seated, and domestic broils

Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors,

Make war upon themselves ; brother to brother

Blood to blood, self 'gainst self :—O, preposterous

And frantic courage, end thy damned spleen

Or let me die, to look on death no more !

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy, we will to sanctuary.—

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lads, go,

And thither hear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep ; and so betide to me,

As well I tender you, and all of yours !

Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street.

The trumpets sound. Enter the PRINCE OF WALES, GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, CARDINAL BOURCHIER, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign ;
The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle ; but our crosses on the way
Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy :
I want more uncles here to welcome me.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years
Hath not yet dived into the world's deceit :
No more can you distinguish of a man,
Than of his outward show ; which, God he knows,
Seldom, or never, jumpeth with the heart.
Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous ;
Your grace attended to the sugar'd words,
But look'd not on the poison of their hearts :

God keep you from them, and from such false friends !
Prince. God keep me from false friends ! but they were none.

Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.

Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days !

Prince. I thank you, good my lord ;—and thank you all.— [Exeunt Mayor, &c.

I thought my mother, and my brother York,
Would long ere this have met us on the way :

For, what a slug is Hastings ! that he comes not

To tell us, whether they will come or no.

Enter HASTINGS.

Buck. And in good time, here comes the sweating
lord.

Prince. Welcome, my lord : What, will our mother
Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I,

The queen your mother, and your brother York,

Have taken sanctuary : The tender prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace,

But by his mother was perforce withheld.

Buck. For what an indirect and peevish course

Is this of hers ?—Lord cardinal, will your grace

Persuade the queen to send the duke of York

Unto his princely brother presently ?

If she deny,—lord Hastings, go with him,

And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.

Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory

Can from his mother win the duke of York,

Anon expect him here : But if she be obdurate

To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege

Of blessed sanctuary ! not for all this land,

Would I be guilty of so deep a sin.

Buck. You are too senseless-obstinate, my lord,

Too ceremonious and traditional :

Weight it but with the grossness of this age,

You break not sanctuary in seizing him.

The benefit thereof is always granted

To those whose dealings have deserved the place,

And those who have the wit to claim the place :

This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserved it ;

And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it :

Then, taking him from thence, that is not there,

You break no privilege nor charter there.

Of these I heard of sanctuary men ;

But sanctuary children ne'er till now.

Card. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for once.—

Come on, lord Hastings, will you go with me ?

Hast. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may. [Exeunt Cardinal and Hastings

Say, uncle Gloucester, if our brother come,

Where shall we sojourn till our coronation ?

Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self.

If I may counsel you, some day, or two,

Your highness shall repose you at the Tower :

Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit

For your best health and recreation.

Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place :—

Did Julius Cæsar build that place, my lord ?

Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place ;

Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.

Prince. Is it upon record ? or else reported

Successively from age to age he built it ?

Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

Prince. But say, my lord, it were not register'd ;

Methinks, the truth shall live from age to age,

As 'twere retail'd to all posterity,

Even to the general all-ending day.

Glo. So wise so young, they say, do ne'er live long.

Prince. What say you, uncle ?

Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives long.

Thus, like the formal vice, iniquity,

I moralize two meanings in one word. } (Aside.)

Prince. That Julius Cæsar was a famous man ;

With what his valour did enrich his wit,

His wit set down to make his valour live :
Death makes no conquest of this conqueror ;
For now he lives in fame, though not in life ;
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham.

Buck. What, my gracious lord ?

Prince. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or die a soldier, as I lived a king.

Glo. Short summers lightly have a forward spring.

(Aside.)

Enter YORK, HASTINGS, and the CARDINAL.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the duke of York.

Prince. Richard of York ! how fares our loving York. Well, my dread lord ; so must I call you now.

Prince. Ay, brother ; to our grief, as it is yours ;
Too late he died, that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty.

Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York ?

York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O, my lord,
You said, that idle weeds are fast in growth ;
The prince, my brother, hath outgrown me far.

Glo. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle ?

Glo. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then is he more beholden to you than I.

Glo. He may command me as my sovereign ;
But you have power in me, as in a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, then, give me this dagger.

Glo. My dagger, little cousin ? with all my heart.

Prince. A beggar, brother ?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give ;
And, being but a toy, which is no grief to give ;
Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.

York. A greater gift ! O, that's the sword to it !

Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.

York. O then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts ;
In weightier things you'll say a beggar, nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord ?

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.

Glo. How ?

York. Little.

Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk ;—
Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

York. You mean, to bear me, not to hear with me ;—
Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me ;
Because that I am little, like an ape,

He thinks that you should hear me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharp-provid'd wit he reasons !
To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himself ;
So cunning, and so young, is wonderful.

Glo. My gracious lord, will 't please you, pass along ?

Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham,

Will to your mother ; to entreat of her,

To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. What, will you go unto the Tower, my lord ?

Prince. My lord protector needs will bave it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, sir, what should you fear ?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence's angry ghost ;
My grandam told me he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. An if they live, I hope, I need not fear.

But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart,
Thinking on the good I lost in the Tower.

[Exeunt Prince, York, Hastings, Cardinal,

and Attendants.]

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York
Was not incens'd by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously ?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt : O, 'tis a parlous boy ;
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable ;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest ;—

Come hither, gentle Catesby ; thou art worn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart ;
Thou know'st our reasons urged upon the way ;—
What think'st thou ? is it not an easy matter
To make William lord Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle ?

Cate. He, for his father's sake, so loves the prince,
That he will not be won to slight against him, the ?

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley ? will not

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well, then, no more but this : Go, gentle

Catesby,

And, as it were far off, sound thou lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose ;
And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,
To sit about the coronation.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons ;
If he be headen, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too ; and so break off the talk,
And give us notice of his inclination ;
For we to-morrow hold divided councils,
Wherein thyself shalt highly be employed.

[Catesby,
Glo. Commend me to lord William ; tell him,
His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries,
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle ;
And bid my friend, for joy of this good news,
Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly

Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.

Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep ?

Cate. You shall, my lord.

Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both.

[Exit Catesby.]

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive
Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots ?

Glo. Chop off his head, man ;—somewhat we will do :—
And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford, and all the moveables
Whereof the king my brother was possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness.

Come, let us sup betimes ; that afterwards
We may digest our complots in some form. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—Before Lord Hastings' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord,— (Knocking,

Hast. (Within.) Who knocks ?

Mess. One from lord Stanley.

Hast. (Within.) What is 't o'clock ?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Cannot thy master sleep the tedious nights ?

Mess. So it should seem by that I have to say.

First, he commends him to your noble lordship.

Hast. And then,—

Mess. And then he sends you word, he dreamt
To-night the boar had ras'd off his helm ;
Beside, he says, there are two councils held ;
And that may be determined at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at the other.
Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,
If presently you will take horse with him,
And, with all speed post with him toward the north,
To shun the danger that his soul divines.

Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord ;
Bid him not fear the separated councils ;
His honour, and myself, are at the one ;
And, at the other, is my good friend Catesby ;
Where nothing can proceed that toucheth us,
Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him, his fears are shallow, wanting instance ;
And for his dreams—I wonder, he's so fond
To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers ;
To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,
Were to incense the boar to follow us,
And make pursuit where he did mean no chase.

Go, bid thy master rise and come to me ;
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say.

[Exit.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord !

Hast. Good morrow, Catesby ; you are early stirring ;
What news, what news, in this our tottering state ?

Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord ;
And, I believe, will never stand upright,
Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Hast. How ! wear the garland ? dost thou mean the crown ?

Cate. Ay, my good lord. [Shoulders,

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my Before I'll see the crown so foul misplaced,
But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it ?

Cate. Ay, on my life ; and hopes to find you forward
Upon his party, for the gain thereof ;
And, thereupon, he sends you this good news,—
That this same very day, your enemies,
The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news, because they have been still my adversaries: But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side, To bar my master's heirs in true descent, God knows, I will not do it, to the death.

Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind!
Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelvemonth hence,— That they, who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older, I'll send some packing, that yet think not on't.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord, When men are unprepared, and look not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so 'twill do With some men else, who think themselves as safe As thou and I; who, as thou knowest, are dear To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of you,— For they account his head upon the bridge. (Aside.)

Hast. I know they do; and I have well deserved it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on, where is your holy-spear, man? Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?

Stan. My lord, good morrow; and good morrow, Catesby:—

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood, I do not like these several counsils, I.

Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as yours; And never in my life, I do protest,

Was it more precious to me than 'tis now:

Think you, but that I know our state secure, I would be so triumphant as I am? [London.]

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from Were jocund, and supposed their states were sure,

And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;

But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast.

This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;

Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!

What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you.—Wot you what, my lord?

To-day, the lords you talk of are heheaded. [hears.]
Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their Than some, that have accused them, wear their hats

But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before, I'll talk with this good fellow.

[Exeunt Stanley and Catesby.]

How now, sirrah? how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.

Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now, Than when thou met'st me last where now we meet:

Then was I going prisoner to the Tower, By the suggestion of the queen's allies;

But now, I tell thee, (keep it to thyself,) This day those enemies are put to death,

And I in better state than ere I was.

Purs. God hold it, to your honour's good content!

Hast. Granerney, fellow: There, drink that for me.

(Throwing him his purse.)

Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit Pursuivant.]

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Hast. I thank thee, good sir John, with all my heart.

I am in your debt for your last exercise;

Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;

Your honour hath no shiving work in hand.

Hast. 'Good! faith, and when I met this holy man,

The men you talk of came into my mind.

What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:

I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not.

(Aside.)

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the Castle.

Enter RATCLIFF, with a guard, conducting RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN, to execution.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this, —

To-day, shalt thou behold a subject die, For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of you!

A knot you are of Jammed blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this hereafter.

Rat. Despatch; the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison,

Fatal and ominous to noble peers!

Within the guilty closure of thy walls,

Richard the Second here was hack'd to death:

Aid, for more slander to thy dismal seat,

We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads

When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,

For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Riv. Then curs'd she Hastings, then curs'd she Buckingham.

Then curs'd she Richard:—O, remember, God,

To hear her prayers for them, as now for us!

And for my sister, and her princely sons,—

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true bloods,

Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt!

Rat. Make haste, the hour of death is expiate.

Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here embrace:

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt]

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Tower.

BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the Bishop of ELY, CATESBY, LOVEL, and others, sitting at a table: Officers of the council attending.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met is—to determine of the coronation:

In God's name, speak, when is the royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?

Stan. They are; and waits but nomination.

Ely. To-morrow then I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces: for our hearts,—

He knows no more of mine, than I of yours;

Nor I, of his, my lord, than you of mine:—

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;

But, for his purpose in the coronation,

I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd

His gracious pleasure any way therein:

But you, my noble lord, may name the time;

And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,

Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Enter GLOSTER.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins, all, good morrow:

I have been long a sleeper; but, I trust,

My absence doth neglect no great design,

Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue, my lord,

William lord Hastings had pronounced your part,—

I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than my lord Hastings, no man might be holder:

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.—

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,

I saw good strawberries in your garden there;

I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

(Exit Ely.)

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

(Takes him aside.)

Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business;

And finds the testy gentleman so hot,

That he will lose his head, ere give consent,

His master's child, as worshipfully he terms it,

Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile, I'll go with you.

[Exeunt Gloster and Buckingham.]

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.

To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;

For I myself am not so well provided,

As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter Bishop of ELY.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent

For these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning;

There's some conceit or other likes him well,

When he doth bid good morrow with such spirit.

I think, there's us'er a man in Christendom

Can lesser hide his love, or hate, than he ;

For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Shaw. What of his heart perceive you in his face,

By any likelihood he shew'd to-day ?

Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended ;

For, were he, he had shewn it in his looks.

Re-enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve,
That do conspire my death with devilish plots
Of damned witchcraft ; and that have prevail'd
Upon my body with their hellish charms ?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,
Makes me most forward in this noble presence
To doom the offenders : Whoso'er they be,
I say, my lord, they have deserv'd death.

Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil,
Look how I am bewitch'd ; behold mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up ;
And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,
Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,
That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Glo. If! thou protector of this damned strumpet,

Talk'st thou to me of life?—Thou art a traitor!—

Off with his head!—now, by Saint Paul I swear,

I will not dine until I see the same.—

Lovel, and Catesby, look, that it be done ;

The rest, that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exeunt Council, with Gloster and Buckingham.]

Hast. Wo, wo, for England! not a whit for me ;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this :

Stanley did dream, the hoar did raise his helm ;

But I disdain'd it, and did scorn to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,

And startled, when he looked upon the Tower,

As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O, now I want the priest that spake to me :

I now repent I told the pursuivant,

As too triumphing, how mine enemies

To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,

And I myself secure in grace and favour.

O Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse

Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head. [dinner ;

Cate. Despatch, my lord, the duke would be at

Make a short shrift, he longs to see your head.

Hast. O momentary grace of mortal men,

Which we more hunt for than the grace of God !

Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast ;

Ready, with every nod, to tumble down

Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch ; 'tis bootless to exclaim.

Hast. O bloody Richard!—miserable England!

I prophesy the fearful'st time to thee,

That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.—

Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head ;

They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same. The Tower Walls.

Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, in rusty armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour ?

Murder thy breath in middle of a word,—

And then again begin, and stop again,

As if thou wert distraught, and mad with terror ?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian ;

Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,

Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,

Intending deep suspicion : ghastly looks

Are at my service, like enforced smiles ;

And both are ready in their offices,

At any time, to grace my stratagems.

But what, is Catesby gone ?

Glo. He is ; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and CATESBY.

Buck. Let me alone to entertain him.—Lord mayor,—

Glo. Look to the draw-bridge there.

Buck. Hark, hark ! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent for you,—

Glo. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us !

*Enter LOVEL and RATCLIFF, with Hastings's
head.*

Glo. Be patient, they are friends,—Ratcliff and Lovel.

Lov. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,

The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I loved the man, that I must weep.

I took him for the plainest harmless creature

That breathed upon the earth a Christian ;

Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded

The history of all her secret thoughts :

So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,

That, his apparent open guilt omitted,—

I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife,—

He lived from all attinder of suspect.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd

traitor

That ever lived.—Look you, my lord mayor,

Would you imagine, or almost believe,

(Were 't not, that by great preservation,

We live to tell it you,) the subtle traitor

This day had plotted, in the council-house,

To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster ?

May. What! had he so ?

Glo. What! think you we are Turks, or infidels ?

Or that we would, against the form of law,

Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death ;

But that the extreme peril of the case,

The peace of England, and our persons' safety,

Enforced us to this execution ?

May. Now, fair befall you! he deserved his death ;

And your good graces both have well proceeded,

To warn false traitors from the like attempts.

I never look'd for better at his hands,

After he once fell in with mistress Shore.

Buck. Yet had we not determined he should die,

Until your lordship came to see his end ;

Which now the loving haste of these our friends,

Somewhat against our meaning, hath prevented :

Because, my lord, we would have had you heard

The traitor speak, and timorously confess

The manner and the purpose of his treasons ;

That you might well have signified the same

Unto the citizens, who, haply, may

Misconstrue us in him, and wall his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve,

As well as I had seen, and heard him speak :

And do not doubt, right noble princes both,

But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens

With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here.

To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you came too late of our intent,

Yet witness what you hear we did intend :

And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Lord Mayor.]

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.

The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post :

There, at your meetest vantage of the time,

Infer the bastardy of Edward's children :

Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,

Only for saying—he would make his son

Heir to the crown ; meaning, indeed, his house,

Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.

Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,

And bestial appetite in change of lust ;

Which stretch'd into their servants, daughters, wives,

Even where his raging eye, or savage heart,

Without control, list'd to make his prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person :—

Tell them, when that my mother went with child

Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,

My princely father, then had wars in France ;

And, by just computation of the time,

Found, that the issue was not his begot ;

Which well appeared in his lineaments,

Being nothing like the noble duke my father :

Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far off ;

Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord ; I'll play the orator,

As if the golden fee, for which I plead,

Were for myself ; and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's

Where you shall find me well accompanied, [castle ;

With reverend fathers, and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go ; and, towards three or four o'clock,

Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit Buckingham.]

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw,—

Go thou (to Cat.) to friar Penker ;—bid them both

Meet me, within this hour, at Baynard's castle.

[Exeunt Lovel and Catesby.]

Now will I in, to take some privy order

To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight ;

And to give notice, that no manner of person

Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. [Exit]

SCENE VI.—A Street.

Enter a Scrivener.

SCRIP. Here is the indictment of the good lord Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd, [Hastings; That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's. And mark how well the sequel hangs together:— Eleven hours I have spent to write it over, For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me; The precedent was full as long a doing: And yet within these five hours Hastings lived, Untainted, unexamined, free, at liberty. Here's a good world the while!—Who is so gross, That cannot see this palpable device? Yet who so hold, but says— he sees it not. Had is the world; and all will come to nought, When such bad dealing must be seen in thought. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The same. Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, meeting.

Glo. How now, how now? what say the citizens?
Buck. Now, by the holy mother of our Lord, The citizens are mum, save not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?
Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy,

And his contract by deputy in France;
The insatiate greediness of his desires,
And his enforcement of the city wives;
His tyranny for trifles; his own hastyrdy,—
As being got, your father then in France;
And his resemblance, being not like the duke.
Withal, I did infer your lineaments,—
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind;
Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,

Your bounty, virtue, faith, humility;
Indeed, left nothing, fitting for your purpose,
Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse.

And, when my oratory grew to an end,
I bade them, that did love their country's good,
Cry—God save Richard, England's royal king!

Glo. And did they so?
Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word;
But, like dumb statues, or breathless stones,
Stared on each other, and look'd deadly pale.
Which when I saw, I reprehended them:
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence:
His answer was—the people were not used
To be spoke to, hut by the recorder.

Then he was urged to tell my tale again:—
Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inferr'd;
But nothing spoke in warrant from himself.

When he had done, some followers of mine own,
At lower end of the hall, hur'd up their caps,
And some ten voices cried—God save King Richard!
And thus I took the vantage of those few—

Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I;
This general applause, and cheerful shout

Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard:
And even here brake off, and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak?

Will not the mayor then, and his brethren, come?
Buck. The mayor is here at hand; intend some fear;
But not you spoke with, but by mighty suit:
And look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll make a holy descent;
And be not easily won to our requests;
Pav the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them.

A. I can say nay to thee for myself.

N. do not we'll bring it to a happy issue.

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads; the lord mayor knocks.

[Exit Gloster.

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here;
I think, the duke will not be spoke withal.—

Enter, from the Castle, CATESBY.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?
Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord,
To visit him to-morrow, or next day:
He is within, with two right reverend fathers,
Divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suit would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Duck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke;
Tell him, myself, the mayor, and aldermen,

In deep designs, in matter of great moment,
No less importing than our general good,
Are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight. [Exit.

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Edward
He is not lolling on a lewd day-bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtesans,
But meditating with two deep divines;
Not sleeping, to enrich his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul:
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on himself the sovereignty thereof:
But, sure, I fear, we shall ne'er win him to it.

May. Marry, God defend, his grace should say us nay!

Buck. I fear, he will: Here Catesby comes again;—

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?
Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before;
He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him:
By Heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
And so once more return and tell his grace.

[Exit Catesby.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence;
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, in a gallery above, between twoBishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen!

Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer is in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests;
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right Christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology;
I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Neglect the visitation of my friends.

But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?
Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,
And all good men of this ungodn'd isle.

Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence,
That seems disgraceful in the city's eye;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord;—would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties to amend your fault!
Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land?

Buck. Know, then, it is your fault, that you resign
The supreme seat, the throne majestical,
The scepter'd office of your ancestors,
Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house,
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock:
Whilst, in the midstness of your sleepy thoughts,
(Which here we waken to our country's good,)
The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defaced with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,
And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.
Which to recure, we heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land:
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or proxy factor for another's gains;
But as successively, from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof,
Best fitteth my degree, or your condition:
If, not to answer,—you might haply think,
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me;
If to reprove you for this fault of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends.
Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first;

And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,—
Definitively thus I answer you.
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert
Unmeritable, shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many, my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,—
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,—
Than in my greatness cover'd to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.
But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me;
(And much I need to help you, if need were;)
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay what you would lay on me,
The right and fortune of his happy stars,—
Which, God defend, that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace;
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.
You say, that Edward is your brother's son;
So say we too, but not by Edward's wife:
For first he was contract to lady Lucy,
Your mother lives a witness to his vow;
And afterwards by substitute betroth'd
To Bona, sister to the king of France.
These both put by, a poor petitioner,
A care-crazed mother, to a many sons,
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,
Seduced the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension and loath'd bigamy:
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call—the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer'd benefit of dignity:
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing time,
Unto a lineal true-deriv'd course.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you.

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love.

Cates. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful suit.

Glo. Alas, why would you heap those cares on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty;—

I do beseech you, take it not amiss;

I cannot, nor I will not yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal.

Loath to depose the child, your brother's son;

As well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,

Which we have noted in you to your kindred,

And equally, indeed, to all estates,—

Yet know, wher you accept our suit or no,

Your brother's son shall never reign our king;

But we will plant some other in the throne.

To the disgrace and downfall of your house.

And, in this resolution, here we leave you.—

Come, citizens, we will entreat no more.

[Exit Buckingham, and Citizens.]

Cates. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their

If you deny them, all the land will rue it. [suit;]

Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?

Well, call them again; I am not made of stone,

But penetrable to your kind entreaties.

[Exit Catesby.]

Albeit against my conscience and my soul.—

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM, and the rest.

Cousin of Buckingham,—and sage, grave men,—

Since you will buckle fortune on my back,

To bear her burden, wher I will or no,

I must have patience to endure the load;

But if black scandal, or foul-faced reproach,

Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your mere enforcement shall acquaintance me

From all the impure blots and stains thereof;

For God he knows, and you may partly see,

How far I am from the desire of this.

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say it.

Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,—

Long live King Richard, England's worthy king!

All. Amen.

Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be crown'd?
Glo. Even when you please, since you will have it so
Buck. To-morrow then we will attend your grace;
And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.

Glo. Come, let us to our holy work again.—

[To the Bishops.]

Farewell, good cousin;—farewell, gentle friends.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, QUEEN ELIZABETH, DUCHESS OF YORK, and MARQUIS OF DORSET; on the other, ANNE, Duchess of Gloster, leading LADY MARGARET PLANTAGENET, Clarence's young daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here?—my niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand by her kind aunt of Gloster?
Now, for my life, she's wand'ring to the Tower,
On pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince.—
Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day!

Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister! Whither away?

Anne. No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,

To gratulate the gentle prince's there.

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks; we'll enter all together:

Enter BRAKENBURY.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.—

Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,

How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam: By your patience,

I may not suffer you to visit them;

The king hath strictly charged the contrary.

Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean, the lord protector.

Q. Eliz. The Lord protect him from that kingly title

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?

I am their mother, who shall bar me from them?

Duch. I am their father's mother, I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:

Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame,

And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brak. No, madam, no, I may not leave it so;

I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit Brakenbury.]

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,

And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,

And reverend looker-on of two fair queens.—

Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster,

[To the Duchess of Gloster.]

There to be crown'd Richard's royal queen,

Q. Eliz. Ah, cut my lace asunder!

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,

Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Desp'ntful tidings! O unpleasing news!

Dor. Be of good cheer.—Mother, how fares your grace?

Q. Eliz. O Dorset, speak not to me, get thee gone,
Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;

Thy mother's name is ominous to children:

If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,

And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell.

Go, hie thee, hie thee, from this slaughter-house,

Lest thou increase the number of the dead;

And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,—

Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam:—

Take all the swift advantage of the hours;

You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way;

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!—

O my accursed womb, the bed of death;

A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,

Whose unavoided eye is murderous!

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was sent.

Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.

O, would to God, that the inclusive verge

Of golden metal, that must round my brow,

Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain!

Accointed let me be with deadly venom;

And die, ere men can say—God save the queen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory

To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.

Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband now,
Came to me as I follow'd Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands,
Which issued from my other angel husband,
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;
O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—*Be thou, quoth I, accursed,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!*
And, when thou wead'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife (if any be so mad)
More miserably by the life of thee,
Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!
Lo, ere I can repeat this curse again,
Even in so short a space, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words,
And proved the subject of mine own soul's curse:
Which ever since hath held mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu! I pity thy complaining.
Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.
Dor. Farewell, thou woful welcomer of glory!
Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that takest thy leave of it!
Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!
(To Dorset.)
Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!

(To Anne.)
Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!
(To Q. Elizabeth.)
I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Tower.—
Pity, you ancient stones, those tender haies,
Whom envy hath immured within your walls!
Rough eradid for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse! old sullen play-fellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of trumpets. RICHARD, as King, upon his throne; BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham,— Buck. My gracious sovereign. [Enter.]
K. Rich. Give me this hand. Thus hath, by thy
And the assistance, is King Richard seated!—
But shall we wear these glories for a day?
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?
Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!
K. Rich. Ah, Buckingham, now do I play the touch,
To try if thou be current gold, indeed!—
Young Edward lives!—Think now what I would speak.
Buck. Say on, my loving lord.
K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be king.
Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned liege.
K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'Tis so; but Edward lives.
Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence,
That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince!—
Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull!—
Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd.
What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief.
Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure. [Freezes:]
K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness
Saw, have I thy consent, that they shall die? [Lord.]
Buck. Give me some breath, some little pause, dear
Before I positively speak in this:
I will resolve your grace immediately. [Exit.]
Cate. The king is angry; see, he gnaws his lip.

(Aside.)
K. Rich. I will converse with Iron-witted fools,
(Descends from his throne.)
And unrespective boys; none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes!—
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect,— Boy,—

Page. My lord.
K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting gold
Would tempt unto a close exploit of death?
Page. I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty mind:
Gold were as good as twenty orators,
And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?
Page. His name, my lord, is—Tyrrel.

K. Rich. I partly know the man: Go, call him hither, boy.— [Exit Page.]
The deep-revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels;
Hath he so long held out with me untired,
And stops he now for breath?—well, be it so.—

Enter STANLEY.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news?
Stan. Know, my loving lord,
The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.
K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby; rumour it abroad,
That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;
I will take order for her keeping close.
I inquire me out some mean-horn gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:—
The boy is foolish, and I fear not him.—
Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it; for it stands me much upon,
To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.—
[Exit Catesby.]

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:—
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

Re-enter Page, with TYRREL.

Is thy name—Tyrrel?
Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient subject.
K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?
Tyr. Yes, my lord. Prove me, my gracious lord.
K. Rich. Darest thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.
K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it; two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon:
Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.
Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.
K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither, Tyrrel;

Go, by this token!—Rise, and lend thine ear:
(Whispers.)
There is no more but so!—Say, it is done,
And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.
Tyr. I will despatch it straight. [Exit.]

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.
K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.
Buck. I hear the news, my lord.
K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son!—Well, look to it.

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,
For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;
The earldom of Hereford, and the moveables,
Which you have promised I shall possess.
K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife; if she convey Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request?
K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the Sixth
Did prophesy, that Richmond should be king,
When Richmond was a little peevish boy.
A king!—perhaps—

Buck. My lord,— [time,]
K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at that
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?
Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom.—

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Rouge-mont: at which name, I started
Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,—
K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock? I am thus bold
To put your grace in mind of what you promised me.

K. Rich. Well, but what is't o'clock?
Buck. Upon the stroke
Of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.
Buck. Why, let it strike?
K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st the stroke

Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.
I am not in the giving vein to-day.
Buck. Why, then resolve me when you will, or no.

K. Rich. Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein.
[Exeunt King Richard and Train.]
Buck. And is it thus? repays he my deep service
 With such contempt? made I him king for this?
 O, let me think on Hastings; and he gone
 To Brecknock, while my fearful head is on. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter TYRREL.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
 The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
 That ever yet this land was guilty of,
 Dighton, and Forrest, whom I did suborn
 To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
 Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
 Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
 Wept like two children, in their death's sad story.
O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes,—
Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girding one another
Within their alabaster innocent arms:
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
Which, in their summer beauty, kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay;
Which once, quoth Forrest, almost chang'd my mind;
But, O, the devil—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on,—we smother'd
The most replenish'd sweet work of nature.
That, from the prime creation, e'er she fram'd.—
 Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse,
 They could not speak; and so I left them both,
 To hear this tidings to the bloody king.

Enter KING RICHARD.

And here he comes.—All health, my sovereign lord!
K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel! am I happy in thy news?
Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
 Beget your happiness, be happy then,
 For it is done.
K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?
Tyr. I did, my lord.
K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?
Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;
 But where, to say the truth, I do not know.
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after supper,
 When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
 Mean time, but think how I may do thee good,
 And be inheritor of thy desire.
 Farewell, till then.
Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]
K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I penn'd up close;
 His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;
 The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom;
 And Anne my wife hath bid the world good night.
 Now, for I know the Bretagne Richmond aims
 At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
 And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown,
 To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. My lord,—
K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou comest in so bluntly? [Mond.]
Cate. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to Rich-and Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen,
 Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near,
 Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
 Come,—I have learn'd, that fearful commenting
 Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
 Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary:
 That fiery expedition be my wing,
 Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!
 Go, muster men: My counsel is my shield;
 We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
 And drop into the rotten mouth of death,
 Here in these confines silyly have I lurk'd,
 To watch the waning of mine enemies.
 A dire induction am I witness to,
 And will to France; hoping, the consequence
 Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
 Withdraw thee, wretche'd Margaret! who comes here?

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and the
DUCHESS OF YORK.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
 My ubblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!

If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
 And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
 Hover about me with your airy wings,
 And hear your mother's lamentation!
Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for right
 Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.
Duch. So many miseries have crazed my voice,
 That my wo-wearied tongue is still and mute,—
 Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,
 Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.
Q. Eliz. Will thou, O God, fly from such gentle lambs,
 And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
 When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.
Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal-living ghost,
 Wo's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life usurp'd,
 Brief abstract and record of tedious days,
 Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,
(Sitting down.)
 Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!
Q. Eliz. Ah, that thou wouldst as soon afford a grove,
 As thou canst yield a melancholy seat;
 Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here!
 Ah, who hath any cause to mourn, but we?
(Sitting down by her.)

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow he most reverent,
 Give mine the benefit of seniority,
 And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.
 If sorrow can admit society, (Sitting down with them.)
 I'll o'er your woes again by wise mine:—
 I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
 I had a husband, till a Richard kill'd him;
 Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
 Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him;
 I had a Rutland too, thou help'dst to kill him.
Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
 A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death:
 That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
 To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood;
 That foul defacer of God's handy-work;
 That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,
 That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,
 Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—
 O upright, just, and true-disposing God,
 How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur
 Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
 And makes her pew-fellow with others' moan!
Duch. O Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes;
 God witness with me, I have wept for thine.
Q. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,
 And now I cloy me with beholding it.
 Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;
 Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
 Young York he is but boot, because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
 Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
 And the beholders of this tragic play,
 The adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
 Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves,
 Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer;
 Only reserved their factor, to buy souls,
 And send them thither: But at hand, at hand,
 Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
 Earth gapes, hell burns, bends roar, saints pray,
 To have him suddenly convey'd from hence:—
 Cancel his end of life, dear God, I pray,
 That I may live to see the dog is dead!
Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy, the time would come,
 That I should wish for thee to help me curse
 That hottled spider, that foul bumble-back'd toad.

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then, vain flourish of my fortune;
 I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
 The presentation of but what I was,
 The flattering index of a direful pageant,
 One heav'd a-high, to be hurl'd down below:
 A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
 A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,
 To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
 A sign of dignity, a breath, a hubble;
 A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
 Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
 Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?
 Who sues, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?
 Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
 Where be the breathing troops that follow'd thee?
 Decline all this, and see what now thou art.
 For happy wife, a most distressed widow;

For Jovis' mother, one that wails the name;
 For one being sued to, one that humbly sues;
 For queen, a very cattif crown'd with care;
 For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
 For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one,
 For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
 Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
 And left thee but a very prey to time;
 Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
 To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
 Thou didst usurp my place: and dost thou not
 Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
 Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;
 From which even here I slip my wearied head,
 And leave the burden of it all on thee.
 Farewell, York's wife,—and queen of sad mischance.—
 These English woes shall make me smile in France.

Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay a while,
 And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the day;
 Compare death and happiness with living woe;
 Think that thy hates were fairer than they were,
 And he, that slew them, fouler than he is:
 Bettering thy loss makes the bad cause worse;
 Revolving this will teach thee how to curse. [Hine!

Q. Eliz. My words are dull, O, quicken them with Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine. [Exit.]

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?
Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes,
 Airy successers of intestate joys,
 Poor breathing orators of miseries!
 Let them have scope: though what they do impart
 Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-tied: go with me,
 And in the breath of bitter words let's smother
 My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd.

(Drum, within.)

I hear his drum,—be copious in exclams.

Enter KING RICHARD, and his Train, marching.

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?

Duch. O, sbe, that might have intercepted thee,
 By strangling thee in her accursed womb,
 From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hidest thou that forehead with a golden
 crown,

Where should be branded, if that right were right,
 The slaughter of the prince that owed that crown,
 And the dire death of my poor sons and brothers?
 Tell me, thou villain-slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother
 Clarence?

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Grey?

Duch. Where is kind Hastings? [drums!]

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets!—strike alarum,
 Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
 Rail on the Lord's anointed: Strike, I say.—
 (Flourish. Alarums.)

Either be patient, and entreat me fair,
 Or with the clamorous report of war
 Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
 That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Duch. O, let me speak.

K. Rich. Do, then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have staid for thee,
 God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it well,
 Thou camest on earth to make the earth my hell.

A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
 Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;

Thy school-days, frightful, desperate, wild, and furious;
 Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and venturous;

Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody,
 More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred;

What comfortable hour canst thou name,
 That ever grac'd me in thy company?

K. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour, that call'd your grace

To breakfast once, forth of my company.

If I be so disgracious in your sight,
 Let me march on, and not offend you, madam.—
 Strike up the drum.

Duch. I prythee, hear me speak.

K. Rich. You speak too bitterly.

Duch. Hear me a word;
 For I shall never speak to thee again.

K. Rich. So.

Duch. Either thou wilt die, by God's just ordinance,
 Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror;
 Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,
 And never look upon thy face again.

Therefore, take with thee my most heavy curse;
 Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more,
 Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!

My prayers on the adverse party fight;
 And there the little souls of Edward's children
 Whisper the spirits of thine enemies,
 And promise them success and victory.

Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;
 Shame serves thy life, and doth thy death attend.

[Exit.]

Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Alides in me; I say amen to her.

(Going.)

K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must speak a word with you.

Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood,
 For thee to murder: for my daughters, Richard,—
 They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;
 And therefore level not to hit their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd—Elizabeth,
 Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,
 And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;
 Slander myself, as false to Edward's bed;
 Throw over her the veil of infancy;

So she may live unscar'd of bleeding slaughter,
 I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.

K. Rich. Wrong not her birth, she is of royal blood.

Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say—she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safety did her brothers.

K. Rich. Lo, at their births, good stars were opposite.

Q. Eliz. No, to their lives had friends were contrary.

K. Rich. All unvoided is the doom of destiny.

Q. Eliz. True, when avoided grace makes destiny:
 My babes were destined to a fairer death,
 If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life.

K. Rich. You speak, as if that I had slain my cousins.

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle cozzen'd
 Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life,
 Whose hands soever lanced their tender hearts,
 Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction;
 No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt,
 Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,
 To revel in the entrails of my lams.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
 My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,
 Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;

And I, in such a desperate hay of death,
 Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
 Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise,
 And dangerous success of bloody wars,
 As I intend more good to you and yours,
 Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd!

Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,
 To be discover'd, that can do me good?

K. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady. [heads?]

Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their
K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
 The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrows with report of it;
 Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honour,
 Canst thou demise to any child of mine?

K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all,
 Will I lend endow a child of thine;
 So in the Lethe of thy angry soul
 Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
 Which, thou supposest, I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness
 Last longer telling than thy kindness' date.

K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul, I love thy daughter. [soul.]

Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her
K. Rich. What do you think? [soul:]

Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter, from thy
 So, from thy soul's love, didst thou love her brothers;

And, from my heart's love, I do thank thee for it.

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning;
 I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter,
 And do intend to make her queen of England.

Q. Eliz. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he, that makes her queen: Who else should be?

Q. Eliz. What, thou?

K. Rich. Even so: What think you of it, madam?

Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her?

K. Rich. That I would learn of you, as one being best acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me?

K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers,

A pair of bleeding hearts; therson engrave,
Edward and York; then, haply, will she weep:
To therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret
Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,—
A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple sap from her sweet brother's body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal.
If this inducement move her not to love,
Send her a letter of thy noble deeds;
Tell her, thou madest away her uncle Clarence,
Her uncle Rivers; ay, and, for her sake,
Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not the way to win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way;
Unless thou couldst put on some other shape,
And not be Richard that hath done all this.

K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her?

Q. Eliz. Nay, then, indeed, she cannot choose but have thee,

Having sought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done, cannot be now amended:
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent.
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,
To make amends, I'll give it to your daughter.
If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
To quicken your increase, I will beget
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.

A grandam's name is little less in love,
Than is the doting title of a mother;

They are as children, but one step below,
Even of your mettle, of your very blood;

Of all one pain, save for a night of groans
Endured of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.

Your children were vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.

The loss, you have, is but—a son being king,
And, by that loss, your daughter is made queen.

I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindness as I can.

Dorset, your son, that, with a fearful soul,
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions and great dignity:

The king, that calls your beauteous daughter,—wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset—brother;

Again shall you be mother to a king,
And all the ruins of distressful times

Repair'd with double riches of content.
What! we have many goodly days to see:

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl;

Advantaging their loan, with interest
Of ten-times-double gain of bappiness.

Go then, my mother, to thy daughter go;
Make bold her bashful years with your experience;

Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale;
Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame

Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys:

And when this arm of mine hath chastis'd
The potty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,

Bonded with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;

To whom I will retail my conquest woo,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What, were I best to say? her father's Would be her lord? Or shall I say, her uncle?

Or, he that slew her brothers, and her uncles?
Under what title shall I woo for thee,

That God, the law, my honour, and her love,
Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?

K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.

Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting war. [entreats.]

K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command,
Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's King forbids.

K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.

Q. Eliz. To wait the title, as her mother doth.

K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.

Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last?

K. Rich. Sweetly in force unto her fair life's end.

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last

K. Rich. As long as Heaven and nature lengthens it.

Q. Eliz. As long as hell and Richard likes of it.

K. Rich. Say, I, her sovereign, am her subject low

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loaths such sovereignty

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her. [tole.]

Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly

K. Rich. Then, in plain terms tell her my loving tale.

Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.

K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow, and too quick.

Q. Eliz. O, no, my reasons are too deep and dead:—
Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam; that is past. [break.]

Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I, till heart-strings

K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,—

Q. Eliz. Profaned, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd.

K. Rich. I swear.

Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.

Thy George, profaned, hath lost his holy honour;

Thy garter, bleemish'd, paw'd his knightly virtue;

Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory;

If something thou wouldst swear to be believed,
Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now by the world,—

Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

K. Rich. My father's death,—

Q. Eliz. The life hath that dishonour'd.

K. Rich. Then, by myself,—

Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-misused.

K. Rich. Why then, by God,—

Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
The unity the king thy brother made,

Had not been broken, nor my brother slain.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,

Had grac'd the tender temples of my child;

And both the princes had been breathing here,
Which now, two tender bed-fellows for dust,

Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.
What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. By the time to come.

Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'erpast
For I myself have many tears to wash
Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.

The children live, whose parents thou hast slaughter'd,
Ungovern'd youth, to wait it in their age:

The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren plants, to wait it with their age.

Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast
Misused ere used, by times ill-used o'erpast.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper and repent!
So thrive I in my dangerous attempt

Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!
Heaven and fortune, bar me happy hours!

Day, yield me not thy light; nor night, thy rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck

To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, bold thoughts,

I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!
In her consists my happiness, and thine;

Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,

Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
It cannot be avoided, but by this.

It will not be avoided, but by this.
Therefore, dear mother, (I must call you so,)
Be the attorney of my love to her.

Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve;

Urgo the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish found in great designs.

Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?

K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.

Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself, to be myself?

K. Rich. Av, if your self's remembrance wrong yourself.

Q. Eliz. But thou didst kill my children.

K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury
them:

Where, in that nest of spicery, they shall breed
Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me very shortly,
And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss, and so farewell.

(Kissing her.) [Exit Queen Elizabeth

Relenting fool, and shallow, changing—woman—
How now? what news?

Enter RATCLIFF; CATESBY following.

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy; to the shore
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back;
Tis thought, that Richmond is their admiral;
And there they hull, expecting but the aid
Of Buckingham, to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the duke of Norfolk:—

Ratcliff, thyself;—or Catesby; where is he?

Cate. Here, my good lord.

K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke.

Cate. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither: Post to Salisbury;
When thou comest thither—Dull unmindful villain,
(To Catesby.)

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness'
What from your grace I shall deliver to him, please you.

K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby;—Bid him levy
straight

The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cate. I go.

[Exit.

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?
K. Rich. Why, that wouldst thou do there, before
I go?

Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before.

Enter STANLEY.

K. Rich. My mind is changed.—Stanley, what news with you?

Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.

K. Rich. He-day, a riddle, neither good nor bad!
What need'st thou run so many miles about,
When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.

K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him!
White-liver'd rascal, what do he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.

K. Rich. Well, as you guess?

Stan. Stir'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Morton,
He makes for England, here to claim the crown.

K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd?

And who is England's king, but great York's heir?

Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.

K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,
You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.

Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.

Stan. No, mighty liege, therefore mistrust me not.

K. Rich. Where is the power then, to beat him back?

Where be thy tenants, and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the western shore,
Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.

K. Rich. Cold friends to me: What do they in the north,

When they should serve their sovereign in the west?

Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty king:

Please thy majesty to give me leave,

I'll muster up my friends; and meet your grace,
Where, and what time, your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with Richmond:

I will not trust you, sir.

Stan. Most mighty sovereign,
You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful;
I never was, nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Well, go, muster men. But, hear you, leave behind

Your son, George Stanley; look your heart be firm,
Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stan. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.

[Exit Stanley.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates, are in arms.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guildfords are in arms;
And every hour more competitors

Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter another Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham—K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but souls of death? (He strikes him.)

There, take thou that, till thou bring better news.

3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty,
Is,—that, by sudden floods and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispersed and scatter'd;
And he himself wander'd away alone,
No man knows whither.

K. Rich. O, I cry you mercy:

There is my purse, to cure that blow of thine.

Hath any well-advised friend proclaim'd
Reward to him that brings the traitor in?

3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my liege.

Enter another Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord marquis Dorset,
'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms.

But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—
The Bretagne navy is dispersed by tempest:

Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,

If they were his assistants, yea, or no;

Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham
Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,

Hoised sail, and made his course again for Bretagne.

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up
If not to fight with foreign enemies,

Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

[arms;]

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the best news: That the earl of Richmond
Is with a mighty power landed at Milford,
Is colder news, but yet they must be told.

K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury; while we reason
A royal battle might he won and lost:—

Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury:—the rest march on with me.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in Lord Stanley's House.

Enter STANLEY and SIR CHRISTOPHER URSWICK.

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me:—
That, in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold;

If I revolt, off goes young George's head;

The fear of that withhold my present aid.

But, tell me, where is princely Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Harford-west, in Wales.

Stan. What men of name resort to him?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;

Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley;

Oxford, redoubt'd Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valliant crew;

And many others of great fame and worth:

And towards London do they bend their course,
If by the way they be not fought withal.

Stan. Well, hie thee to thy lord; commend me to Tell him, the queen hath heartily consented [him;

He shall espouse Elizabeth her daughter.

These letters will resolve him of my mind.

Farewell, (Gives papers to Sir Christopher.)

[Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Salisbury. An open Place.

Enter the Sheriff, and Guard, with BUCKINGHAM, led to execution.

Buck. Will not King Richard let me speak with him?

Sher. No, my good lord; therefore be patient.

Buck. Hastings, and Edward's children, Rivers,
Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward, [Grey.

Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice;

If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction!—
This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not?

Sher. It is, my lord.

Buck. Why, then All-Souls' day is my body's doomsday.

This is the day, which, in King Edward's time,
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children, or his wife's allies:

This is the day, wherein I wish'd to fall

By the false faith of him whom most I trusted;
 This, this All-Souls' day to my fearful soul,
 Is the determined respite of my wrougs.
 That high All-seer which I dallied with,
 Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
 And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.
 Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
 To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms:
 Thus Margaret's curse falls heavy on my neck,—
*When he, quoth she, shall split thy heart with sorrow,
 Remember, Margaret was a prophetess.*—
 Come, sirs, convey me to the place of shame;
 Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
 [Exeunt Buckingham, &c.]

SCENE II—Plain near Tamworth.

Enter, with drum and colours, RICHMOND,
 OXFORD, SIR JAMES BLUNT, SIR WALTER
 HERBERT, and others, with Forces marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
 Bruised underneath the yoke of tyranny,
 Thus far into the bowels of the land
 Have we march'd on without impellment;
 And here receive we from our father Stanley
 Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.
 The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
 That spoil'd your summer fields, and fruitful vines,
 Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
 To your emhewell'd bosoms, this foul swine
 Lies now even in the centre of this isle,
 Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
 From Tamworth thither, is but one day's march.
 In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
 To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
 By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oxf. Every man's conscience is a thousand swords,
 To fight against that bloody homicide.
Herb. I doubt not, but his friends will turn to us.
Blunt. He hath no friends, but who are friends for Which, in his dearest need, will fly from him. [Fear.]
Richm. All for our vantage. Then, in God's name, march:
 True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings,
 Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter KING RICHARD, and Forces: the DUKE
 OF NORFOLK, EARL OF SURREY, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bosworth field,—
 My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?
Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.
K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk,—
Nor. Here, most gracious liege.
K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knocks; Ha! must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.
K. Rich. Up with my tent: Here will I lie to-night;
 (Soldiers begin to set up the King's tent.)

But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that.—
 Who hath descried the number of the traitors?
Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
K. Rich. Why, our battalia troubles that account:
 Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
 Which they upon the adverse faction want.
 Up with the tent.—Come, noble gentlemen,
 Let us survey the vantage of the ground:—
 Call for some men of sound direction:—
 Let's want no discipline, make no delay;
 For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.
 [Exeunt.]

Enter, on the other side of the field, RICHMOND, SIR WILLIAM BRANDON, OXFORD, and other Lords. Some of the Soldiers pitch Richmond's tent.

Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set,
 And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
 Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.—
 Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.—
 Give me some ink and paper in my tent:—
 I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
 Limit each leader to his several charge,
 And part in just proportion our small power.
 My lord of Oxford,—you, Sir William Brandon,—
 And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me:
 The earl of Pemherke keeps his regiment:—
 Good captain Blunt, bear my good night to him,
 And by the second hour in the morning
 Desire the earl to see me in my tent:—

Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me;

Where is lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?
Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much,
 (Which, well I am assured, I have not done,)
 His regiment lies half a mile at least
 South from the mighty power of the king.

Richm. If without peril it be possible,
 Sweet Blunt, make some good means to speak with him,
 And give him from me this most needful note.

Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;
 And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!

Richm. Good night, good captain Blunt. Come,
 gentlemen.
 Let us consult upon to-morrow's business;
 In to my tent, the air is raw and cold.
 [They withdraw into the tent.]

Enter, to his Tent, KING RICHARD, NORFOLK,
 RATCLIFF, and CATESBY.

K. Rich. What is't o'clock?
Cate. It's supper time, my lord;
 It's nine o'clock.

K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—
 Give me some ink and paper.—
 What, is my heaven easier than it was?—
 And all my armour laid into my tent?

Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.
K. Rich. Good Norfolk, lie thee to thy charge;
 Use careful watch, choose a trusty sentinels.

Nor. I go, my lord.
K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle Norfolk.
Nor. I warrant you, my lord. [Exit.]

K. Rich. Ratcliff,—
Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms
 To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
 Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall
 Into the blind cave of eternal night.—
 Fill me a howl of wine.—Give me a watch:—
 (To Catesby.)

Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—
 Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.
 Ratcliff,—

Rat. My lord? [thunderlaid?]
K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy lord Nor-

Rat. Thomas, the earl of Surrey, and himself,
 Much about cock-shut time, from troop to troop,
 Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.

K. Rich. I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine:
 I have not that slacrity of spirit,
 Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—
 So, set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?

Rat. It is, my lord.
K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me.
 About the mid of night, come to my tent
 And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say.

[King Richard retires into his tent. Exeunt
 Ratcliff and Catesby.]

RICHMOND'S Tent opens, and discovers him and his Officers, &c.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!
Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford,
 Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
 Tell me, how fares our loving mother?

Stan. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother,
 Who prays continually for Richmond's good:
 So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
 And flaky darkness breaks within the east.

In brief, for so the season bids us be,
 Prepare thy battle early in the morning;
 And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
 Of bloody strokes, and mortal-staring war:

I, as I may, (that which I would, I cannot,)
 With best advantage will deceive the time,
 And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
 But on thy side I may not be too forward,
 Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George,
 Be executed in his father's sight.

Beware well: The leisure and the fearful time
 Curs'd of the ceremonious vows of love!
 And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
 Which so long sunder'd friends should dwell upon;
 God give us leisure for these rites of love!

Once more, adieu!—Be valiant, and speed well!
Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:
 I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
 Lest leaden slumber peise me down to-morrow,
 When I should mount with wings of victory:
 Once more, good night, kind lords and gentlemen:
 [Exeunt Lords, &c. with Stanley]

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
 Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
 Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
 That they may crush down with a heavy fall
 The usurping helmets of our adversaries!
 Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
 That we may praise thee in thy victory!
 To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
 Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes;
 Sleeping, and waking, O, defend me still! (Sleeps.)

The Ghost of PRINCE EDWARD, son to Henry the Sixth, rises between the two tents.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
 (To King Richard.)
 Think, how thou stah'dst me in my prime of youth
 At Tewksbury: Despair therefore, and die!
 Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls
 Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
 King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

The Ghost of KING HENRY the Sixth rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body
 (To King Richard.)
 By thee was punched full of deadly holes:
 Think on the Tower and me: Despair, and die;
 Harry the Sixth bids thee despair and die.—
 Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror!
 (To Richmond.)
 Harry, that prophesied thou shouldst be king,
 Dotb comfort thee in thy sleep: Live, and flourish!

The Ghost of CLARENCE rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
 (To King Richard.)
 I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome wine,
 Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!
 To-morrow in the battle think on me,
 And fall thy edgeless sword: Despair, and die!
 Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,
 (To Richmond.)
 The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee;
 Good angels guard thy battle! Live, and flourish!

The Ghosts of RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN, rise.

Riv. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow,
 (To King Richard.)
Rivers, that died at Pomfret! Despair, and die!
Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!
 (To King Richard.)
Vaugh. Think upon Vaughan; and, with guilty fear,
 Let fall thy lance! Despair, and die!
 (To King Richard.)
All. Awake! and think, our wrongs in Richard's bosom (To Richmond.)
 Will conquer him;—awake, and win the day!

The Ghost of HASTINGS rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guilty awake;
 (To King Richard.)
 And in a bloody battle end thy days!
 Think on lord Hastings; and despair, and die!
 Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!
 (To Richmond.)
 Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower;
 Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
 And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
 Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.—
 Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
 Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy!
 Live, and beget a bappy race of kings!
 Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of QUEEN ANNE rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy
 That never slept a quiet hour with thee, [wife,
 Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:
 To-morrow in the battle think on me,
 And fall thy edgeless sword: Despair, and die!
 Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep;
 (To Richmond.)
 Dream of success and happy victory;
 Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of BUCKINGHAM rises.

Ghost. The first was I, that help'd thee to the crown;
 (To King Richard.)
 The last was I that felt thy tyranny:

O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
 And die in terror of thy guiltiness!
 Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death;
 Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath!
 I died for hope, ere I could lend thee aid:

(To Richmond.)

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:
 God, and good angels, fight on Richmond's side;
 And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

(The Ghosts vanish. King Richard starts out of his dream.)

K. Rich. Give me another horse, — bind up my wounds, —

Have mercy, Jesu! — Soft; — I did but dream. —
 O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me! —
 The lights burn blue, — It is now dead midnight.
 Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
 What do I fear? myself? there's none else by:
 Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
 Is there a murderer here? No. — Yes; I am;
 Then fly. — What, from myself? Great reason: Why?
 Lest I revenge. What? Myself on myself?
 I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,
 That I myself have done unto myself?
 O, no: alas, I rather hate myself,
 For hateful deeds committed by myself.
 I am a villain: Yet I lie, I am not.
 Fool, of thyself speak well. — Fool, do not flatter.
 My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
 And every tongue brings in a several tale,
 And every tale condemns me for a villain.
 Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree,
 Murder, stern murder, in the direst degree;
 All several sins, all used in each degree,
 Throng to the bar, crying all, — Guilty! guilty!
 I shall despair. — There is no creature loves me;
 And, if I die, no soul will pity me: —
 Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself
 Find in myself no pity to myself.
 Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd
 Came to my tent: and every one did threat
 To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter RATCLIFF.

Rat. My lord, —
K. Rich. Who's there?
Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village cock
 Hath twice done salutation to the morn;
 Your friends are up, and huckle on their armour.
K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!
 What thinkest thou? will our friends prove all true?
Rat. No doubt, my lord.
K. Rich. Ratcliff, I fear, I fear, I fear, —
Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.
K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night
 Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
 Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
 Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
 It is not yet near day. Come, go with me;
 Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
 To hear, if any mean to shrink from me.
 [Exeunt King Richard and Ratcliff.]

Richmond wakes. Enter OXFORD and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond.
Richm. 'Ory mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
 That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.
Lords. How have you slept, my lord?
Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-hoding
 That ever enter'd in a drowsy head, [dreams,
 Have I since your departure had, my lords.
 Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard murder'd,
 Came to my tent, and cried: — On I victory!
 I promise you, my heart is very jound
 In the remembrance of so fair a dream.
 How far into the morning is it, lords?
Lords. Upon the stroke of four.
Richm. Why, then 'tis time to arm and give direction. — (He advances to the Troops.)

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
 The leisure and enforcement of the time, —
 Forbids to dwell on: Yet remember this, —
 God, and our good cause, fight upon our side;
 The prayers of holy aints, and wronged souls,
 Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces;
 Richard except, those, whom we fight against,
 Had rather have us win, than him they follow.
 For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
 A bloody tyrant, and a homicide;
 One raised in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
 One that made means to come by what he hath,
 And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him

A base foul stene, made preclous by the foll
Of England's chair, where hee falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy;
Then if you fight against God's enemy,
God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers;
If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foes,
Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire;
If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;
If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit it in your age.
Then, in the name of God, and all these rights,
Advance your standards, draw your willing swords:
For me, the ransom of my bold attempt,
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;
But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully;
God, and Saint George! Richmond, and victory!

[Exeunt.]

Re-enter KING RICHARD, RATCLIFF, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms. [Then?

K. Rich. He said the truth: And what said Surrey

Rat. He smiled and said, the better for our purpose.

K. Rich. He was 't the right; and so, indeed, it is.
[Clock strikes.]

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.—

Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdain to shine; for, by the book,
He should have braved the east an hour ago;
A black day will it be to somebody.—

Ratcliff.—

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;

The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.
I would these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me,
More than to Richmond? for the self-same heaven,
That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter NORFOLK.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaults in the field.

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle; — Caparison my horse:—

Call up lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:—

I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be order'd.

My forward shall be drawn out all in length,

Consisting equally of horse and foot;

Our archers shall be plac'd in the midst:

John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,

Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.

They thus directed, we ourself will follow

In the main battle; whose puissance on either side

Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.

This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou,
Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—

This found I on my tent this morning. [Giving a scroll.]

K. Rich. [Reads]

Jockey of Norfolk, be not too bold,

For Dickon thy master is bought and sold.

A thing devis'd by the enemy.—

Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:

Let not our babbling dreams affront our souls;

Conscience is but a word that cowards use,

Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe;

Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.

March on, join bravely, let us 't pell-mell;

If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—

What shall I say more than I have inferr'd?

Remember whom you are to cope withal:—

A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways,

A scum of Breagnes, and base lackey peasants,

Whom their o'er-cloy'd country vomits forth

To desperate ventures and assured destruction.

You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;

You having lands, and blest with beautiful wives,

They would restrain the one, disdain the other.

And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow,

Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?

A milk-sop, one that never in his life

Felt so much cold as ever shoes in snow?

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;

Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,

These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;

Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves:
If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Breagnes! Whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bobbd, and thump'd,
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? I'll with our wives?
Ravish our daughters?—Hark! I hear their drum.

[Drum afar off.]

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!
Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood,
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

Enter a Messenger.

What says lord Stanley? will he bring his power?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off instantly with his son George's head.

Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh;

After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my Advance our standards, set upon our foes; [bosom:

Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,

Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!

Upon them! Victory sits on our helms. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter NORFOLK, and Forces; to him CATESBY.

Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue!

The king enacts more wonders than a man,

Daring an opposite to every danger;

His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,

Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death;

Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord, I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,

And I will stand the hazard of the die:

I think, there be six Richmonds in the field;

Five have I slain to-day, instead of him:—

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt.]

Alarums. Enter KING RICHARD and RICH-

MOND; and exeunt fighting. Retreat, and flourish. Then enter RICHMOND, STANLEY bearing the crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces.

Richm. God, and your arms, be praised, victorious

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead. [friends]

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit

Lo, here, this long-usurp'd royalty, [thee!]

From the dead temples of this bloody wretch

Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal;

Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, Amen, to all!—

But, tell me first, is young George Stanley living?

Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;

Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us?

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Stan. John duke of Norfolk, Walter lord Ferrers,

Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births.

Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,

That in submission will return to us;

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,

We will unite the white rose with the red:—

Smile Heaven upon this fair conjunction,

That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!—

What traitor hears me, and says not,—amen?

England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,

The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,

The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire;

All this divided York and Lancaster,

Divided, in their dire division.—

O, now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,

The true successors of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!

And let their heirs, (God, if thy will be so.)

Enrich the time to come with smooth-faced peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,

That would reduce these bloody days again,

And make poor England weep in streams of blood

Let them not live to taste this land's increase,

That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!

Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again,

That she may long live here, God say—Amen.

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh; things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and wo,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such, as give Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree,
The play may pass; if they be still, and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shilling
Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets; or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceived; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a shew
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
(To make that only true we now intend,)
Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make ye; think, ye see
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living; think you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng, and sweet,
Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery;
And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding day.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK, at one door: at the other, the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, and the LORD ABERGAVENNY.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have you
done,

Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace:
Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely agree

Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those suns of glory, those two lights of men,
Met in the vale of Arde.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde:
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four throned ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: Men might say,
Till this time pomp was single; but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders its: To-day, the French,
All eloquent, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and, to-morrow, they Made Britain, India: every man, that stood, Shew'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubims, all gilt: the maclams too,
Not used to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this mask
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
'Twas said they saw but one; and no discernor
Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these suns
(For so they phrase them) by their heralds challenged
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,
Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That Bevis was believed,

Buck. O, you go far.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discourser lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal;
To the disposing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view: the office did
Distinctly his full function.

Buck. Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?
Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion
 Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is freed
 From his ambitious finger. What had he
 To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder,
 That such a keech can with his very bulk
 Take up the rays of the beneficial sun,
 And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
 There's in him stuff, that puts him to these ends:
 For, being not propp'd by ancestry, (whose grace Chalks successors their way,) nor call'd up
 For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
 To eminent assistants, hut, spider-like,
 Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note,
 The force of his own merit makes his way:
 A gift that Heaven gives for him, which buys
 A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell
 What Heaven hath given him, let some graver eye
 Pierce into that; but I can see his pride
 Peep through each part of him: Whence has he that?
 If not from hell, the devil is a niggard;
 Or has given all before, and he begins
 A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
 Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
 Without the privy of the king, to appoint
 Who should attend on him? He makes up the file
 Of all the gentry; for the most part such,
 Too, whom as great a charge as little honour
 He meant to lay upon; and his own letter,
 The honourable board of council out,
 Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know
 Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
 By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
 They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O, many
 Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
 For this great journey. What did this vanity,
 But minister communication of
 A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievingly, I think,
 The peace between the French and us not values
 The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,
 After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
 A thing inspired; and, not consulting, broke
 Into a general prophecy.—That this tempest,
 Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
 The sudden breach on't.

Nor. Which is budded out;
 For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
 Our merchants' goods at Bourdeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
 The ambassador is silenced?

Nor. Marry is't.
Aber. A proper title of a peace; and purchased
 At a superfluous rate!

Buck. Why, all this business
 Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. Like it your grace,
 The state takes notice of the private difference
 Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,
 (And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety,) that you read
 The cardinal's malice and his potency
 Together: to consider farther, that
 What his high hatred would effect, wants not
 A minister in his power: You know his nature,
 That he's revengful; and I know, his sword
 Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and, it may be said,
 It reaches far; and where 'twill not extend,
 Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel,
 You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that rock,
 That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal WOLSEY, (the purse borne before him,) certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The Cardinal in his passage fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor? ha?
 Where's his examination?

I Secr. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

I Secr. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buckingshall lessen this big look.

[Exeunt Wolsey and Train.]

Buck. This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I

Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore, best
 Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book
 Out-worth's a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chafed?
 Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance only,
 Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in his looks
 Matter against me; and his eye reviled
 Me, as his abject object: at this instant
 He bores me with some trick; He's gone to the king;
 I'll follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,
 And let your reason with your choler question
 What 'tis you go about: To climb steep hills,
 Requires slow pace at first: Anger is like
 A full hot horse; who being allow'd his way,
 Self-mettle tircs him. Not a man in England
 Can advise me like you: be to yourself
 As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king;
 And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
 This Ipswich fellow's insolence; or proclaim,
 There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advised;
 Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot,
 That it do singe yourself: We may outrun,
 By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
 And lose by over-running. Know you not,
 The fire that mounts the liquor till it run o'er,
 In seeming to augment it, wastes it? Be advised:
 I say again, there is no English soul
 More stronger to direct you than yourself,
 If with the sap of reason you would quench,
 Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir,
 I am thankful to you; and I'll go along
 By your prescription;—but this top-roud fellow, (Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but From sincere motions,) by intelligence,
 And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
 We see each grain of gravel, I do know
 To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not, treasonous.
Buck. To the king I'll say 't; and make my vouch as stroug

As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
 Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravenous,
 As he is subtle; and as prone to mischief,
 As able to perform it: his mind and place
 Infecting one another, yes, reciprocally,)
 Only to shew his pomp as well in France
 As here at home, suggests the king our master
 To this last costly treaty, the interview,
 That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
 Did break i' the rinsing.

Nor. 'Faith, and so it did.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal

The articles of the combination drew,
 As himself pleased; and they were ratified,
 As he cried, Thus let be: to as much end.
 As give a crutch to the dead: But our count-cardinal
 Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey,
 Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,
 (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
 To the old dam treason.)—Charles the emperor,
 Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
 (For 'twas, indeed, his colour; but he came To whisper Wolsey,) here makes visitation:
 His fears were, that the interview betwixt
 England and France might, through their amity,
 Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
 Peep'd harms, that menaced him: He privily
 Deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow,
 Which I do well; for, I am sure, the emperor
 Paid ere he promised; whereby his suit was granted,
 Ere it was ask'd;—but when the way was made,
 And paved with gold, the emperor thus desired,—
 That he would please to alter the king's course,
 And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know,
 (As soon he shall by me,) that thus the cardinal
 Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
 And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry,
 To hear this of him; and could wish, he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable;
 I do pronounce him in that very shape
 He shall appear in proof.

Enter BRANDON, a Sergeant at Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Ser.
My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl
Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I
Arrest thee of high treason in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo you, my lord,
The net has fallen upon me: I shall perish
Under device and practise.

Bran. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty to lock on
The business present: 'Tis his highness' pleasure,
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing,
To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,
Which makes my whitest part black. The will of Heaven
Be done in this and all things!—I obey.—
O my lord Aberg'ny, fare you well.

Bran. Nay, be must bear you company:—The king
(To Aberg'averney.)
Is pleased you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he detourines farther.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of Heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd.

Brand. Here is a warrant from
The king, to attach lord Montacute; and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Court,
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,— So, so:

Buck. These are the limbs of the plot: No more, I hope.

Byan. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?
Bran. He.
Buck. My surveyor is false: the o'er-great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold. My life is spann'd already:
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham;
Whose figure even this instant cloud parts on,
By dark'ning my clear sun.—My lord, farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Council-Chamber.

Cornels. Enter KING HENRY, Cardinal WOLSEY,
the Lords of the Council, SIR THOMAS LOVELL, Officers, and Attendants. The King enters, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care: I stood 't' the level
Of a full-charged confederacy, and give thanks
To you that choked it.—Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's; in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify;
And shall by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

The King takes his State. The Lords of the Council take their several places. The Cardinal places himself under the King's feet, on his right side.

A noise within, crying, Room for the Queen! Enter the QUEEN, ushered by the Dukes of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK; she kneels. The King riseth from his State, takes her up, kisses, and placeth her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a sutor.

K. Hen. Arise, and take place by us:—Half your Never name to us; you have ask'd our power:
The other moieties, ye you half, is given;
Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.
That you would love yourself; and, in that love,
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions
Sent down among them, which hath flew'd the heart
Of all their loyalties:—wherein, although,
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter-on
Of these exactions, yet the king our master, (Whose honour Heaven shield from soil!) even he escapes not

Language unmannerly, yea, such which breaks
The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
It doth appear: for, upon these taxations,
The clothiers all, not able to maintain

The many to them 'longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who,
Unfit for other life, ccmpell'd by hunger,
And lack of other means, in desperate manner
Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar,
And Danger serves among them.

K. Hen. Taxation!
Wherein? and what taxation?—My lord cardinal,
You, that are blamed for it alike with us,
Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir,
I know but of a single part, in aught
Pertains to the state; and frount but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. No, my lord,
You know no more than others: but you frame
Things, that are known alike; which are not wholesome
To those which would not know them, and yet must Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions, Whereof my sovereign would have note, they are Most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear them,
The back is sacrifice to the load. They say,
They are devised by you; or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still taxation!
The nature of it? In what kind, let's know,
Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturesome
In tempting of your patience; but am holden'd
Under your promised pardon.—The subject's grief
Comes through commissions, which compel from each
The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay; and the pretence for this [months]:
Is named, your wars in France:—This makes bold
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegiance in them; your curses now
Live, where their prayers did; and it's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. I would, your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business.

K. Hen. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no farther gone in this, than by
A single voice; and that not pass'd me, but
By learned approbation of the judges.
If I am traduced by tongues, which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing,—let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. We must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope malicious censurers, which ever,
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow,
That is new trimm'd; but benefit no farther
Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft,
Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at,
We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State statutes only.

K. Hen. Things, done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear:
Things, done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trembling contribution? Why, we take,
From every tree, lop, bark, and part of the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root, thus back'd,
The air will drink the sap. To every county,
Where this is question'd, send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied
The force of this commission: Pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you.
(To the Secretary.)
Let there be letters writ to every shire,
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons
Hardly conceive of me; let it be noised,
That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you
Farther in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.]

Enter Surveyors.
Q. Kath. I am sorry, that the duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.
K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker,

To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself.
Yet see,

When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well disposed, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. This man so compleat,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd listening, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black
As if he smear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear
(This was his gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount
The fore-recited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.
Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what Most like a careful subject, have collected [you,
Out of the duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.
Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his: These very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Abergany; to whom by oath he menaced
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point.
Not friended by his wish, to your high person
His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen. Speak on:
How ground'd he his title to the crown,
Upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak aught?

Surv. He was brought to this
By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?
Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France,
The duke, being at the Rose, within the parish
Saint Lawrence Poultney, did of me demand
What was the speech amongst the Londoners
Concerning the French journey: I replied,
Men fear'd, the French would prove perfidious,
To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Said, 'Twas the fear, indeed; and that he doubted,
'Twould prove the verity of certain words
Spoke by a holy monk; that oft, says he,
Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour
To hear from him a matter of some moment;
Whom after under the confessor's seal
He solemnly had sworn, that, what he spoke,
My chaplain to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure confidence
This pausing ensued—Neither the king, nor his heirs, (Tell you the duke) shall prosper: bid him strive
To gain the love of the commonalty; the duke
Shall govern England.

Q. Kath. If I know you well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint of the tenants: Take good heed,
You charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul! I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Let him on:—
Go forward.

Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceived; and that 'twas dang'rous
To ruminate on this so far, until [for him,
It forged him some design, which, being believed,
It was much like to do: He answer'd, Tush!
It can do me no damage; adding farther,
That had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ha!
There's mischief in this matter.—Canst thou say
Surv. I can, my liege. [farther,
K. Hen. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich, after your highness had reproved the duke
About Sir William Blomer,—

K. Hen. I remember,
Of such a time:—Being my servant sworn,
The duke retain'd him his.—But on: What hence?
Surv. If, quoth he, I for this had been committed,
As, to the Tower, I thought,—I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
The usurper Richard: who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in his presence; which, if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him.

K. Hen. A giant traitor!
Wol. Now, rascal, may his highness live in freedom,
And this man out of prison?

Q. Kath. God mend all!
K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee;
what say'st?

Surv. After—the duke his father,—with the knife,—
He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on his breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
Was,—Were he evil used, he would out-go
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period,
To sheath his knife in us. He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek 't of us: by day and night,
He's traitor to the heart. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain and LORD SANDS.

Cham. Is it possible, the spells of France should juggle

Men into such strange mysteries?
Sands. New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let them be humanly, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English
Have got by the late voyage, is but merely
A fit or two of the face; but they are shrewd ones;
For, when they hold them, you would swear directly,
Their very noses had been counsellors

To Pepin, or Clotharius, they keep state so, Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it,

That never saw them pace before, the spavin,
A springhalt reign'd among them.

Cham. Death! my lord,
Their clothes are after such a pagan-cut too,
That sure, they have worn out Christendom.—How now?
What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

Lov. 'Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.

Cham. What is 't for?
Lov. The reformation of our travel'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and railors.

Cham. I am glad, 'tis there; now I would pray our monsieurs
To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either
(For so run the conditions) leave these remnants
Of fool and feather that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance,
Pertaining thereunto, (as fights and fireworks,
Abusing better men than they can be,
Out of a foreign wisdom,) renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short blister'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understand again like honest men;
Or pack to their old pla-fellows: there, I take it,
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.
Sands. 'Tis time to give them physic, their diseases
Are grown so catching.

Cham. What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities!

Lov. Ay, marry,
There will be no indeed, lords; the sly whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song, and a fiddle, has no fellow.
Sands. The devil fiddle them! I am glad, they're going;

(For, sure, there's no converting of them;) now
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song,
And have an hour of hearing; and, by T-rady,
Held current music too.

Cham. Well said, lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.
Sands. No, my lord;
Nor shall not, while I have a stump.
Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a-going?
Lov. To the cardinal's;
Your lordship is a guest too.
Cham. O, 'tis true:
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies; there will be
The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.
Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed,
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls every where.
Cham. No doubt, he's noble;
He had a black mouth that said other of him.
Sands. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal: in him
Scorning would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine:
Men of his way should be most liberal,
They are set here for examples.
Cham. True, they are so;
But few now give so great ones. My barge stays;
Your lordship shall squire:—Come, good sir Thomas,
We shall be late else: which I would not be,
For I was spoke to with Sir Henry Guildford,
This night to be comptrollers.
Sands. I am your lordship's.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Presence-Chamber in York-Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for the CARDINAL, a longer table for the guests. Enter at one door ANNE BULLEN, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, as guests; at another door, enter SIR HENRY GUILDFORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace
Salutes ye all: This night he dedicates
To fair content and joy: none here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevy, has brought with her
One care abroad; he would have all as merry
As first-good company, good wine, good welcome,
Can make good people.—O, my lord, you are tardy;

Enter Lord Chamberlain, LORD SANDS, and SIR
THOMAS LOVELL.

The very thought of this fair company
Clapp'd wings to me.
Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guildford.
Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal
But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested,
I think, would better please them: By my life,
They are a sweet society of fair ones.
Lov. O, that your lordship were but now confessor
To one or two of these!
Sands. I would I were;
They should find easy penance.
Lov. 'Faith, how easy?
Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.
Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry,
Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this:
His grace is ent'ring.—Nay, you must not freeze;
Two women placed together makes cold weather:—
My lord Sands, you are one will keep them waking;
Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies:
[Sits himself between Anne Bullen and another lady.]

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father.
Anne. Was he mad, sir?
Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too:
But he would hite none; just as I do now,
He would kiss you twenty with a breath. [Kisses her.]
Cham. Well said, my lord.—
So now you are fairly seated:—Gentlemen,
The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies
Pass a way frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY attended; and takes his state.

Wol. You are welcome, my fair guests; that noble
Or gentleman that is not freely merry, [lady] is not my friend: This, to confirm my welcome;
And to you all good health. [Drinks.]
Sands. Your grace is noble:—
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking.

Wol. M, lord Sands,
I am beholden to you: cheer your neighbours.—
Ladies, you are not merry:—Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?
Sands. The red wine first must rise
In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have them
Talk us to silence.
Anne. You are a merry gamester,
My lord Sands.
Sands. Yes, if I make my play.
Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam,
For 'tis to such a thing,—
Anne. You cannot shew n.e.
Sands. I told your grace, they would talk anon.
[Drums and trumpets within: Chambers discharged.]
Wol. What's that?
Cham. Look out there, some of you, [Exit a Servant.]
Wol. What warlike voice?
And to what end is this?—Nay, ladies, fear not;
By all the laws of war you are privileged.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now? what is 't?
Serv. A noble troop of strangers;
For so they seem: they have left their barge and landed;
And hither make, as great ambassadors
From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,
Go, give them welcome, you can speak the French
tongue;
And, pray, receive them nobly, and conduct them
Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty
Shall shine at full upon them:—Some attend him.—
[Exit Chamberlain, attended. All arise, and tables removed.]

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.
A good digestion to you all: and, once more,
I shower a welcome on you,—Welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King, and twelve others, as maskers, habited like shepherds, with sixteen torch-bearers; ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures? [prays] Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they
To tell your grace,—That, having heard by fame
Of this so noble and so fair assembly
Of this night to meet here, they could do no less,
Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,
But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and entreat
An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain,
They have done my poor house grace; for which I pray
them
A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleasures.
[Ladies chosen for the dance. The King chooses Anne Bullen.]

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd! O beauty, Till now I never knew thee. [Music. Dance.]

Wol. My lord, —
Cham. Your grace?
Wol. Pray, tell them thus much from me:
There should be one amongst them, by his person,
More worthy this place than myself; to whom,
If I but knew him, with my love and duty
I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.
Wol. [Cham. goes to the company, and returns.]

Wol. What say they?
Cham. Such a one, they all confess,
There is indeed; which they would have your grace
Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see, then.—
[Comes from his state.]
Be all your good leaves, gentlemen,—Here I'll make
My royal choice,

K. Hen. You have found him, cardinal:
[Unmasking.]

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord:
You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal,
I should judge now unhappily.

Wol. I am glad,
Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain,
Pr'ythee, come hither: What fair lady's that?
Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter,

The viscount Rochford, one of her highness' women.
K. Hen. By Heaven, she is a dainty one.—Sweetheart,

I were unmannerly to take you out,
And not to kiss you.—A health, gentlemen.
Let it go round.

Vol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready
In the privy chamber?

Lov. Yes, my lord.
Vol. Your grace,
I fear, with dancing is a little heated.
K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Vol. There's fresher air, my lord,
In the next chamber.
K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one. — Sweet
I must not let forsake you.—Let's be merry;—
Good my lord cardinal, I have half-a-dozen healths
To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure
To lead them once again; and then let's dream
Who's best in favour. Let the music knock it.

[Exeunt, with trumpets.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter Two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?
2 Gent. O.—God save you!
Even to the hall, to hear what shall become
Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you
That labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony
Of bringing back the prisoner.

2 Gent. Were you there?
1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.
2 Gent. Pray, speak, what has happen'd?

1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.
2 Gent. Is he found guilty?
1 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon it.

2 Gent. I am sorry for't.
1 Gent. So are a number more.
2 Gent. But pray, how pass'd it?

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke
Came to the bar; where, to his accusations,
He pleaded still, not guilty, and alleged
Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urged on the examinations, prova, confessions
Of divers witnesses; which the duke desired
To him brought, intra voce, to his face:

At which appear'd against him, his surveyor,
Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor, and John Court,
Confessor to him; with that devil monk,
Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2 Gent. That was he,
That fed him with his prophecies?

1 Gent. The same.
All these accused him strongly; which he fain
Would have bung from him, but, indeed, he could not:
And so his peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.

2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?
1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,—to hear

His knell rung out, his judgment,—he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely,
And something spoke in cholera, ill, and hasty:
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly,
In all the rest shew'd a most noble patience.

2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.
1 Gent. Sure he doth not,
He never was so womanish: the cause
He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent. Certainly,
The cardinal is the end of this.

1 Gent. 'Tis likely.
By all conjectures: First, Kildare's attender,
Then deputy of Ireland; who removed,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.

1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally; whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and, of my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much

They love and dote on; call him, bounteous Buckingham,
The mirror of all courtesies;—
1 Gent. Stay there, sir,
And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

*Enter BUCKINGHAM, from his arraignment; Tipstanes before him, the axe with the edge towards him; halberds on each side: with him, SIR
THOMAS LOVELL, SIR NICHOLAS VAUX,
SIR WILLIAM SANDS, and common people.*

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.
Buck. All good people,

You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I have this day received a traitor's judgment,
And by that name must die: Yet Heaven bear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful!

The law I bear no malice for my death;
It has done, upon the premises, but justice:
But those, that sought it, I could wish more Christians:
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them:
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men:
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
For farther life in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few, that loved
And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends, and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' God's name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart
Where hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Gainst me, I can't take peace with: no black envy
Shall make my grave.—Commend me to his grace;
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him,
You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers
Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake me,
Shall cry for blessings on him: May he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years!
Ever beloved, and loving, may his rule be!
And, when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your grace;
Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone; my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Bohun:
Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant: I now seal it;
And with that blood will make them one day groan
My noble father, Henry of Buckingham.

[for 't.]
Who first raised head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fell; God's peace be with him!

Let me but see with succour, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restored me to my honours, and, out of ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Now his son,
Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name, and all,
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father:
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes,—Both Fell by our servants, by those men we loved most;
A most unnatural and faithless service!
Heaven has an end in all. Yet you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain:
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels,
Be sure, you be not loose; for those you make friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye. All good people,
Pray for me! I must now forsake ye; the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell:

And when you would say something that is sad,
Speak how I fell.—I have done : and God forgive me.

[Exeunt Buckingham and train.]

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity!—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads,
That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
Tis full of wo; yet I can give you inking
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
Where may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir?

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith to conceal it.

1 Gent. Let me have it;
I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident;
You shall, sir: Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing, of a separation
Between the king and Katherine?

1 Gent. Yes, but it held not:
For when the king once heard it, out of anger

He sent command to the lord mayor, straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now: for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have, out of malice
To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple
That will undo her: To confirm this too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately;
As all think, for this business.

1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2 Gent. I think, you have hit the mark: But is't not cruel,

That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal
Will have his will, and she must fall.

1 Gent. 'Tis woful.
We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a letter.

Cham. My lord.—The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome; and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission, and main power, took 'em from me: with this reason,—His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king: which stopped our mouths, sir.

I fear he will, indeed: Well, let him have them:
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Nor. Well met, my good lord chamberlain.

Cham. Good day to both your graces.

Suf. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. I left him private,

Pull'd off sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No, his conscience

Has crept too near another lady.

Nor. 'Tis so;

This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal;

That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,

Turns what he lists. The king will know him one day.

Suf. Pray God, he do! he'll never know himself else.

Nor. How hoily he works in all his business!

And with what zeal! For, now he has crack'd the league
Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,
He dives into the king's soul; and there reatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience,
Fears, and de-spairs, and all these for his marriage:
And, out of all these to restore the king,
He counsels a divorce: a loss of her,
That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre:
O'er her, that loves him with that excellence,
That angels love good men with; even of her,
That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king: And is not this course pious?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'Tis most true,

These news are every where; every tongue speaks them,
And every true heart weeps for't: All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end,—
The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This hold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance;
Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages: all men's honours
Lie in one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.

Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him, there's my creed:
As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please; his curses and his blessings
Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in.
I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in;
And, with some other business, put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
My lord, you'll bear us company? [him:—]

Cham. Excuse me;
The king hath sent me other-where: besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him:
Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.]

NORFOLK opens a folding-door. The king is discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks! sure he is much afflicted.

K. Hen. Who is there? ha?

Nor. 'Pray God, he be not angry.

K. Hen. Who's there, I say? how dare you thrust
Into my private meditations? [yourself]

Who am I? ha?

Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences,
Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty, this way,
Is business of estate; in which we come
To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. You are too bold;
I'll make ye know your times of business:
Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha?—

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded conscience,

Thou art a cure fit for a king.—You're welcome,
[To Campeius.]

Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom;

Use us and it.—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker. [To Wolsey.]

Wol. Sir, you cannot.

I would, your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.

K. Hen. We are busy: go.
[To Norfolk and Suffolk.]

Nor. This priest has no pride in him?

Suf. Not to speak of;

I would not be so sick though, for his place:
But this cannot continue. [Aside.]

Nor. If it do,

I'll venture one heave at him.

Suf. I another.

[Exeunt Norfolk and Suffolk.]

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom
Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:
Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble. All the clerks,
I mean, the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms,
Have their free voices; Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us, this good man,
This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius;
Whom, once more, I present unto your highness.

K. Hen. And, once more, in mine arms I bid him welcome,

And thank the holy conclave for their loves;
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers'
You are so noble: To your highness' hand
I tender my commission; by whose virtue, [loves.]
(The court of Rome commanding.)—you, my lord
Cardinal of York, are join'd with me your servant,
In the impartial judging of this business.

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted

Forthwith, for what you come:—Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know, your majesty has always loved her So dear in heart, not to deny her that A woman of less place might ask by law, Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.

K. Hen. Ay, and the best, she shall have: and my To him that does best; God forbid else. Cardinal, Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary; I find him a fit fellow.

Re-enter WOLSEY, with GARDINER.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour to You are the king's now.

Gard. But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has raised me.

K. Hen. Come hitber, Gardiner.

(They converse apart.)

Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor Pace In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread then Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How of me?

Cam. They will not stick to say, you envied him; And, fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous, Kept him a foreign man still; which so grieved him, That he ran mad and died.

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him! That's Christian care enough: for living murmurers, There's places of rebuke. He was a fool; For he would needs be virtuous: That good fellow, If I command him, follows my appointment; I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother, We live not to be griped by meaner persons.

K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.

(Exit Gardiner.)

The most convenient place that I can think of, For such receipt of learning, is Black-Friars; There ye shall meet about this weighty business:— My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O my lord, Would it not grieve an able man, to leave So sweet a hedgeflow? But, conscience, conscience,— O, 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her.

SCENE III.—An Ante-Chamber in the Queen's Apartments.

Enter ANNE BULLEN and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither;—Here's the pang that piences:

His highness having lived so long with her; and she So good a lady, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life, She never knew harm-doing;—O now, after So many courses of the sun enthroned, Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which To leave is a thousand-fold more bitter, than 'Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process, To give her the avault! it is a pity Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O, God's will! much better, She never had known pomp: though it be temporal, Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce It from the bearer, 'tis a sufferance, panging As soul and body's severing.

Old L. Alas, poor lady!

She's a stranger now again.

Anne. So much the more Must pity drop upon her. Verily, I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born, And range with humble lives in content, Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief, And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content

Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth and maidenhead, I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would, And venture maidenhead for't; and so would you, For all this spice of your hypocrisy; You, that have so fair parts of woman on you, Have, too, a woman's heart; which ever yet Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty; Which, to say sooth, are blessings: and which gifts (Saving your mincing) the capacity

Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive, If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth,—

Old L. Yes, troth, and troth,—You would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange; a threepence bowed would hire me,

Old as I am, to queen it: But, I pray you, What think you of a duchess? for you limbs To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a little; I would not be a young count in your way, For more than blushing comes to: if your back Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How do you talk!

I swear again, I would not be a queen

For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England

You'd venture an emballing: I myself Would for Carnarvonshire, although there 'long'd No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth to know

The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,

Not your demand; it values not your asking: Our mistresses sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming The action of good women: there is hope, All will be well.

Anne. Now I pray God, amen!

Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,

Perceive I speak sincerely, and high notes Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty

Commends his good opinion to you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing

Tian marchioness of Pembroke; to which title

A thousand pound a-year, annual support,

Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know.

What kind of my obedience I should tender;

More than my all is nothing; nor my prayers

Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes

More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes

Are all I can return. 'Beseech your lordship,

Vouchsafe to speak my thanks and my obedience,

As from a blushing handmaid to his highness;

Whose health and royalty I pray for.

Cham. Lady,

I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit

The king hath of you.—I have perused her well:

(Aside.)

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,

That they have caught the king: and who knows yet,

But from this lady may proceed a gem,

To lighten all this isle?—I'll to the king,

And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honour'd lord.

(Exit Lord Chamberlain.)

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!

I have been beggins sixteen years in court,

(Am yet a courtier beggarly,) nor could

Come pat betwix too early and too late,

For any suit of pounds: and you, (O fate!)

A very fresh-fish here, (fy, fy upon

This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd up,

Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.

Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence, no.

There was a lady once, ('tis an old story,)

That would not be a queen, that would she not,

For all the mud in Egypt:—Have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old L. With your theme, I could

O'erment the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke!

A thousand pounds a-year! for pure respect;

No other obligation: by my life,

That promises more thousands: Honour's train

Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time,

I know, your back will bear a duchess;—Say,

Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,

Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,

And leave me out on't. 'Would I had no being,

If this salure my blood a jot; it fents me,

To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence: Pray, do not deliver
What here you have heard, to her.

Old L. What do you think me? [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Hall in Black-Friars.

Trumpets, senet, and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands next them, two Scribes, in the habits of doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury, alone; after him the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman-Usher bare-headed, accompanied with a Sergeant at Arms, bearing a silver mace; then two Gentlemen, bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals Wolsey and Campeius; two Noblemen with the sword and mace. Then enter the King and Queen and their trains. The King takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place at some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court in manner of a consistory; between them the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The Crier and the rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What 's the need?

If hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides the authority allow'd;
You may then spare that time.

Wol. Be 't so:—Proceed.

Scribe. Say, Henry, King of England, come into the court.

Crier. Henry, King of England, &c.

K. Hen. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katharine, Queen of England, come into court.

Crier. Katharine, Queen of England, &c.
The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair,
Goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.)

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice;

And to bestow your pity on me: for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir,
In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven witness,
I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable;

Ever in fear to kindle your dislike,
Yea, subject to your countenance; glad, or sorry,
As I saw it inclined. When was the hour,
I ever contradicted your desire,

Or made it not mine too? Or which of your friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine,
That had to him derived your anger, did I
Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharged? Sir, call to mind,
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you: If, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty,
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir,

The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatched wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one
The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many
A year before: It is not to be question'd,
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who de'm'd our marriage lawful: Wherefore I humbly
Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may
Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whose counsel
I will implore: if not, I' th' name of God—
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol. You have here, lady,

(And of your choice,) these reverend fathers; men
Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect of the laud, who are assembled
To plead your cause: It shall be therefore bootless
That longer you desire the court; as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unjust in the king.

Cam. His grace
Hath spoken well, and justly: Therefore, madam,
It's fit this royal session do proceed;
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produced and heard.

Q. Kath. Lord Cardinal,—
To you I speak.

Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir

I am about to weep; but, thinking that
We are a queen, (or long have dream'd so,) certain,
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet.
Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble; nay, before,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induced by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy; and make my challenge,
You shall not be my judge; for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me,—
Which God's dew quench!—therefore, I say again,
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul,
Refuse you for my judge: whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess,
You speak not like yourself; who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom

O'ertopping woman's power. Madam, you do me wrong:
I have no spleen against you; nor injustice
For you, or any; how far I have proceeded,
Or how far farther shall, is warranted
By a commission from the consistory,

Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blown this coal; I do deny it:

The king is present; if it be known to him,
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood? yea, as much
As you have done my truth. But, if he know,
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies, to cure me; and the cure is, to Remove these thoughts from you: The which before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You are meek, and humblemouth'd;

You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,

With meekness and humility; but your heart

Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.

You have, by fortune, and his highness' favours,

Gone slightly o'er low steps; and now are mounted,

Where powers are your retainers; and your words,

Domestic to you, serve your will, as 't please

Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,

You tender more your person's honour, than

Your high profession spiritual: That again

I do refuse you for my judge; and here,

Before you all, appeal unto the pope,

To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,

And to be judged by him.

(She courtesses to the King, and offers to depart.)

Cam. The queen is obstinate,

Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by it; 'tis not well.

She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.

Crier. Katharine, Queen of England, come into the court.

Grif. Madam, you are call'd back.

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you, keep your way:

When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help,

They vex me past my patience!—pray you, pass on:

I will not tarry; no, nor ever more,

Upon this business, my appearance make in any of their courts.

[Exeunt Queen, Griffith, and her other Attendants.]

K. Hen. Go thy way, Kale;

Trust man! 'th' world, who shall report he has

A better wife let him in doubt be trusted,

For speaking false in that: Thou art, alone,
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,—
Obeying in commanding,—and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out.)
The queen of earthly queens—She is noble born;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears, (for where I am rob'd and bound,
There must I be unloosed; although not there
At once and fully satisfied,) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on't? or ever
Have to you,—but with thanks to God for such A royal lady,—spake one the least word, might
Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Bark when their fellows do; by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excused:
But will you be more justified? you ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never Desired it to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd; oft
The passages made toward it:—on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what moved me to't,—
I will be bold with time, and your attention:—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came;—give heed
My conscience first received a tenderness, [to't:—
Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches utter'd
By the bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador;
Who had been hither sent on the debating
A marriage, 'twixt the duke of Orleans and
Our daughter Mary: I' the progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he
(I mean, the bishop) did require a respite:
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometimes our brother's wife. This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience, enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which forced such way,
That many mazed considerings did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First, methought,
I stood not in the smile of Heaven; who had Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
If it conceived a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to't, than
The grave does to the dead; for her male issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had air'd them: Hence I took a thought,
This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir of the world, should not Be gladdened in't by me: Then follows, that I weigh'd the danger, which my realms stood in
By this my issue's fall; and that gave to me
Many a groaning thro'. Thus hulling in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that's to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd.—First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did reek,
When I first moved you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.
K. Hen. I have spoke long; be pleased yourself to How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'st counsel, which I had, to doubt;
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then moved you,
My lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons:—Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals. Therefore, go on:
For no dislike I' the world against the person

Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleas'd reasons, drive this forward:
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come, with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature,
That's paragon'd o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court till farther day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness. (They rise to depart.)

K. Hen. I may perceive, (Aside.)
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-belov'd servant, Cranmer,
Pry'thee return! with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. Break up the court:
I say, set on. [Exeunt, in manner as they entered.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Palace at Bridewell. A Room in the Queen's Apartment.

The Queen, and some of her Women, at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Slug, and disperse them, if thou canst: leave working

SONG.

*Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves, when he did sing:
To his music, plants and flowers
Ever sprung: as sun, and showers,
There had been a lasting spring.*

*Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art,
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Full asleep, or, hearing, die.*

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now?
Genl. An't please your grace, the two great cardinals
Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Genl. They will'd me say so, madam.
Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. [Exit Genl.] What can be their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?
I do not like their coming, now I think on't.
They should be good men; their affairs as righteous:
But all hoods make not monks.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a horse-
I would be all, against the worst may happen. [Wife?]
What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw
Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here;
There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,
Deserves a corner: 'Would, all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy Above a number,) if my actions

Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them,
Envy and base opinion set against them,
I know my life so even: If your business
Seek out me, and that way I am wife in,
Out with it boldly: Truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima.

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have lived in: [piteous]
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, sus-
Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you,
If you speak truth, for their poor mistress's sake:
Believe me, she has had much wrong: Lord cardinal,
The willing'st sin I ever yet committed,
May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady,

I am sorry, my integrity should breed
(And service to his majesty and you.)
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not, by the way of accusation,
To taint that honour, every good tongue blesses;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much, good lady: but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference
Between the king and you; and 'to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam,
My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,
Z'al and obedience he still bore your grace;
Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure
Both of his truth and him, (which was too far,)—
Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. (Aside.)
My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,
Ye speak like honest men, (pray God, ye prove so!)
But how to make you suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
(More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business,
For her sake that I have been, (for I feel
The last fit of my greatness,) good your graces,
Let me have time, and counsel, for my cause;
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears;
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England,
But little for my profit: can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure.
(Though he be grown so desperate to be honest.)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They, that must weigh out my afflictions,
They, that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would, your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir?
Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection;
He's loving, and most gracious; 'twill be much
Both for your honour better, and your cause;
For, if the trial of the law o'ertake you,
You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly.
Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruin:
Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge,
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.
Q. Kath. The more shame for ye; holy men I thought ye,

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues;
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye;
Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?
The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity: But say, I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for Heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once
The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: Wo upon ye,
And all such false professors! Would ye have me
(If ye have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits,
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish'd me his bed already;
His love, too long ago: I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him,
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.
Q. Kath. Have I lived thus long—(let me speak myself, Since virtue finds no friends,)—a wife, a true one?
A woman I dare say, without stain-glory,
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections [him?
Still met the king? loved him next Heaven? obey'd
Born, out of fondness, superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords.

Bring me a constant woman to her husband;
One, that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.
Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty
To give up willingly that noble title,
Your master weil me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol. 'Pray, hear me.
Q. Kath. 'Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels' faces, but Heaven knows your hearts.
What will become of me now, wretched lady?
I am the most unhappy woman living.—
Alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes?
(To her women.)

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me,
Almost, no grave allow'd me.—Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head and perish.

Wol. If your grace
Could but be brought to know, our ends are honest,
You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady,
Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,
The way of our profession is against it;
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow them.
For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance by this carriage.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.
I know you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm; Pray, think us
Those we profess; peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues

With these weak women's fears. A noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever casts [you;
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves
Beware, you lose it not: For us, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost services in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: And pray, forgive me,

If I have used myself unmannerly;
You know, I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray, do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers,
While I shall have my life. Come, rev'rend fathers,
Bestow your counsel on me: she now begs,
That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Ante-chamber to the King's Apartment.

Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK, the DUKE OF SUFFOLK, the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them: If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

Suf. I am joyful
To meet the least occasion that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be revenged on him.

Suf. Which of the peers
Have uncontentu'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? when did he regard
The stamp of nobleness in any person,
Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures:
What he deserves of you and me, I know;
What we can do to him, (though now the time Gives way to us,) I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him; for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. No, he's settled,
Not to come off in his displeasure.

Suf. Sir,

I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true.
In the divorce, his contrary proceedings
Are all unfoiled; wherein he appears,
As I could wish mine enemy.

Sur. How came
His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried,
And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read,
How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgment o' the divorce: For if
It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive,
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it. Will this work?
Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he coasts,
And hedges, his own way. But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic
After his patient's death: the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sur. 'Would he had!
Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord!
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now all my joy
Trace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to't!

Nor. All men's.

Suf. There's order given for her coronation:
Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left
To some ears unaccounted.—But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete
In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall
In it be memorized.

Sur. But, will the king
Digest this letter of the cardinal's?
The lord forbid!

Nor. Marry, amen!

Suf. No, no;
There be more wasps, that buzz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius
Is stolen away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave;
Has left the cause o' the king unhandled; and
Is posted, as the agent o' our cardinal,
To second all his plot. I do assure you,
The king cried, ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him,
And let him cry ha, louder!

Nor. But, my lord,
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions; which
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him
For it an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. 'Tis so.

The cardinal—

Enter WOLSEY and CROMWELL.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody.
Wol. The packet, Cromwell, gave it you the king?
Crom. To his own hand, in his bedchamber.
Wol. Look'd be o' the inside of the paper?

Crom. Presently
He did unseal them: and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance: You, he had Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready
To come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me a while.— [Exit Cromwell.]

It shall be to the duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.—
Anne Bullen! No; I'll no Anne Bullen for him:
There is more in it than fair visage.—Bullen!
No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The marchioness of Pembroke!

Nor. He's discountented.

Suf. May he, he hears the king
Does whet his anger to him.

Sur. Sharp enough.

Lord, for thy justice!

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman; a knight's
To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen.—
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,
And well-deserving? yet I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-ruled king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Suf. I would, 'twere something that would fret the
The master-cord of his heart!

[Strring.]

Enter the King, reading a schedule; and LOVELL.

Suf. The king, the king.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his own portion! and what expense by the hour
Seems to flow from him? How, 's the name of thrift,
Does he rake this together?—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have Stood here observing him: Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Steps on a sudden, looks upon the ground;
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon, he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in his mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I required; And, wot you, what I found
There; on my conscience, put unwittingly?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's Heaven's will;
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings; but, I am afraid,
His thoughts are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat, and whispers Lovell, who goes to Wolsey.]

Wol. Heaven forgive me!

Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen. Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory
Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were now running o'er; you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit: Sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband; and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir,
For noly offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendence to.

K. Hen. You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will tend you cause, my doing well
With my well-saying!

K. Hen. 'Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed, to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father loved you:
He said, he did; and with his deed did crown
His word upon you. Since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,
But pared my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean?

Sur. The Lord increase this business!

K. Hen. Have I not made you
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us, or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces, shower'd on me daily, have been more than could My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all men's endeavours;—my endeavours Have ever come too short of my desires, Yet filed with my abilities: Mine own ends Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed To the good of your most sacred person, and The profit of the state. For your great graces Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I Can nothing render but allegiant thanks; My prayers to Heaven for you; my loyalty, Which ever has, and ever shall be growing, Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. Fairly answer'd;
A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: The honour of it
Does pay the act of it; as, I' the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume,
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour, more
On you, than any; so your hand, and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am, have, and will be,
Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make them, and Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

K. Hen. 'Tis nobly spoken:
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open't.—Read o'er this;
(Giving him papers.)

And, after, this: and then to breakfast, with What appetite you have.
[*Exit King, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey;
the nobles throng after him, smiling, and whispering.*]

Wol. What should this mean?
What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: So looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman, that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper;
I fear, the story of his anger.—This so;
This paper has undone me.—'Tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence,
Fit for a fool to fall by! What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know, 'twill stir him strongly; Yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune
Will bring me off again. What's this—to the Pope?
The letter, as I live, with all the business
I write to his holiness. Nay, then, farewell!
I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness;
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

Re-enter the DUKES OF NORFOLK and SUF-FOLK, the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal; who commands you

To render up the great seal presently
Into our hands; and to confine yourself
To Asher-house, my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear farther from his highness.

Wol. Star,
Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry
Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare cross them?
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?

Wol. Till I find more than will, or words, to do it,
(I mean, your malice,) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy.
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces,
As if it fed ye! and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin!

Follow your envious courses, men of malice;
You have christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,
In time will find their fit rewards. That seal,
You ask with such a violence, the king,
(Mine, and your master,) with his own hand gave me;
Bade me enjoy it, with the peace and honours,
During my life; and, to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters patents: Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The king, that gave it.
Wol. It must be himself then,
Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest;
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law;
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together.)
Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy!

You sent me deputy for Ireland; I
Fare from his succour, from the king, from all,
That might have mercy on the fault thou gavest him;
Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts; how innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I loved many words, lord, I should tell you,
You have as little honesty as honour;
That I, in the way of loyalty and truth
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou shouldst feel
My sword i' the life-blood of thee.—My lords,
Can ye endure to hear this arrogance?
And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward,
And dare us with his cap, like larks.

Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

Sur. Yes, that goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion;
The goodness of your intercepted packets,
You writ to the pope, against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.—
My lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despised nobility, our issues,
Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,—
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life;—I'll startle you
Worse than the sacring bell, when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man,
But that I am bound in charity against it!

Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand;
But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer,
And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you;
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll shew a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir;
I dare your worst objections: if a oush,
It is, to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I'd rather want those, than my head. Have at you.

First, that, without the king's assent, or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that, in all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus
Was still inscribed; in which you brought the king
To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that, without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Casalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Seef. That, out of mere ambition, you have caused Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance,

(By what means got, I leave to your own conscience,) To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways You have for dignities: to the mere undoing Of all the kingdom. Many more there are; Which, since they are of you, and odious, I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord, Press not a falling man too far; 'tis virtue: His faults lie open to the laws; let them, Not you, correct them. My heart weeps to see him So little of his great self.

Sur. I forgive him. Because all those things, you have done of late By your power legateine within this kingdom, Fall into the compass of a praemunire,— That therefore such a writ be sued against you; To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements, Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection!—This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations How to live better. For your stubborn answer, About the giving back the great seal to us, The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank you. So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

[Exeunt all but Wolsey.]
Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me. Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness! This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honours thick upon him: The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost; And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely! His greatness is a ripening,—nips his root, And then he falls, as I do. I have ventured, Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, This many summers in a sea of glory; But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride At length broke under me: and now has left me, Weary, and old with service, to the mercy Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me. Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate ye; I feel my heart new opened: O, how wretched Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favours! There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to, That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin, More pangs and fears than wars or women have; And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, Never to hope again.—

Enter CROMWELL, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell?
Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.
Wol. What, amazed At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder, A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep, I am fallen indeed.

How does your grace?
Wol. Why, well; Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell. I know myself now; and I feel within me A peace above all earthly dignities, A still and quiet conscience. The king has cured me, I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders, These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken A load would sink a navy, too much honour: O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden, Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad, your grace has made that right use of it.

Wol. I hope, I have: I am able now, methinks, Out of a fortitude of soul I feel, To endure more miseries, and greater far, Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer. What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest, and the worst, Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!
Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen Lord chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden: But he's a learned man. May he continue Long in his highness' favour, and do justice For truth's sake, and his conscience; that his bones, When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings, May have a tomb of orphan's tears wept on 'em! What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome, Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed.

Crom. Last, that the lady Anne, Whom the king hath in secrecy long married, This day was view'd in open, as his queen, Going to chapel; and the voice is now Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight, that pull'd me down.
O Cromwell,

The king has gone beyond me, all my glories In that one woman I have lost for ever: No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours, Or gold adorn the noble troops, that waited Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell; I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now To be thy lord and master: Seek the king; That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him What, and how true thou art: he will advance thee; Some little memory of me will stir him, (I know his noble nature,) not to let Thy hopeful service perish too: Good Cromwell, Neglect him not; make use now, and provide For thine own future safety.

Crom. O my lord, Must I then leave you? must I needs forgo So good, so noble, and so true a master? Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron, With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.— The king shall have my service; but my prayers For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me, Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman. Let's dry our eyes: and thus fer bear me, Cromwell; And,—when I am forgotten, as I shall be; And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee, Say, Wolsey,—that once trod the ways of glory, And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,— Poured thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in; A sure and safe one, though thy master mis'd it. Mark but my fall, and that, that ruin'd me. Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition; By that sin fell the angels, how can man then, The image of his Maker, hope to win by't? Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate thee; Corruption wins not more than honesty. Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace, To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not: Let all the ends thou aim'st at, be thy country's, Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O Cromwell, Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the king; [well, And,—Pr'ythee, lead me in: There take an inventor's of all I have, To the last penny; 'tis the king's: my robe, And my integrity to Heaven, is all I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell, Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not in mine age Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Crom. Good sir, have patience.
Wol. So I have. Farewell The hopes of court; my hopes in heaven do dwell.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You are well met once again.
2 Gent. And so are you. The lady Anne pass from her coronation?
1 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter, The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.
1 Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd sorrow; This, general joy.
2 Gent. 'Tis well: The citizens, I am sure, have shewn at full their royal minds; As, let them have their rights, they are ever forward In celebration of this day, with shews, Pageants, and sights of honour.

1 Gent. Never greater, Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.
2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains, That paper in your hand?

1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list Of those that claim their offices this day, By custom of the coronation. The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims To be high steward; next, the duke of Norfolk, He to be earl marshal: you may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir: had I not known those customs,

I should have been beholden to your paper. But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine, The princess dowager? how goes her business?

1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off From Amptill, where the princess lay; to which She oft was cited by them, but appear'd not: And, to be short, for not appearance, and The king's late scruple, by the main assent Of all these learned men she was divorced, And the late marriage made of none effect: Since which, she was removed to Kimbolton, Where she remains now sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady!—(Trumpets.) The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

THE ORDER OF THE PROCESSION.

A lively flourish of trumpets; then, enter

1. Two Judges. [him.]
2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before
3. Choristers singing. (Music.)

4. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat of arms, and on his head, a gilt copper crown.

5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronet of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports: under it, the Queen in her robe; her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I know;—Who's that, that bears the sceptre?

1 Gent. Marquis Dorset: And that the earl of Surrey, with the rod.

2 Gent. A hold brave gentleman: And that should be The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'Tis the same; high-steward.

2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk?

1 Gent. Yes.

2 Gent. Heaven bless thee!

(Looking on the Queen.)

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—

Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;

Our king has all the Indies in his arms,

And more, and richer, when he strains that lady;

I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They, that bear

The cloth of honour over her, are four barons

Of the Cinque-ports.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all, are I take it, she that carries up the train. [near her.]

Is that old noble lady, duchess of Norfolk?

1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.

2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars,

And, sometimes, falling ones. [indeed;]

1 Gent. No more of that.

[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of trumpets.]

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir? Where have you been broiling?

3 Gent. Among the crowd of the abbey; where a finger

Could not be wedged in more; and I am stifled

With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw

The ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream

Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen

To a prepared place in the choir, fell off

A distance from her, while her grace sat down

To rest a while, some half an hour, or so,

In a rich chair of state, opposing freely

The beauty of her person to the people.

Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman

That ever lay my man: which when the people

Had the full view of, such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,

As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, coats,

(Doublets, I think) flew up; and had their faces

Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy

I never saw before. Great-bellied women,

That had not half a week to go, like rains

In the old time of war, would shake the press,

And make them reel before them. No man living

Could say, This is my wife, there; and all were woeen

So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But, pray, what follow'd?

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and, saint liko,

Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly,

Then rose again, and how'd her to the people:

When by the archbishop of Canterbury

She had all the royal makings of a queen;

As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,

The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems

Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,

With all the choicest music of the kingdom,

Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,

And with the same full state paced back again

To York-place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir, you

Must no more call it York-place, that is past:

For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;

'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.

3 Gent. I know it;

But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name

Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend hishops

Were those, that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner; the one, of Winchester,

(Newly preferred from the king's secretary,)

The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester

Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,

The virtuous Cramer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that;

However, yet there's no great breach; when it comes,

Cramer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;

A man in much esteem with the king, and truly

A worthy friend.—The king

Has made him master of the jewel-house,

And one, already, of the privy-council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt.

Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which

Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests;

Something I can command. As I walk thither,

I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter KATHARINE, dowager, sick; led between GRIFFITH and PATIENCE.

Grif. How does your grace?

Kath. O Griffith, sick to death:

My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth,

Willing to leave their burden: Reach a chair;—

So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease.

Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,

That the great child of honour, cardinal Wosey,

Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; hut, I think, your grace,

Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to't.

Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stepp'd before me, happily,

For my example.

Grif. Well, the voice goes, madam:

For after the stout earl Northumberland

Arrested him at York, and brought him forward

(As a man sorely tainted) in his answer,

He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,

He could not sit his mule.

Kath. Alas, poor man!

Grif. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester,

Lodged in the abbey; where the reverend abbot,

With all his convent, honourably received him;

To whom he gave these words.—O father abbot,

An old man, broken with the storms of state,

Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;

Give him a little earth for charity!

So went to bed : where eagerly his sickness
Pursued him still ; and, three nights after this,
About the hour of eight, (which he himself Foretold should be his last,) full of reverence
Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to Heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest ; his faults lie gently on him !
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him,
And yet with charity.—He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever railing
Himself with princes ; one, that by suggestion,
Tied all the kingdom ; simony was fair play ;
His own opinion was his law ; if the presence
He would say untruths ; and be ever double,
Both in his words and meaning : He was never,
But where he meant to ruin, pitiful ;
His promises were, as he then was, mighty ;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble madam,
Mau's evil manners live in brass ; their virtues
We write in water. May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now ?

Kath. Yes, good Griffith ;
I were malicious else.

Grif. This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much honour. From his cradle,
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one ;
Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and pleasing ;
Lofly and sour to them that loved him not ;
But to those men that sought him, as sweet as summer.
And though he were unskill'd in getting,
(Which was a sin,) yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely : Ever witness for him
Those twins of learning, that he raised in you,
Hewich, and Oxford ! one of which fell with him,
Unwilling to outlive the good that did it ;
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him ;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little :
And to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died, fearing God.

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith,
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me,
With thy religious truth, and modesty ;
Now in his ashes honour : Peace be with him !—
Patience, be near me still : and set me lower :
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my kiel, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.

Sad and solemn music.

Grif. She is asleep : Good weuch, let's sit down quiet.

For fear we wake her ;—Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of bays, and golden wreaths on their faces ; branches of bays, or palm, in their hands. They first conge unto her, then dance ; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head : at which, the other four make reverend courtesies ; then the two, that held the garland, deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head ; which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order : at which, (as it were by inspiration,) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye ? Are ye all gone ?

And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye ?

Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for :
Saw ye none enter, since I slept ?

Grif. None, madam.

Kath. No ? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop
Invite me to a banquet ; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun ?

They promised me eternal happiness ;
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear : I shall,
Assuredly.

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams
Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me. (Music ceases.)

Pat. Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden ?
How long her face is drawn ? How pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold ? Mark you her eyes ?

Grif. She is going, weuch ; pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her !

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. An't like your grace,—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow :
Deserve we no more reverence ?

Grif. You are to blame,
Knowing, she will not lose her wonted greatness,
To use so rude behaviour : go to, kneel.

Mes. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon ;
My haste made me unmanly : There is staying
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith ; But this fellow
Let me ne'er see again.

[Exeunt Griffith and Messenger

Re-enter GRIFFITH, with CAPUCIUS.

If my slught fall not,
You should be lord ambassador from the emperor,
My royal nephew, and your name Capucius,
Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. O my lord,
The tunes, and titles, now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me ?

Cap. Noble lady,
First, mine own service to your grace ; the next,
The king's request, that I would visit you ;
Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me
Sends you his princely commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O my good lord, that comfort comes too late,
'Tis like a pardon after execution :
That gentle physic, given in time, had cured me ;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness ?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do I and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name
Banish'd the kingdom !—Patience, is that letter,
I caused you write, yet sent away ?

Pat. No, madam.

[Giving it to Katharine.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter :—
The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her !—
Beseeching him, to give her virtuous breeding ;
(She is young, and of a noble modest nature :
I hope, she will deserve well ;) and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that loved him.
Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully :
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
(And now I should not lie, but will deserve,
For virtue, and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty, and decent carriage.)

A right good husband, let him be a noble ;
Aid, sure, those men are happy, that shall have thee.
The last is, for my men ;—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me :—
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me by :
If Heaven had pleased to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents :—And, good my lord,
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this right.

Cap. By Heaven, I will ;
Or let me lose the fashion of a man !

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness :
Sas, his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world : tell him, in death I bless'd him.

For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet. I must to bed;
Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench,
Let me be used with honour; strew me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave; embalm me,
Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more.— [Exeunt, leading Katharine.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him, met by Sir THOMAS LOVELL.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not?
Boy. It hath struck.
Gar. These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us
To waste these times.—Good hour of night, Sir Thomas,
Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?
Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primero
With the duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too,
Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave. [matter?]
Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's the
It seems, you are in haste; an if there be
No great offence belongs to't, give your friend
Some touch of your late business: Affairs, that walk
(As, they say, spirits do) at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature, than the business
That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you;
And durst commend a secret to your ear
Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour,
They say, in great extremity; and fear'd,
She'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit, she goes with,
I pray for heartily; that it may find
Good time, and live: but for the stock, Sir Thomas,
I wish it grub'd up now.

Lov. Methinks, I could
Cry the amen; and yet my conscience says
She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does
Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,—
Hear me, Sir Thomas: You are a gentleman
Of mine own way; I know you wise, religious;
And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,—
Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take 't of me,— Till Crammer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she,
Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, ye speak of two
The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Cromwell,— Beside that of the jewel-house, he's made master
O' the rolls, and the king's secretary; farther, sir,
Stands in the gap and trade of more preferments,
With which the time will load him: The archbishop
Is the king's hand and tongue; and who dare speak
One syllable against him?

Gar. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
There are, that dare; and I myself have ventured
To speak my mind of him: and indeed, this day,
Sir, (I may tell it you,) I think I have Incensed the lords o' th' council, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is,)
A most arch heretic, a pestilence,
That does infect the land: with which they moved,
Have broken with the king; who hath so far
Given ear to our complaint, (of his great grace
And princely care; foreseeing those fell mischiefs
Our reasons laid before him,) he hath commanded,
To-morrow morning to the council oard
He be convented. He's a rank weed, Sir Thomas,
And we must root him out. From your affairs
I hinder you too long: good night, Sir Thomas.

Lov. Many good nights, my lord; I rest your servant.
[Exeunt Gardiner and Page.]

As Lovell is going out, enter the King and the DUKE OF SUFFOLK.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.

K. Hen. But little, Charles;
Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.—
Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message; who return'd her thanks
In the greatest humbleness, and desired your highness
Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou? ha.
To pray for her? what, is she crying out?
Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance made Almost each pang a death.

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!
God safely quit her of her burden, and
With gentle travail, to the gladdening of
Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles;
Prythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember
The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone;
For I must think of that, which company
Will not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness
A quiet night, and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good night.—
Exit Suffolk.

Enter SIR ANTHONY DENNY.

Well, sir, what follows?
Den. I have brought my lord the archbishop,
As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Ha! Canterbury?
Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: Where is he, Denny?
Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Bring him to us. [Exit Denny.]

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake:
I am happily come hither. (Aside.)

Re-enter DENNY, with CRANMER.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery.
(Lovell seems to stay.)

Ha!—I have said.—Begone.
What! [Exeunt Lovell and Denny.]

Cran. I am fearful:—Wherefore frowns he thus?
'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well.

K. Hen. How now, my lord? You do desire to know
Wherefore I sent for you?
Cran. It is my duty
To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. 'Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together;
I have news to tell you: Come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows:
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you; which, being consider'd,
Have moved us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us; where, I know,
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, till farther trial, in those charges,
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Tower: you a brother of us,
It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness;
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder; for, I know,
There's none stands under more calumnious tongues,
Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury;
Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted
In us, thy friend: Give me thy hand, stand up;
Prythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you
Without insurance farther.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The good I stand on is my truth and honesty.
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not how
Your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?
Your enemies
Are many, and not small; their practices
Must hear the same pronour; and not ever
The justice and the truth o' the question carries

The due of the verdict with it: At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Such things have been done.
You are potentially opposed; and with a malice
Of as great size. When you of better luck,
I mean, in perjured witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he lived
Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap, is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning see
You do appear before them: if they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you: if by entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us.
There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps,
He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!
I swear he is true-hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you.—[Exit Cranmer.]
He has strangled
His language in his tears.

Enter an old Lady.

Gen. (Within.) Come back; what mean you?
Lady. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring,
Will make my boldness manners.—Now, good angels
Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?
Say, ay; and of a boy.

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy: The God of Heaven
Both now and ever bless her!—'tis a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen
Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you
As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell,—

Enter LOVELL.

Lov. Sir,

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen. [Exit King.]

Lady. An hundred marks! By this light, I'll have An ordinary groom is for such payment. [more.]
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the girl is like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay't; and now
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Lobby before the Council-Chamber.

Enter CRANMER; Servants, Door-keeper, &c. attending.

Cran. I hope, I am not too late; and yet the gentleman.
That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast! what means this?—Ho!
Who waits there?—Sure, you know me?

D. Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor BUTTS.

Cran. So,
Butts. This is a piece of malice. I am glad
I came this way so happily: The king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit Butts.]

Cran. 'Tis Butts, (Aside.)
The king's physician: as he past along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me!
Pray Heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain,
This is of purpose laid, by some that hate me,
(God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice.)
To quench mine honest honour: they would shame to make me
Wait else at door; a fellow counsellor,
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience

Enter, at a window above, the King and BUTTS.

Butts. I'll shew your grace the strangest sight,—
K. Hen. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think, your highness saw this many a day.

K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts. There, my lord:
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, amongst pursuivants,
Pages, and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! 'Tis he, indeed:
Is this the honour they do one another?
'Tis well, there's one above them yet. I had thought
They had parted so much honesty among them,
(At least, good manners,) as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,
And at the door, too, like a post with packets.
By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:
Let them alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon.— [Exit.]

The Council-Chamber.

*Enter the Lord Chancellor, the DUKE OF SUF-FOLK, EARL OF SURREY, Lord Chamberlain,
GARDINER, and CROMWELL. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell at the lower end, as secretary.*

Chan. Speak the business, master secretary:

Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours,
The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Gar. Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop
And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.

(Cranmer approaches the council-table.)
Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry

To sit here at this present, and behold

That chair stand empty: But we all are men,

In our own natures frail; and capable

Of our flesh, few are angels: out of which frailty,

And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,

Have misdemean'd yourself, and not a little,

Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling

The whole realm, by your teaching, and your chaplains

(For so we are inform'd,) with new opinions,

Divers, and dangerous; which are heresies,

And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must he sudden too,

My noble lords; for those, that tame wild horses,

Place them not in their hands to make them gentle:

But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur

them,

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer

(Out of our easiness, and childish pity

To one man's honour) this contagious sickness,

Farewell, all physic: And what follows then?

Commotions, uproars, with a general taint

Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours,

The upper Germany, can dearly witness,

Yet freshly pitied in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress,

Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,

And with no little study, that my teaching,

And the strong course of my authority,

Might go one way, and safely: and the end

Was ever, to do well: nor is there living

(I speak it with a single heart, my lords,)

A man, that more detests, more siirs against,

Both in his private conscience, and his place,

Defacers of a public peace, than I do.

'Pray Heaven, the king may never find a heart

With less allegiance in it! Men, that make

Envy, and crooked malice, nourishment,

Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships,

That, in this case of justice, my accusers,

Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,

And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord,

That cannot be; you are a counsellor.

And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment.

We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness' pleasure,

And our consent, for better trial of you,

From hence you be committed to the Tower;

Where, being but a private man again,

You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Cran. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I thank you,
You are always my good friend; if your will pass,
I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful: I see your end,
'Tis my undoing: Love, and meekness, lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition;
Win straying souls with modesty again,
Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,
Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt, as you do conscience,
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,
That's the plain truth; your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness.

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,
By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,
However faulty, yet should find respect
For what they have been, 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary,
I ere your honour mercy; you may, worst
Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound? Not sound?

Gar. Not sound, I say.

Crom. 'Would you were half so honest!
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Do.
Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;
Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.
Chan. Then thus for you, my lord,— It stands agreed,
I take it, by all voices, that forthwith
You be conveyed to the Tower a prisoner;

To there to remain, till the king's farther pleasure

Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome:
Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Cran. For me?
Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gar. Receive him,
And see him safe to the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords,
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Chan. This is the king's ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.
Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by Heaven: I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling,
'T would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Chan. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him?
Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales, and Informations,
Against this man, (whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,)
Ye blew the fire that burns ye: Now have at ye.

Enter King, frowning on them: takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to Heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that, in all obedience, makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,
His royal self in judgment comes to hear
The cause betwixt her and this great commenda.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commenda.
Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not [tions,
To hear such flattery now, and in my presence;
They are too thin and base to hide offences.
To me you cannot reach, you play the spaniel,

And think with wagging of your tongue to win me;
But whatsoever thou takest me for, I am sure

Thou hast a cruel nature and a bloody.—
Good man, (to Crammer) sit down. Now let me see the proudest

He, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee;
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Than but once think his place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me.

I had thought, I had had men of some understanding
And wisdom of my council: but I find none.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,

This good man, (few of you deserve that title)

This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy

At chamber-door? and one as great as you are?

Why, what a shame was this? Did my commission

Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye

Power as he was a counsellor to try him,

Not as a groom: There's some of ye, I see,

More out of malice than integrity,

Would try him to the utmost, had I mean;

Which ye shall never have while I live.

Cran. Thus far,

My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace,

To let my tongue excuse all. What was purposed

Concerning his imprisonment, was rather

(If there be faith in men) meant for his trial,

And fair purgation to the world, than malice,

I am sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him;

Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it.

I will say thus much for him, if a prince

May be beholden to a subject, I

Am, for his love and service, so to him.

Make me no more ado, but all embrace him;

Be friends, for shame, my lords.—My lord of Canter-

I have a suit, which you must not deny me: [hurry,

That is, a fair young maid, that yet wants baptism,

You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory

In such an honour: How may I deserve it,

That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons; you shall have

Two noble partners with you; the old duchess of

Norfolk,

And lady marquis Dorset: Will these please you?

Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,

Embrace, and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart,

And brother-love, I do it.

Cran. And let Heaven

Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.

K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true

The common voice, I see, is verified [heart.

Of thee, which says thus, Do my lord of Canterbury

A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.

Come, lords, we trifle time away; I long

To have this young one made a Christian.

As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;

So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: Do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping,

(Within) Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hang'd, you rogue: Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree slaves, and strong ones; these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads: You must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Man. Pray, sir, be patient; 'tis as much impossible

(Unless we sweep them from the door with canons)

To scatter them, as 'tis to make them sleep

On May-day morning; which will never be:

We may as well push against Paul's, as stir them.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas, I know not: How gets the tide in?

As much as, one sound cutpel of four foot

(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,

I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand, to mow them down before me: but, if I spared any,

that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chine again; and that I would not for a cow, God save her.

(Within.) Do you hear, master porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great too come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and altogether.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in 's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head; and three times was his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pick'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I miss'd the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, clubs! when I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me. I defied them still; when suddenly a file of boys behind them, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let them win the work: The devil was among them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples; that no audience but the Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Lime-house, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the ruining banquet of two beads, that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too, from all parts they are coming, As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine hand, fellows. There's a trim raffle let in: Are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour, We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a piece, we have done: An army cannot rule them.

Cham. As I live, If the King blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines, for neglect: You are lazy knaves; And here ye lie baiting of bumbers, when Ye should do service. Hark, the trumpets sound; They are come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea, shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll pick your head ache.

Port. You 't the camblet, get up o' the rail: I'll pick you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, CRANMER, DUKE OF NORFOLK, with his marshal's staff, DUKE OF SUF-FOLK, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, godmother, bearing the Child, richly habited in a mantle, &c. Train borne by a Lady; then follows the MARCHIONESS OF DORSET, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the big and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter King and Train.

Cran. (Kneeling.) And to your royal grace, and the good queen.

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray:—All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady

Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy, May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop; What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen.

Stand up, lord.—

(The King kisses the Child.)

With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee! Into whose hands I give thy life.

Cran.

Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal: I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Cran.

Let me speak, sir,

For Heaven now bids me; and the words I utter

Let none think flattery, for they'll find them true.

This royal infant, (Heaven still move about her!) Though in her cradle, yet now promises

Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,

Which time shall bring to ripeness: She shall be

(But few now living can behold that goodness)

A pattern to all princes living with her,

And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never

More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,

Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces,

That mould up such a mighty piece as this is,

With all the virtues that attend the good,

Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her,

Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her:

She shall be loved and fear'd: Her own shall bless her:

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,

And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows with

In her days, every man shall eat in safety [her:]

Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing

The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours:

God shall be truly known; and those about her

From her shall read the perfect ways of honour,

And by those claim their greatness, not by blood.

Nor shall this peace sleep with her: But as when

The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,

Her ashes new create another heir,

As great in admiration as herself;

So shall she leave her blessedness to one,

(When Heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness,)

Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour,

Shall start like fire, as great in fame as she was,

And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant,

Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him;

Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,

His honour, and the greatness of his name

Shall be, and make new nations: He shall flourish,

And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches

To all the plains about him.—Our children's children

Shall see this, and bless Heaven.

K. Hen.

Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England,

An aged princess; many days shall see her,

And yet no day without a deed to crown it.

'Would I had known no more! but she must die,

She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin,

A most unspotted lily shall she pass

To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen.

O lord archbishop,

Thou hast made me now a man; never, before

This happy child, did I get any thing:

This oracle of comfort has so pleased me,

That, that I am in heaven, I shall desire

To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—

I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor,

And your good brethren, I am much beholden;

I have received much honour by your presence.

And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way, lords;—

Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye,

She will be sick else. This day, no man think

He has business at his house; for all shall stay,

This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE.

'Tis ten to one, this play can never please

All that are here: Some come to take their ease,

And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,

We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,

They'll say, 'tis naught; others, to hear the city

Abused extremely, and to cry,—that's witty!

Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,

All the expected good we are like to bear

For this play at this time, is only in

The merciful construction of good women:

For such a one we shew'd them: If they smile,

And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while

All the best men are ours: for 'tis ill hap,

If they hold, when their ladies bid them clap.

SCENE.—Rome; and the Country near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Capitol.

The tomb of the Andronici appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Senate. Enter, below, SATURNINUS, and his Followers, on one side; and BASSIANUS, and his Followers, on the other; with drum and colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
 Defend the justice of my cause with arms;
 And, countrymen, my loving followers,
 Plead my successive title with your swords:
 I am his first-born son, that was the last
 That wore the imperial diadem of Rome;
 Then let my father's honours live in me;
 Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of my right,—
 If ever Bassianus, Caesar's son,
 Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,
 Keep then this passage to the Capitol,
 And suffer not dishonour to approach
 The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
 To justice, continence, and nobility;
 But let desert in pure election shine;
 And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, aloft, with the crown.

Mar. Princes,—that strive by factions, and by friends,
 Ambitiously for rule and empery,—
 Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand
 A special party, have, by common voice,
 In election for the Roman empery,
 Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius,
 For many good and great deserts to Rome;
 A nobler man, a braver warrior,
 Lives not this day within the city walls:
 He by the senate is accited home,
 From weary wars against the barbarous Goths;
 That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
 Hath yoked a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
 Ten years are spent, since first he undertook
 This cause of Rome, and chastis'd with arms
 Our enemies' pride: Five times he hath return'd
 Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
 In coffins from the field;
 And now, at last, laden with honour's spoils,
 Return, the good Andronicus to Rome,
 Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
 Let us entreat,—By honour of his name,
 Whom, worthily, you would have now succeed,
 And in the Capitol and senate's right,
 Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
 That you withdraw you, and abate your strength;

Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
 Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!
 Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
 In thy uprightness and integrity,
 And so I love and honour thee and thine,
 Thy noble brother Titus, and his sons,
 And her, to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
 Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
 That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
 And to my fortunes, and the people's favour,
 Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.]
 Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my
 I thank you all, and here dismiss you all; [night
 And to the love and favour of my country
 Commit myself, my person, and the cause.

[Exeunt the Followers of Saturninus.]
 Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
 As I am confident and kind to thee.—
 Open the gates, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor.
 [Sat. and Bas. go into the Capitol, and exeunt with Senators, Marcus, &c.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter a Captain, and others.

Cap. Romans, make way: The good Andronicus,
 Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
 Successful in the battles that he fights,
 With honour and with fortune is return'd,
 From where he circumscrib'd with his sword,
 And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

Flourish of trumpets, &c. Enter MUTIUS and MARTIUS: after them, two men bearing a coffin covered with black; then QUINTUS and LUCIUS.
 After them, TITUS ANDRONICUS: and then
 TAMORA, with ALARBUS, CHIRON, DEME-
 TRIUS, AARON, and other Goths, prisoners;
 Soldiers and People, following. The bearers set down the coffin, and TITUS speaks.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!
 Lo, as the bark, that hath discharged her freight,
 Returns with precious lading to the bay,
 From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
 Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
 To re-salute his country with his tears;
 Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.—
 Thou great defender of this Capitol,
 Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!—
 Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
 Half of the number that king Priam had,
 Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
 These, that survive, let Rome reward with love;
 These, that I bring unto their latest home,
 With burial amongst their ancestors:

Here Goths have given me leave to sleath my sword.
Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unhuried yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?—
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

(The tomb is opened.)

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more?
Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile,
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthly prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappeased,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen.

Tam. Stay, Roman brethren:—Gracious conqueror,
Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O, think my son to be as dear to me.
Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs, and return,
Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O! if to fight for king and common-weal
Were piety in thine, it is in these.

Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?
Draw near them then in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge:
Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld
Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain,
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:

To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
To appease their groaning shadows that are gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consumed.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with Alarbus.]

Tam. O cruel, irreligious piety!

Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome.

Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive

To tremble under Titus' threatening look.

Then, madam, stand resolved; but hope withal,

The self same gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy

With opportunity of sharp revenge

Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,

Max favour Tamora, the queen of Goths,

(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen,)

To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with their swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd

Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,

And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,

Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.

Remaineth nought, but to inter our brethren,

And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus

Make this his latest farewell to his sons.

(Trumpets sounded, and the coffins laid in the tomb.)

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,

Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!

Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,

Here grow no damned grudges; here are no storms,

No noise, but silence and eternal sleep:

Enter LAVINIA.

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!

Lao. In peace and honour live lord Titus long;

My noble lord and father, live in fame!

Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears

I render, for my brethren's obsequies;

And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy

Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome:

O, bless me here with thy victorious hand,

Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserved

The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!

Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days,

And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, SATURNINUS, BASSIANUS, and others.

Mar. Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus,

Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,

You that survive, and you that sleep in fame.

Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,

That in your country's service drew your swords:

But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,

That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,

And triumphs over chance, in honour's bed.—

Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,

Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,

Send thee by me, their tribune, and their trust,

This palliament of white and spotless hue;

And name thee in election for the empire,

With these our late-deceased emperor's sons:

Tit. Be candidatus, then, and put it on,

And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits,

Than his that shakes for age and feebleness:

What! should I don this robe, and trouble you?

Be chosen with proclamations to-day;

To-morrow, yield up rule, resign my life,

And set abroad new business for you all?

Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,

And led my country's strength successfully;

And buried one and twenty valiant sons,

Knighthood in field, slain manfully in arms,

In right and service of their noble country:

Give me a staff of honour for mine age,

But not a sceptre to control the world:

Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empire.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?—

Tit. Patience, prince Saturnine.

Sat. Romans, do me right;—

Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them not:

Till Saturnine be Rome's emperor:—

Andronicus, would thou were shipp'd to hell,

Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good

That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee

The people's hearts, and wear them from themselves.

Bas. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,

But honour thee, and will do, till I die;

My faction, if thou strengthen with thy friends,

I will most thankful be; and thanks, to me

Of noble minds, is honourable meed.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes here,

I ask your voices, and your suffrages;

Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Trib. To gratify the good Andronicus,

And gratulate his safe return to Rome,

The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,

That you create your emperor's eldest son,

Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,

Reflect on Rome, as Titan's rays on earth,

And ripen justice in this common-weal:

Then if you will elect by my advice,

Crown him, and say,—Long live our emperor!

Mar. With voices and applause of every sort,

Patricians, and plebeians, we create

Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor:

And say,—Long live our emperor Saturnine!

(A long flourish.)

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done

To us in our election this day,

I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,

And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:

And, for an onset, Titus, to advance

Thy name and honourable family,

Lavinia will I make my empress,

Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,

And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:

Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and, in this match,

I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:

And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—

King and commander of our common-weal,

The wide world's emperor,—do I consecrate

My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners:

Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord:

Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,

Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!

How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,

Rome shall record; and when I do forget

The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. How, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor:
(To Tamora.)

To him, that for your honour and your state,
Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance;
Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,

Thou comest not to be made a scorn in Rome;
Princely shall be thy usage every way.

Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes; Madam, he comforts you,
Can make you greater than the queen of Goths,— Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lav. Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go;
Ransomless here, we set our prisoners free;

Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum.
Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.
(Seizing Lavinia.)

Tit. How, sir? Are you in earnest then, my lord?

Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and resolved withal,
To do myself this reason and this right.
(The Emperor courts Tamora in dumb show.)

Mar. Sum cuique is our Roman justice;
This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucretius live.
Tit. Traitors, avanti! Where is the emperor's
Treason, my lord; Lavinia is surpris'd. [Guard?]

Sat. Surpris'd! By whom?
Bas. By him that justly may

Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.
(Exeunt Marcus and Bassianus, with Lavinia.)

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

(Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.)
Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.
Tit. What, villain boy!

Barst me my way in Rome? (Titus kills Mutius.)
Mut. Help, Lucius, help!

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:
My sons would never so dishonour me:
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful possess'd love. [Exit.]

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Not her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock;

I'll trust by leisure him that mocks me once;
I'll never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,

Confederates all thus to dishonour me.
Was there none else in Rome to make a stale of,
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,

Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st I begg'd the empire at thy hand.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?
Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece

To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;

One fit to hand with thy lawless sons,
To ruffie in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.
Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goths,—

That, like the stately Phœbe 'mongst her nymphs,
Dost overshadow the gallant'st dames of Rome,—

If thou be pleas'd with my this sudden choice,
Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?
And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—

Sith priest and holy water are so near,
And tapers burn so bright, and every thing

In readiness for Hymeneus stands,—
I will not resalute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place

I lead espous'd my bride along with me.
Tam. And here, in sight of Heaven, to Rome I swear,

If Saturnine advance the queen of Goths,
Soe will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon:— Lords, accompany

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,

Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquer'd:

There shall we consummate our spousal rites,
[Exeunt Saturninus and his Followers; Tamora and her sons; Aaron and Golhs.]

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride:—

Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challeng'd of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Mar. O Titus, see, O, see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—
Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed

That hath dishonour'd all our family:
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes;
Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb,
This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-dified:

Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,
Repose in faoe; none basely slain in brawl;—
Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you:
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him;

He must be hurried with his brethren.
Quin & Mar. And shall, or him we will accompanv.

Tit. God shall? What villain was it spoke that word?

Quin. He that would vouch't in any place but here.
Tit. What, would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,
And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:

My foes I do repute you every one;
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mart. He is not with himself; let us withdraw.
Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

(Marcus and the sons of Titus kneel.)
Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.
Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—
Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—

Suffer thy brother Marcus to enter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous.
The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax

That slew himself; and wise Laertes' son
Did graciously plead for his funerals.

Let not young Mutius then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise:—
The dismal'st day is this, that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!

Well, bury him, and bury me the next.
(Mutius is put into the tomb.)

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb!—
All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius;

He lives in fame, that died in virtue's cause.
Mar. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps,

How comes it, that the subtle queen of Goths
Is of a sudden thus advanced in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus; but, I know, it is;
Whether by device, or no, the heavens can tell:

Is she not then beholden to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?

Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter at one side, SATURNINUS, attended; TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and AARON: At the other, BASSIANUS,
LAVINIA, and others.

Sat. So Bassianus, you have play'd your prize:
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of yours, my lord: I say no more,
Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou art thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,
My true-betroth'd love, and now my wife?

But let the laws of Rome determine all!
Meanwhile I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, sir: You are very short with us;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life.

Only this much I give you grace to know,—

Be all the duties which I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,
Is in opinion, and in honour wrong'd;
That, in the rescue of Lavinia,
With his own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you, and highly moved to wrath
To be controll'd in that he frankly gave;
Receive him then to favour, Saturnine;
That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,
A father and a friend, to thee, and Rome.
Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds;
'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me;
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have loved and honour'd Saturnine!

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious to those princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak indifferently for all;
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, madam! he dishonour'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord: The gods of Rome forefend,
I should be author to dishonour you!

But, on mine honour, dare I undertake
For good lord Titus' innocence in all,
Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs.

Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;
Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose,
Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.

My lord, he ruled by me, he won at last,
Dissemble all your griefs and discontents:
You are but newly planted in your throne;

Lest then the people, and patricians too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude,

(Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin,)
Yield at retreats, and then let me alone:
I'll find a day to massacre them all,

And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I su'd for my dear son's life;

And make them know, what 'tis to let a queen [vain.—
Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in—

Come, come, sweet emperor,—come Andronicus,—
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empire hath prevail'd.
Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord:
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.

This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;—
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconciled your friends and you.—

For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.—

And fear not, lords,—and you Lavinia;—
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do; and vow to Heaven, and to his high-
That, what we did, was mildly as we might, [ness,
Tend'ring our sister's honour, and our own.

Mir. That, on mine honour, here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not; trouble us no more.—
Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends:

The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace;
I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,
And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults.
Stand up.

Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.

Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides.
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther, and the hart with me,
With horn and hound, we'll give your grace bon-jour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gameray too. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter AARON.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning's flash;

Advanced above pale envy's threaten'g reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistening coach,
And overlooks the highest-peering hills;
So, Tamora,—

Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart; and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch; whom thou'lt in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains,
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes,
Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
Away with slavish weeds, and idle thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress.
To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis; this queen,
This syren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
And see his shipwreck, and his commonweal's.
Holla! what storm is this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,

And manner, to intrude where I am grac'd;
And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.

Chir. Demetrius, thou dost over-ween in all;
And so in this to bear me down with braves.
'Tis not the difference of a year, or two,
Makes me less gracious, thee more fortunate:

I am as able, and as fit as thou,
To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace;
And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Aar. Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.
Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvised,
Gave you a dancing-rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate grown, to threaten your friends?
Go to; have your lath glued within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.

Chir. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have,
Full well shall thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave? [They draw.
Aar. Why, how now, lords?

So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly?
Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge;
I would not for a million of gold,
The cause were known to them it most concerns,
Nor would your noble mother, for much more,
Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.

For shame, put up.
Dem. Not I; till I have sheathed
My rapier in his bosom, and, withal,
Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat,
That he hath breathed in my dishonour here.

Chir. For that I am prepared and full resolved,—
Foul-sworn coward! that thunder'st with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing darrest perform.

Aar. Away, I say.—
Now, by the gods that wak'd us Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all.—
Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous
It is to jut upon a prince's right?
What, is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd,
Without controulment, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware!—an should the empress know
This discord's ground, the music would not please.

Chir. I care not, I, knew she and all the world;
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:
Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chir. Aaron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To achieve her whom I love.

Aar. To achieve her!—How?
Dem. Why makest thou it so strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be loved.
What, man! more water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:

Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother.
Better than he have yet worn Vulcan's hodge.

Aar. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may. (Aside.)

Dem. Then why should he despair, that knows to court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?
What, hast thou not full often struck a doe,
And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aar. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch or do
Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were served.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. 'Would you had hit it too;

Then should not we be tired with this ado.
Why, hark ye, hark ye,—And are you such fools,
To square for this? Would it offend you then
That both should speed?

Chi. 'Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me,

So I were one.

Aar. For shame, be friends; and join for that you jar.
His policy and stratagem must do

That you affect; and so must you resolve:
That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,
You must perforce accomplish as you may.

Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.

A speedier course than lingering languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.

My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:

The forest walks are wide and spacious;
And many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy;

Single you thither then this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:

This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit,
To villainy and vengeance consecrate,

Will we acquaint with all that we intend;
And she shall file our engines with advice,

That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.

The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears:

The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull;
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns;

There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fas aut nefas, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
Per Stygia, per manes vehor. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Forest near Rome. A Lodge seen at a distance. Horns, and cry of hounds heard.

Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with Hunters, &c.
MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey,
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green;

Uncouple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince; and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.

Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To tend the emperor's person carefully:

I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspired.

Horns wind a peal. Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and Attendants.

Tit. Many good-morrrows to your majesty;—
Madam, to you as many and as good.

I promised your grace a hunter's peal.

Sat. And you have wrung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say, no; I have been broad awake two hours and more.

Sat. Come on then; horse and chariots let us have,
And to our sport:—Madam, now shall ye see
Our Roman hunting. (To Tamora.)

Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. (Aside.) Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse
nor hound,

But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A desert part of the Forest.

Enter AARON, with a bag of gold.

Aar. He that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.

Let him, that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know, that this gold must coin a stratagem;

Which, cunningly effected, will heget
A very excellent piece of villainy;

And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their aims out of the empress' chest.

(Hides the gold.)

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

The birds chaunt melody on every bush;
The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun;

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind;
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground:

Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And—whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tuned horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,—

Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise;
And—after conflict, such as was supposed

The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,

And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,

Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
Whilst hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us, as is a nurse's song

Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Satur'n is dominator over mine:

What signifies my deadly standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy?

My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll

To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs;

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

Hark, Tamora,—the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,—

This is the day of doom for Bassianus;
His Phylomel must lose her tongue to-day:

Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.

Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll:—

Now question me no more, we are espied;
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!
Aar. No more, great empress, Bassianus comes:

Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To hack thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.]

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Bas. Whom have we here? Rome's royal empress,
Unfurnish'd of her well-beseeing troop?

Or is it Dian, habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,

To see the general hunting in this forest?

Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps!
Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently

With horns, as was Actæon's; and the hounds
Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in horning;

And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments:

Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day!
'Tis pity, they should take him for a stag.

Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train?
Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moor?

If foul desire had not conducted you?
Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness.—I pray you, let us hence,

And let her 'joy her raven-colour'd love ;

This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Baz. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long :
Good king ! to be so mightily abused !

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this ?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother.

Why does your highness look so pale and wan ?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale ?

These two have 'ticed me bitter to this place,
A barren detested vale, you see, it is :

The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful misetoe.

Here never shines the sun ; here nothing breeds
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven.

And, when they shew'd me this ahorr'd pit,
They told me here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.

No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew ;
And leave me to this miserable death,
And then they call'd me, foul adulteress,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect.

And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed.

Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not from henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to shew my strength.

Lav. Ay come, Semiramis,—nay, barbarous Tamora !
For no name fits thy nature but thy own !

Tam. Give me thy poniard ; you shall know, my boys,

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her ;
First, thrash the corn, then after burn the straw :

This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted hope braves your mightiness :

And shall she carry this unto her grave ?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an emuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when you have the honey you desire,
Let not this wasp out-live, us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam ; we will make that sure.—

Come mistress, now perforce we will enjoy
That nice-preserv'd honesty of yours.

Lav. O Tamora ! thou bear'st a woman's face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak ; away with her.

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me hut a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam : Let it be your glory
To see her tears ; but be your heart to them,
As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam ?

O, do not learn her wrath ; she taught it thee :

The milk thou suck'd'st from her, did turn to marble ;
Even at thy teat thou had'st thy tyranny.—

Yet every mother breeds not sons alike ;
Do thou entreat her shew a woman pity.

(To Chiron.)

Chi. What ! wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard ?

Lav. 'Tis true ; the raven doth not hatch a lark ;
Yet have I heard, (O could I find it now !)

The lion, moved with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws pared all away.

Some say, that ravens foster forlorn children,
The whilst their own birds famish in their nests :

O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful.

Tam. I know not what it means ; away with her.

Lav. O, let me teach thee ! for my father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tam. Hadst thou been in person ne'er offended me,
Even for his sake am I pitiless.

Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain,
To save your brother from the sacrifice ;

But fierce Andronicus would not relent :

Therefore away with her, and use her as you will ;

The worse to her, the better loved of me.

Lav. O Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen,
And with thine own bands kill me in this place :

For 'tis not life, that I have begg'd so long ;
Poor I was slain, when Bassianus died.

Tam. What begg'st thou then ? fond woman, let me go.

Lav. 'Tis present death I beg ; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell :

O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,
And tumble me into some loathsome pit ;
Where never man's eye may behold my body :

Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their foe :

No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Dem. Away, for thou hast staid us here too long.

Lav. No grace ? no womanhood ? Ah, beastly creature !

The blot and enemy to our general name !
Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth :—Bring thou her husband ; (Dragg off Lavinia.)

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

(Exit.)

Tam. Farewell, my sons ; see, that you make her sure ;

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed,
Till all the Andronio be made away.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,
And let my sploenful sons this trull deflower. (Exit.)

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter AARON, with QUINTUS and MARTIUS

Aar. Come on, my lords ; the better foot before :

Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit,
Where I espied the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, what'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you ; were't not for shame,
Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.

(Martius falls into the pit.)

Quin. What art thou fallen ? What subtle hole is this,
Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briars ;
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers ?
A very fatal place it seems to me :—

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall ?

Mart. O brother, with the dimmest object
That ever eye, with sight, made heart lament.

Aar. (Aside.) Now will I fetch the king to find them
That he thereby may give a likely guess. [Here :
How these were they that made away his brother. (Exit.)

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole ?

Quin. I am surpris'd with an uncouth fear :

A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints ;
My heart suspects more than mine eyes can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,
Aaron and thou look down into this den,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone ; and my compassionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing, wherewith it trembles by surmise :

O, tell me how it is ; for ne'er till now
Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrowed here,
All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he ?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Doth shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,
And shews the ragged entrails of this pit :

So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bathed in maiden blood.

O brother, help me with thy fainting hand,—
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Cocytus' misty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out ;
Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more ; I will not loose again,
Till thou art here aloft, or I below :

Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee. (Falls in.)

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here,
And what he is, that now is leap'd into it.—
Say, who art thou, that lately did'st descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus;
Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead? I know, thou dost but jest;
He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,
But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, with Attendants; TITUS
ANDRONICUS, and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord the king?

Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing
Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus? [cries]

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound;
Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ,
(Giving a letter.)

The plot of this timeless tragedy;

And wonder greatly that man's face can fold

In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. (Reads.) An if we miss to meet him hand-somerly,—

Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,—

Do thou so much as dig the grave for him;

Thou know'st our meaning: Look for thy reward

Among the nettles at the elder-tree,

Which overshades the mouth of that same pit,

Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.

Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.

O Tamora! was ever heard the like?

This is the pit, and this the elder-tree.

Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out,

That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.
(Shewing it.)

Sat. Two of thy whelps, (to Tit.) fell curs of bloody
Have here bereft my brother of his life:— [kind,

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison;

There let them bide, until we have devised

Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit? O wondrous thing!
How easily murder is discovered!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee

I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,

That this fell fault of my accursed sons,
Accursed, if the fault be proved in them,—

Sat. If it be proved; you see, it is apparent.—
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord; yet let me be their bail:

For by my father's reverend tomb, I vow,
They shall be ready at your highness' will,

To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them; see, thou follow me.
Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:

Let them not speak a word, the guilt is plain;

For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king;

Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.
[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVI-
NIA, ravished; her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,
Who 'twas that cut thy tongue, and ravish'd thee.

Chf. Write down the mind, bewray thy meaning so;
And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.

Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can scowl.

Chf. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash.

And so let 's leave her to her silent walks.

Chf. An 'twere my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit the cord.
[Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron.]

Enter MARCUS.

Mar. Who's this?—my niece, that flies away so fast?
Coincidence, a word; where is your husband?—

If I do dream, 'would all my wealth would wake me!

If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!
Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lupp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches? those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in;
And should not gain so great a happiness,
As half thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—
Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy ros'd lips,
Coming and going with thy boney breath.
But, sure, some Tereus hath deflower'd thee;
And, lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy tongue.
Ah! now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—
Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face,
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so?
O, that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him to ease my mind!
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A craftier Tereus hast thou met withal,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That better could have sew'd than Philomel.
O, had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them,
He would not then have touch'd them for his life;
Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made,
He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.
Come, let us go, and make thy father blind;
For such a sight will blind a father's eye:
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes?
Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee:
O, could our mourning ease thy misery! [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with MARTIUS and QUINTUS, bound, passing on to the place of execution; TITUS going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!

For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent

In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;

For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;

And for these bitter tears, which now you see

Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;

Be pitiful to my condemned sons,

Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought!

For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed.

For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write (Throwing himself on the ground.)

My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.

Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;

My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[Exeunt Sen. Trib. &c. with the prisoners.]

O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns,
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:

In summer's drought, I'll drop upon thee still;

In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou returnst to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter LUCIUS, with his sword drawn.

O reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!

Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;

And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O noble father, you lament in vain;

The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead;

Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear,

They would not mark me; or, if they did mark,

All bootless to them, they'd not pity me.
Therefore, I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet, in some sort, they're better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And, were they but attir'd in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones:
A stone is silent, and offendeth not;
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.
But wherefore standst thou with thy weapon drawn?
Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death:
For which attempt, the judges have pronounced
My everlasting doom of banishment.
Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee,
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: How happy art thou then,
From these devourers to be banished?
But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weep;
Or, if 't is so, thy noble heart to break:
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.
Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it then.
Mar. This was thy daughter.
Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.
Luc. Ah me! this object kills me!
Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her:—
Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee harmless in thy father's sight?
What fool hath added water to the sea?
Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy?
My grief was at the height before thou camest,
And now, like Nilus, it disdaineth bounds.—
Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain;
And they have nursed this wo, in feeding life;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have served me to effectless use:
Now, all the service I require of them
Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—
'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;
For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.
Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?
Mar. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage;
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

Luc. O, say thou for her, who hath done this deed?
Mar. O, thus I found her, straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,
That hath received some unrecuring wound.
Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her,
Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the waxing tide grow wavy by waves,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sons are gone:
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man;
And here my brother, weeping at my woes;
But that, which gives my soul the greatest spurn,
Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.—
Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,
It would have maddened me; what shall I do
Now I behold thy lively body so?
Thou hast no hands, to wipe away thy tears;
Nor tongue, to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband he is dead; and, for his death,
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this:—
Look, Marcus! ah, son Lucius, look on her!
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks; as doth the honey dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.
Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her husband:
Perchance, because she knows them innocent.
Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,
Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them.—
No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—
Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;
Or make some signs how I may do thee ease:
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain;
Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks

How they are stain'd; like meadows, yet not dry
With miry slime left on them by a flood?
And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,
And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears?
Or shall we eate away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows
Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues,
Plot some device of farther misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.
Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for, at your grief,
See, how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.
Mar. Patience, dear niece:—Good Titus, dry thine
eyes.
Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine,
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.
Luc. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.
Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs
Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee;
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O, what a sympathy of ho is this?
As far from help as limbo is from bliss!

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—That if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king; he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive;
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.
Tit. O gracious emperor! O gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's arising?
With all my heart, I'll send the emperor
My hand:
Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?
Luc. Stay, father: for that noble band of thine,
That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn:
My youth can better spare my blood than you;
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.
Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemies' castles?
O, none of both but are of high desert:
My hand hath been but idle; let it serve
To ransom me two nephews from their death:
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.
Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,
For fear they die before their pardon come.
Mar. My hand shall go.
Luc. By Heaven, it shall not go.
Tit. Sirs, strive no more; such wither'd herbs as these
Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.
Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,
Let me redeem my brothers both from death.
Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's care,
Now let me shew a brother's love to thee.
Tit. Agree between you: I will spare my hand.
Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.
Mar. But I will use the axe.
[Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.]
Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both;
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.
Aar. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,
And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—
But I'll deceive you in another sort,
And that you'll say, ere half an hour can pass.
(Aside. He cuts off Titus' hand.)

Enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Now, say your strife; what shall be, is despatch'd.—
Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers: bid him bury it;
More hath it merited, that let it have,
As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purchased at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.
Aar. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand,
Look by and by to have thy sons with thee:—
Their heads, I mean.—O how thy villainy
Doth fat me with the very thought of it!
Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soul black like his face. [Exit]

Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to Heaven,
And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:
If any power pities wretched tears,
To that I call.—What, wilt thou kneel with me?

(To Lavinia.)

Do then, dear heart; for Heaven shall hear our prayers;
Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,
And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds,
When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O brother, speak with possibilities,
And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.
Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I bind my woes;
When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth overflow?
If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,
Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swollen face?
And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?
I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do blow!
She is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
Then must my sea be mov'd with her sighs;
Then must my earth with her continual tears
Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd:
For why? my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them.
Then give me leave; for losers will have leave
To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.

Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;
And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back;
Thy kiefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd;
That was me to think upon thy woes,
More than remembrance of my father's death. [Exit.]

Mar. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,
As be my heart an ever-burning hell!
These miseries are more than may be borne!
To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal,
But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,
And yet detested life not shrink thereat!
That ever death should let life bear his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breathe!

(Lavinia kisses him.)

Mar. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless,
As frozen water to a starv'd snake.

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Mar. Now farewell flattery: Die, Andronicus!
Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two sons' heads;
Thy warlike hand; thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other banish'd son, with thy dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah! now no more will I control thy griefs:
Rent off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes!
Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed;
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon mine wat'ry eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears;
Then which way shall I find revenge's cave?

For these two heads do seem to speak to me;
And threat me, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heary people, circle me about,

That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made.—Come, brother, take a head;
And in this hand the other will I bear:
Lavinia, thou shalt be employ'd in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.
As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight;
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:
Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there:
And, if you love me, as I think you do,
Let a kiss and part, for we have much to do.

(Exeunt Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia.)

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The wofullest man that ever lived in Rome!
Farewell, proud Rome! till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.

Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou wert as thou 'fore hast been!
But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs;
And make proud Saturninus and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be revenged on Rome and Saturnus. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Titus's House. A Banquet set out.

Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and young LUCIUS, a boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit; and look, you eat no more
Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unkitt that sorrow-wreathen knot;
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this holow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!

(To Lavinia.)

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole;
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and, soaking in,
Drown he lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fy, brother, fy! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! I have sorrow made thee dote already?
Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;—
To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands;
Lest we remember still, that we have none.—
Fy, fy, bow frantically I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands,

If Marcus did not name the word of hands:—
Come, let's fall to: and, gentle girl, eat this:—
Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says,—
I can interpret all her martyr'd signs,—
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrows, mesh'd upon her cheeks:—
Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect,
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:

Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
And, by still practice, learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments;
Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art mad of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—
(Marcus strikes the dish with a knife.)

What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Mar. At that that I have kill'd, my lord,—a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny;
A deed of death, done on the innocent,
Becomes us Titus' brother: Get thee gone;
I see, thou art uot for my company.

Mar. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and a mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly!

That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-favour'd fly,
Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O!
Then pardon me for reproaching thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.

Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor,
Come hither purposely to poison me.—
There's a for thyself, and that's for Tamor.—
Ah, sirrah!—

Yet I do think we are not brought so low,
But that, between us, we can kill a fly.
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Mar. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him,
He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia go with me:
I'll to thy closet, and go read with thee—
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.—
Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Before Titus's House.

Enter TITUS and MARCUS. Then enter young LUCIUS, LAVINIA running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia
Follows me every where, I know not why:—
Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes!
Alas, stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.
Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.
Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.
Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?
Tit. Fear her not, Lucius:—Somewhat doth she mean:

See, Lucius, see how much she makes of this:
Somewhat would she have thee go with her.
Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee,
Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.
Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not I, nor can I guess,
Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her:
For I have heard my grandsire say full oft,
Extremity of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read, that Heccuba of Troy
Ran mad through sorrow: That made me to fear;
Although, my lord, I know my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth:
Which made me down to throw my books, and fly,
Causeless, perhaps: But pardon me, sweet aunt:
And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will.

(Lavinia turns over the books which Lucius has left fall.)

Tit. How now, Lavinia?—Marcus, what means this?
Some book there is, that she desires to see—
Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.—
But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd;
Come, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.—
Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than one

Confederate in the fact;—Ay, more there was:
Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she tosseth so?

Boy. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis;
My mother gave 't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps she cull'd it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see, how busily she turns the leaves
Help her—

What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read?
This is the tragic tale of Philomel,
And treats of Terent's treason, and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy. [Leaves.]

Mar. See, brother, see! none, how she quotes the
Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surprised, sweet girl, Ravish'd, and wrong'd, as Philomela was,
Forced in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?—
See, see!—

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,
(O, had we never, never hunted there!)
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Mar. O, why should nature build so foul a den,
Unless the gods delight in tragedies!

Tit. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends,—

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left the camp to sin in Lucrece's bed?

Mar. Sit down, sweet niece;—brother, sit down by me.—

Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,

Inspire me, that I may this treason find!—
My lord, look here;—Look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,
This after me, when I have writ my name
Without the help of any hand at all.

(He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with his feet and mouth.)

Cursed be that heart, that forced us to this shift!—
Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,
What God will have discover'd for revenge:
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain,
That we may know the traitors, and the truth!

(She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps, and writes.)

Tit. O, do you read, my lord, what she hath writ?
Stuprum—Chiron—Demetrius.

Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora
Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. Magne Dominator poli,
Tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?

Mar. O, calm thee, gentle lord! although I know,
There is enough written upon this earth,
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
And arm the minds of infants to exclams.

My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel;
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope;
And swear with me,—as with the woful fere,
And father, of that chaste dishonour'd dano,
Lord Junius Brutus aware for Lucrece' rape,—
That we will prosecute, by good advice,
Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goughs,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, as you knew how,
But if you hurt these bear-whelps, then beware;
The dam will wake; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her hack,
And, when he sleeps, will she do what she list.
You're a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And, with a gad of steel, will write these words,
And lay it by: the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sibyl's leaves, abroad,
And where's your lesson then?—Boy, what say you?

Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad bond-men to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath fill oft
For this ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And, uncle, so will I, as if I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury;
Lucius, I'll fit thee; and withal, my boy,
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents, that I intend to send them both:
Come, come; thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?

Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandsire.

Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another course.
Lavinia, come.—Marcus, look to my house;
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court;
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.

[Exeunt Titus, Lavinia, and Boy.]

Mar. O Heavens, can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him?—
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasies;
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield:
But yet so just, that he will not revenge!—
Revenge the Heavens for old Andronicus! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter AARON, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, at one door; at another door, young LUCIUS, and an Attendant, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius;
He hath some message to deliver to us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus;—
And pray the Roman gods confound you both!

(Aside.)

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: What's the news?

Boy. That you are both decipher'd, that's the news,
For villains, mark'd with rape. (Aside.) May it please
you,

My grandsire, well-advised, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth;

The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say,
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that, whenever you have need,

You may be armed and appointed well :
And so I leave you both, (Aside.) Like bloody villains.

Dem. What's here? a scroll; and written round about?

Let's see:

Integer vite, scelerisque purus,

Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu.

Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well :
I read it in the grammar long ago.

Aar. Ay, just!—a verse in Horace;—right, you have it.

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!

Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt;

And sends the weapons wrapp'd about with lines, [quick.] Aside.

That wound, beyond their feeling, to the
But were our witty empress well-a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.
But let her rest in her unrest awhile.—

And now, young lords, was't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and, more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height?

It did me good, before the palace gate,
To brave the tribute in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Barely insulted, and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, lord Demetrius?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.
Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.
Dem. Come, let us go; and pray to all the gods

For our beloved mother in her pains.
Aar. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us o'er.

(Aside. Flourish.)

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus?
Chi. B'like, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft; who comes here?

Enter a Nurse, with a black-a-moor child in her arms.

Nur. Good-morrow, lords:
O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor.

Aar. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

Nur. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone!
Now help, or we betide thee evermore!

Chi. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep?
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms?

Nur. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye,
Our empress's shame, and state's Rome's disgrace;—
She is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd!

Aar. To whom?

I mean, she is brought to bed.

Aar. Well, God
Give her good rest! What hath he sent her?

Nur. A devil.

Aar. Why, then she's the devil's dam; a joyful issue.
Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Out, out, you whore! is black so base a hue?—
Sweet blowse, you are a beautiful blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?
Nur. Done I that which thou

Canst not undo. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Wo to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choice!

Accused the offspring of so foul a fiend!
Chi. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must: the mother wills it so.

Aar. What, must it, nurse? then let no man, but I,
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point;
Nurse, give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plow thy bowels up.
(Takes the child from the Nurse, and draws.)

Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother?
Now, by the burning vapors of the sky,

That shone so brightly when this boy was got,
He dies upon his scimitar's sharp point,

That touches this my first-born son and heir!
I tell you, younglings, not Encecladus,

With all his threst'ning band of Typhon's brood,

Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what, ye sanguine shallow-hearted boys!
Ye white-lim'd walls! ye alehouse painted signs!

Coal-black is better than another hue,
In that it scorns to bear another hue:

For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn a swan's black legs to white,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood,
Tell the empress from me, I am of age

To keep mine own; excuse it how she can.
Dem. Will't thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself;
The vigour, and the picture of my youth:

This, before all the world do I prefer;
This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.
Dem. By this our mother is for ever shamed.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.
Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will donm her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignominy.
Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty hears:

Fv, treacherous hue! that will betray with blushing
The close enacts and counsels of the heart!

Here's a young lad framed of another leer:
Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father;

As who should say, Old lad, I am thine own.
He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed

Of that self-blood that first gave life to you;
And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,

He is enfranchis'd and come to light:
Nay, he's your brother by the surer side,

Although my seal be stamped in his face.
Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice;

Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.
Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.

My son and I will have the wind of you:
Keep there: Now talk at pleasure of your safety.

(They sit on the ground.)

Dem. How many women saw this child of his?
Aar. Why, so, brave lords: When we all join in league,

I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor,

The chaf'd bear, the mountain lioness,
The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms.—

But, say again, how many saw the child?
Nur. Cornelia the midwife, and myself,

And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.
Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself:

Two may keep counsel, when the third's away:
Go to the empress; tell her, this I said:—

(Slabing her.)

Weke, weke!—so eries a pig prepared to the spit.
Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore didst thou this?

Aar. O lord, sir, 'tis a deed of policy:

Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours?
A long-tongued babbling gosip? no, lords, no.

And now be it known to you my full intent.
Not far, one Multives lives, my countryman,

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed;
His child is like to her, fair as you are:

Go pack with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all;

And how by this their child shall be advanced,
And be received for the emperor's heir,

And substituted in the place of mine,
To calm this tempest whirling in the court;

And let the emperor dandle him for his own.
Hark ye, lords; ye see that I have given her physic,

(Pointing to the Nurse.)
And you must needs bestow her funeral;

The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms:
This done, see that you take no longer days,

But send the midwife presently to me.
The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,

Then let the ladies tattle what they please.
Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air

With secrets.
Dem. For this care of Tamora,

Herself, and hers, are highly bound to thee.
[Exeunt Dem. and Chi. bearing off the Nurse.]

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies;
There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,

And secretly to greet the empress's friends.—
Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you hence;

For it is you that put us in our shifts:
I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,

And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up

To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. A public Place.

Enter TITUS, bearing arrows, with letters at the ends of them; with him MARCUS, young LUCIUS, and other Gentlemen, with bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, oome;—Kinsmen, this is the way!—

Sir hoy, now let me see your archery; Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight: Terras Astræa reliquit!

Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled, Sirs, take you to your toots. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets; Happily you may find her in the sea; Yet there's as little justice as at land:—

No; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it; 'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade, And pierce the inmost centre of the earth;

Then, when you come to Pluto's region, I pray you, deliver him this petition; Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid; And that it comes from old Andronicus, Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.— Ah, Rome!—Well, well; I made thee miserable, What time I threw the people's suffrages On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.— Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all, And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd; This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence, And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Mar. O Publius, is not this a heavy case, To see thy noble uncle thus distract?

Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns, By day and night to attend him carefully; And feed his humour kindly as we may, Till time beget some careful remedy.

Mar. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy, Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude, And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius, how now? how now, my masters? What, have you met with her?

Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word, If you will have revenge from hell, you shall; Marry, for Justice, she is so employ'd, He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or somewhere else, So that perforce, you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong, to feed me with delays.

I'll dive into the burning lake below, And quill her out of Acheron by the heels.— Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we; No big-boned men, framed of the Cyclops' size; But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back; Yet wrung with wrongs, more than our backs can bear And, sith there is no justice in earth nor hell, We will solicit heaven; and move the gods, To send down Justice for to wreak our wrongs: Come, to this gear. You are an archer, Marcus.

(He gives them the arrows.)

Ad Jovem, that's for you:—Here, ad Apollinem:—

Ad Martem, that's for myself:—Here, to Mercury:

To Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnine,—

You were as good to shoot against the wind.—

To it, boy. Marcus, loose when I bid:

O my word, I have written to effect:

There's not a god left unsolicited.

Mar. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court:

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. (They shoot.) O, well said,

Good boy, in Virgo's lap; give it Pallas. [Lucius!]

Mar. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon;

Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?

See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus's horns.

Mar. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot,

The bull being gall'd gave Aries such a knock,

That down fell both the ram's horns in the court,

And who should find them but the empress's villain?

She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not chouse

But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes: God give your lordship joy!

Enter a Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons.

News, news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come.—

Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?

Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clow. Ho! the gibbet-maker? he says, that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?

Clow. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter; I never drauk with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art thou not the carrier?

Clow. Ay, of me pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst not thou come from heaven?

Clow. From heaven? alas, sir, I never came there: God forbid, I should be so hold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal piebs, to take up a matter of hrawl hetwix my uncle and one of the imperial's men.

Mar. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clow. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither; make no more ado,

But give your pigeons to the emperor:

By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.

Hold, hold!—mean while, here's money for thy charges.

Give me a penny and ink.—

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?

Clow. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach, you must kneel; then kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons; and then look for your reward: I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.

Clow. I warrant you, sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it.

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration;

For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant:—

And when thou hast given it to the emperor,

Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clow. God be with you, sir; I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let's go:—Publius, follow me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, Lords, and others. Saturninus, with the arrows in his hand, that Titus shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? Was ever

An emperor of Rome thus overborne, [seen

Troubled, confronted thus; and, for the extent

Of legal justice, used in such contempt?

My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods,

However these disturbers of our peace

Buzz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,

But even with law, against the wilful sons

Of old Andronicus. And what an if

His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,

Shall we be thus afflicted in his weaks,

His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?

And now he writes to heaven for his redress:

See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury;

This to Apollo; this to the god of war:

Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome!

What's this, but libelling against the senate,

And blazoning our injustice every where?

A goodly humour, is it not, my lords?

As who should say, in Rome no justice were,

But, if I live, his feigned ecstasies

Shall be no shelter to these outrages;

But he and his shall know, that justice lives

In Saturninus' health: whom, if she sleep,

He'll so awake, as she in fury shall

Cut off the proud'st conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,

Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,

Calm thee, and hear the faults of Titus' age,

The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,

Whose loss hath pierced him deep, and scarr'd his

And rather comfort his distressed plight, [heart:]

Than prosecute the meanest, or the best,

For these contempns.—Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to glow with all: [Aside.]

But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,

Thy life-blood out: if Aaron now be wise,

Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow? wouldst thou speak with us?

Clow. Yes, forsooth, an your mistress be imperial.

Tam. Empress, I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clow. 'Tis he.—God, and saint Stephen, give you good den: I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here. [Saturninus reads the letter.]

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clow. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hang'd.

Clo. Hang'd! By'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. (Exit, guarded.)

Sat. Despiteful and intolerable wrongs!
Shall I endure this monstrous villainy?
I know from whence this same device proceeds;
May this be borne?—as if his traitorous soins,
That died by law for murder of our brother
Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.—
Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;
Nor sue, nor honour, shall shape privilege.—
For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughter-man;
Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make me great,
In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter ÆMILIUS.

What news with thee, Æmilius? [cause!]

Æmil. Arm, arm, my lords; Rome never had more
The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power
Of high-resolv'd men, bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain, under conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;
Who threatens, in course of this revenge, to do
As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?
These tidings nip me; and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.
Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach:
'Tis he the common people love so much;
Myself hath often overheard them say,

(When I have walk'd like a private man,
That Lucius's banishment was wrongfully,
And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?
Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius;
And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy name.
Is the sun dimm'd, that gnats do fly in it?

The eagle suffers little birds to sing,
And is not careful what they mean thereby;
Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,
He can at pleasure stint their melody:
Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome.
Then cheer thy spirit: for know, thou emperor,
I will enchant the old Andronicus,
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,
Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep;
When as the one is wounded with the bait,
The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not treat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will:
For I can smooth, and fill his good ear
With golden promises; that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.—
Go thou before, be our ambassador: (To Æmil.)
Say, that the emperor requests a parley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.
Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

Sat. Æmilius, do this message honourably:
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Æmil. Your bidding shall I do effectually. (Exit Æmilius.)

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus;
And temper blm, with all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him. (Exeunt.)

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter LUCIUS and Goths, with drum and colours.

Luc. Approv'd warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify, what hate they bear their emperor,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious, and impatient of your wrongs;
And, wherein Rome hath done you any scath,
Let him make tremble satisfaction.

1 Goth. Brave slip, springing from the great Andronicus,
Whose name was once in my comfort;
Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds,
Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt,
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,—
Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day,

Led by their master to the flower'd fields,—
And be avenged on cursed Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.
Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.
But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading AARON, with his child in his arms.

2 Goth. Renown'd Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,
To gaze upon a ruinous monastery;
And as I earnestly did fix mine eye
Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall:
I made unto the noise: when soon I heard
The crying babe controll'd with this discourse:
Peace, tawny slave! half me, and half thy dam!
*Did not thy hue bewray whose brat thou art,
Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,
Villain, thou mightst have been an emperor:
But where the bull and cow are both milk-white,
They never do beget a coal-black calf.
Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the babe,—
For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;
Who, when he knows thou art the empress' babe,
Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake.*
With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,
Surpris'd him suddenly; and brought him hither,
To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil,
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the pearl that pleased your empress' eye;
And here 's the base fruit of his burning lust.—
Say, wall-eyed slave, whether wouldst thou convey
This growing image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What! deaf? No; not a word?
A halter, soldiers; hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy, he is royal blood.

Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
First hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.
Get me a ladder.

(A ladder brought, which Aaron is obliged to ascend.)

Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
I'll speak no more; but vengeance rot you all!

Luc. Say on; and, if it please me, thou shalt speak'st,
And I'll be thy slave, and I will see it nourish'd.

Aar. An if it please thee? why, assure thee, Lucius,
'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak:
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason; villainies
Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd:
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say, thy child shall live.

Aar. Swear, that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st no god;

That granted, how canst thou helieve an oath?

Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not:
Yet,—for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, call'd conscience;
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—
Therefore I urge thy oath: For that, I know,
An idiot holds his bauble for a god,
And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears:
To that I'll urge him.—Therefore, thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god so'er it be,
That thou adorest and hast in reverence,—
To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up,
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god, I swear to thee, I will.

Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most insatiate, luxurious woman!

Aar. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.

'Twas her two sons that murder'd Bassianus;

They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,

And cut her hands; and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;
and 'twas

Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them;

That colding spirit had their from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set;

That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.—
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guleful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay;
I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And hid the gold within the letter mention'd;
Confederate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?
I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand;
And when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When, for his hand, he had his two son's heads;
Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his;
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swoonded almost at my pleasing tale,
And, for my tidings, gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.

Even now I curse the day, (and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse,
Wherein I did not some notorious ill:
As kill a man, or else devise his death;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself;
Sat deadly enmity between two friends;
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.
Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Luc. Bring down the devil; for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aar. If there be devils, 'twould I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire;
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue! [more.]

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.—

Enter ÆMILIUS.

Welcome, Æmilius, what's the news from Rome?
Æmil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,
The Roman emperor greets you all by me;
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He craves a parley at your father's house,
Willing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

I Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Æmilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come.—March away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. Before Titus's House.

Enter TAMORA, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habiliment,
I will encounter with Andronicus;
And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs,
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies. (They knock.)

Enter TITUS, above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?
Is it your trick, to make me open the door;
That so my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?
You are deceiv'd; for what I mean to do,
See here, in bloody lines I have set down;
And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No, not a word: How can I grace my talk,

Wanting a hand to give it action?

Thou hast the odds of me, therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou wouldst talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:
Witness this wretched stump, these crimson lines;
Witness these trenches, made by grief and care;
Witness the tiring day, and heavy night;
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud empress, mighty Tamora:
Is not thy coming for my other hand?

Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora;
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend:

I am Revenge; sent from the infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working wreakful vengeance on thy foes.
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light;
Confer with me of murder and of death:
There's not a hollow cave, nor lurking-place,
Nor vast obscurity, or misty vale,
Where bloody murder, or detested rape,
Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;
And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,
Revenge, which makes the foul offender quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine enemies?

Tam. I am; and therefore come down, and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.

Lo, by thy side where Rape and Murder stands;

Now give some surance that thou art Revenge;

Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels;

And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner,

And whirl along with thee about the globe.

Provide thee proper paltries, black as jet,

To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away;

And find out murderers in their guilty caves;

And, when thy car is laden with their heads,

I'll dismount, and by the waggon wheel

Trot, like a servile footman, all day long;

Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,

Until his very downfall in the sea.

And day by day I'll do this heavy task,

So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are they thy ministers? what are they call'd?

Tam. Rapine and Murder; therefore called so.

'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord, how like the empress' sons they are!

And you the empress! But we worldly men

Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.

O sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee:

And, if one arm's embracement will content thee,

I will embrace thee in it by and by.

[Exit Titus, from above.]

Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy;

Whate'er I forge, to feed his brain-sick fits,

Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches.

For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;

And, being credulous in this mad thought,

I'll make him send for Lucius, his son;

And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,

I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,

To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,

Or, at the least, make them his enemies.

See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter TITUS.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee;

Welcome, dread fury, to my woful house;

Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too;

How like the empress and her sons you are!

Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor—

Could not all hell afford you such a devil?

For, well I wot, the empress never wags,

But in her company there is a Moor;

And, would you represent our queen aright,

It were convenient you had such a devil;

But welcome, as you are. What shall we do?

Tam. What wouldst thou have us do, Andronicus?

Dem. Shew me a murderer, I'll deal with him.

Chi. Shew me a villain, that hath done a rape,

And I am sent to be revenged on him.

Tam. Shew me a thousand, that have done thee wrong,

And I will be revenged on them all.

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome;

And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,

Good Murder, stab him; he's a murderer.—

Go thou with him; and when it is thy hap,

To find another that is like to thee,

Good Rapine, stab him; he is a ravisher.—

Go thou with them; and in the emperor's court

There is a queen, attended by a Moor;

Well may'st thou know her by thy own proportion,
For up and down she doth resemble thee;
I pray thee, do on them some violent death,
They have been violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well hath thou lesson'd us; this shall we do.
But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Luelius, thy thrice valiant son,
Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
And bid him come and banquet at thy house;
When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,
The emperor himself, and all thy foes;
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.
What says Andronicus to this device?

Tit. Marcus, my brother!—'tis sad Titus calls.

Enter MARCUS.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Luelius;
Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths;
Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths;
Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are;
Tell him, the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house: and he shall feast with them.
This do thou for my love: and so let him,
As he regards his aged father's life.

Mar. This will I do, and soon return again. [Exit.]

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,
And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me;
Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. (To her Sons.) What say you, boys? will you abide with him.

Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
How I have govern'd our determined jest?

Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,
(Aside.)

And tarry with him, till I come again.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad;
And will o'er-reach them in their own devices;
A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam. (Aside.)

Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave us here.

Tam. Farewell, Andronicus; Revenge now goes
To lay a plot to betray thy foes. [Exit.]

Tit. I know, thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Tit. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!

Enter PUBLIUS, and others.

Pub. What's your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. The empress's sons,

I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.

Tit. Ey, Publius, fy! thou art too much deceived;
The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name;
And therefore bid them, gentle Publius;
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them.
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it; therefore bind them sure,
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

[Exit Titus.—Publius, &c. lay hold on Chiron and Demetrius.]

Chi. Villains, forbear; we are the empress's sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.—
Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a word:
Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.

Re-enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with LAVINIA;
she bearing a basin, and he a knife.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound.—
Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.—
O villains, Chiron and Demetrius!

Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud;
This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband; and, for that vile fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest;

Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that, more dear
Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forced.
What would you say, if I should let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.

Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats;
Whilst that Lavinia 'twixen her stumps doth hold
The basin, that receives your guilty blood.
You know, your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself, Revenge, and thinks me mad,—

Hark, villains; I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste;
And of the paste a coffin I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads;
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you used my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be revenged:
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia, come.

(He cuts their throats.)

Receive the blood; and, when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be baked.
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.

[Exeunt, bearing the dead bodies]

SCENE III.—The same. A Pavilion, with tables, &c.

Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and Goths, with AARON, prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content. [Exit.]

1 Goth. And ours, with thine, befall what fortune
Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;
Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress's face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings;

And see the ambush of our friends be strong;
I fear the emperor means no good to us.

Aar. Some devil whisper eures in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!

Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave!—
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.—

[Reveunt Goths, with Aaron. Flourish.]
The trumpets shew, the emperor is at hand.

Enter SATURNINUS and TAMORA, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sal. What, hath the firmament more suns than one
Luc. What boots it thee, to eall thyself a sun?

Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the parle;
These quarrels must be quietly debated,
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end.

For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome;
Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Sal. Marcus, we will.
(Hautboys sound. The Company sit down at table.)

Enter TITUS, dressed like a Cook, LAVINIA veiled, young LUCIUS, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread
Welcome, ye warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius; [queue]
And welcome, all: although the cheer be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs; please you, eat of it.

Sal. Why art thou thus attired, Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,

To entertain your highness, and your empress.

Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.

My lord the emperor, resolve me this;

Was it well done of rash Virginus,

To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflower'd?

Sal. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord?

Sal. Because the girl should not survive her shame,
And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;

A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant

For me, most wretched, to perform the like:—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;

(He kills Lavinia.)

And with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die!

Sal. What hast thou done, unnatural, and unkind?

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made use blind.

I am as woful as Virginus was;

And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage;—and it is now done.

Sal. What was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed.

Tit. Will't please you eat? will't please your high ness feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus ?

Tit. Not I ; 'twas Chiron and Demetrius ;
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,
And ther, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are both, bak'd in that pie ;
Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.
Tis true, 'tis true ; witness my knife's sharp point.

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed. (Killing Tamora.)

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed ?

There's need for need, death for a deadly deed. (Killing Titus.)

(Kills Saturninus. A great tumult. The people in confusion disperse. Marcus,

Lucius, and their partisans ascend the steps before Titus' house.)

Mar. You sad-faced men, people and sons of Rome,

By uproar sever'd, like a flight of fowl

Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,

O, let me teach you how to knit again

This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,

These broken limbs again into one body.

Sen. Lest Rome herself be hane unto herself ;

And she, whom mighty kingdoms court'ry to,

Like a forlorn and desperate cast-away,

Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,

Grave witnesses of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,—

Speak, Rome's dear friend ; (to Lucius) as erst our ancestor,

When with his solemn tongue he did discourse,

To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear,

The story of that hateful burning night,

When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Priam's Troy ;

Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,

Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,

That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.—

My heart is not compact of flint, nor steel ;

Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,

But floods of tears will drown me oratory,

And break my very utterance ; even if the time

When it should move you to attend me most,

Lending your kind commiseration :

Here is a captain, let him tell the tale ;

Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,

That cursed Chiron and Demetrius

Were they that murdered our emperor's brother ;

And they it were that ravished our sister :

For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded,

Our father's tears despis'd ; and basely ezen'd

Of that true hand, that fought Rome's quarrel out,

And sent her enemies unto the grave.

Lastly, myself unkindly banish'd,

The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,

To beg relief among Rome's enemies ;

Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,

And oped their arms to embrace me as a friend :

And I am the turn'd-forth, he it known to you,

That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood ;

And from her bosom took the enemy's point,

Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.

Alas ! you know, I am no vaunter, I ;

My scars can witness, dumb although they are,

That my report is just, and full of truth.

But, soft ; methinks, I do digress too much,

Citing my worthless praise : O, pardon me ;

For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak : Behold this child.

(Pointing to the Child in the arms of an Attendant.)

Of this was Tamora deliver'd :

The issue of an irreligious Moor,

Chief architect and plotter of these woes ;

The villain is alive in Titus' house,

Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.

Now judge, what cause had Titus to revenge

These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,

Or more than any living man could bear.

Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans ?

Have we done aught amiss ? Shew us wherein,

And, from the place where you behold us now,

The poor remainder of Andronic

Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,

And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,

And make a mutual closure of our house.

Speak, Romans, speak ; and, if you say, we shall,

Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emil. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,

And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,

Lucius our emperor ; for, well I know,

The common voice do cry, it shall be so.

Rom. (Several speak.) Lucius, all hail ;

Rome's royal emperor ! (Lucius, &c. descend.)

Mar. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house ;

(To an Attendant.)

And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,

To be adjudg'd some direful slaughtering death,

As punishment for his most wicked life.

Rom. (Several speak.) Lucius, all hail ; Rome's gracious governor !

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans ; May I govern so,

To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her wo !

But, gentle people, give me aim a while,—

For nature puts me to a heavy task ;—

Stand all aloof ;—but, uncle, draw you near,

To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk ;—

O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

(Kisses Titus,

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,

The last true duties of thy noble son !

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,

Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips :

O, were the sum of these that I should pay

Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them !

Luc. Come hither, boy ; come, come, and learn of us

To melt in showers : Thy grandsire loved thee well :

Many a time he danced thee on his knee,

Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow ;

Many a matter hath he told to thee,

Meet, and agreeing with thine infancy ;

In that respect then, like a loving child,

Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,

Because kind nature doth require it so :

Friends should associate friends in grief and wo :

Bid him farewell ; commit him to the grave ;

Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire ! even with all my heart

Would I were dead, so you did live again !—

O lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping ;

My tears will choke me, if I open my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with AARON.

I Rom. You sad Andronic, have done with woes,

Give sentence on this execrable wretch,

That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and fathom him :

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food :

If any one relieves or pities him,

For the offence he dies. This is our doom :

Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Mar. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb ?

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers,

I should repent the evils I have done :

Ten thousand, worse than ever yet I did,

Would I perform, if I might have my will ;

If one good deed in all my life I did,

I do repent it from my very soul.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,

And give him burial in his father's grave :

My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith

Be closed in our household's monument.

As for that heinous tiger, Tamora,

No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,

No mournful bell shall ring her burial ;

But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey :

Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity ;

And, being so, shall have like want of pity.

See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor,

From whom our heavy haps had their beginning :

Then, afterwards, to order well the state,

That like events may never it ruinate. [Exeunt.]

ACT I.

Enter GOWER.

Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song of old was sung,
 From ashes ancient Gower is come;
 Assuming man's infirmities,
 To glad your ear and please your eyes.
 It hath been sung at festivals,
 On ember-eves, and holy-ales;
 And lords and ladies of their lives
 Have read it for restoratives:
 'Purpose to make men glorious;
Et quo antiquius, eo melius,
 If you, horn in these latter times,
 When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
 And that to hear an old man sing,
 May to your wishes pleasure bring.
 I life would wish, and that I might Waste it for you, like taper-light.—
 This city then, Antioch the great
 Built up for his chiefest seat;
 The fairest in all Syria;
 (I tell you what mine authors say:)
 This king unto him took a sphere,
 Who died, and left a female heir,
 So buxom, blithe, and full of face,
 As Heaven had lent her all his grace:
 With whom the father liking took,
 And her to incest did provoke:
 Bad father! to entice his own
 To evil, should be done by none.
 By custom, what they did beguie,
 Was, with long use, account no sin.
 The beauty of this sinful dame
 Made many princes thither frame,
 To seek her as a bed-fellow,
 In marriage-pleasures play-fellow:
 Which to prevent, he made a law,
 (To keep her still, and men in awe,)
 That whoso ask'd her for his wife,
 His riddle told not, lost his life:
 So for her many a wight did die,
 As yon grim looks do testify,
 What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye
 I give, my cause who best can justify. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Antioch.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTIOCHUS, PERICLES, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large received

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul
 Embolden'd with the glory of her praise,
 Think death no hazard in this enterprise. (Music.)

Ant. Bring in our daughter, cloth'd like a bride,
 For the embracements even of Jove himself:
 At whose conception (till Lucina reign'd)
 Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,
 The senate-house of planets all did sit,
 To knit in her their best perfections.

Enter the Daughter of Antiochus.

Per. See, where she comes, apparell'd like the spring
 Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
 Of every virtue gives renown to men!
 Her face, the book of praises, where is read
 Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever rased, and testy wrath
 Could never be her mild companion.
 Ye gods that made me man, and sway in love,
 That have inflam'd desire in my breast,
 To taste the fruit of yon celestial tree,
 Or die in the adventure, be my helps,
 As I am son and servant to your will,
 To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
 With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
 For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:
 Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view
 A countless glory, which desert must gain;
 And which, without desert, because thine eye
 Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
 Yon sometime famous princes, like thyself,
 Drawn by report, advent'rous by desire,
 Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale,
 That, without covering, save yon field of stars,
 They here stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;
 And with dead cheeks advise thee to desert
 For going on death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hath taught
 My frail mortality to know itself,
 And by those fearful objects to prepare
 This body like to them: to what I must:
 For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
 Who tells us, life's but breath; to trust it, error.
 I'll make my will then; and, as sick men do,
 Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling wo,
 Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did;
 So I bequeath a happy peace to you,
 And all good men, as every prince should do;
 My riches to the earth from whence they came;
 But my unspotted fire of love to you.

(To the Daughter of Antiochus.)

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
 I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus,
 Scorning advice.

Ant. Read the conclusion then;
 Which read, and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
 As these before thee thou thyself shalt bleed.

Daugh. In all, save that, mayst thou prove prosperous!

In all, save that, I wish thee happiness!

Per. I be a bold champion; I assume the lists,

Nor ask a vice of any other thought;

But faithfulness and courage. (He reads the riddle.)

I am no viper, yet I feed

On mother's flesh, which did me breed;

I sought a husband, in which labour,

I found that kindness in a father.

He's father, son, and husband mid,

I mother, wife, and yet his child.

How they may be, and yet in twain,

As you will live, resolve if you.

Sharp physic is the last: but, O you powers!

That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,

Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,

If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?

Fair glass of light, I loved you, and could still,

(Takes hold of the hand of the Princess.)

Were not this glorious casket stored with ill;

But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt;

For he's no man on whom perfections wait,

That, knowing sin within, will touch the gate.

You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;

Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,

Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken;

But, being play'd upon before your time,

Hell only danceth at so harsh a chime:

Good sooth, I care not for you.

Anf. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,

For that's an article within our law,

As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expired;

Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,

Few love to hear the sins they love to act;

Twould 'braid yourself too near for me to tell it.

Who has a book for all that monarchs do,

He's more secure to keep it shut than shewn;

For vice repeated, is like the wand'ring wind,

Blows dust in others' eyes to spread itself;

And yet the end of all is hought thus dear,

The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:

To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts

Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is wrong'd

By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth die for 't.

Kings are earth's gods: in vice their law's their will;

And if Jove stray, who dares say Jove doth ill?

It is enough you know; and it is fit,

What being more known grows worse, to smother it.

All love the womb that their first beings bred,

Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.

Anf. Heaven, that I had thy head! he has found the meaning:—(Type.)

But I will gloss with him. (Aside.) Young prince of

Though by the tenor of our strict edict,

Your exposition misinterpreting,

We might proceed to cancel of your days;

Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree

As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise:

Forty days longer we do respite you;

If by which time our secret be undone,

This mercy shews, we'll joy in such a son:

And until then, your entertain shall be,

As duth best our honour and your worth.

(Exeunt Antiochus, his Daughter,

and Attendants.)

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin!

When what is done is like an hypocrite,

The which is good in nothing but in sight.

If it be true that I interpret false,

Then were it certain you were not so bad,

As with foul incest to abuse your soul;

Where now you're both a father and a son,

By your untimely clasping with your child,

(Which pleasure fits an husband, not a father:)

And she an eater of her mother's flesh,

By the defiling of her parent's bed;

And both like serpents are, who, though they feed

On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.

Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men

Blush not in actions blacker than the night,

Will shun no course to keep them from the light.

One sin, I know, another doth provoke;

Murder's as near to lust, as flame to smoke.

Poison and treason are the hands of sin,

As, and the targets, to put off the shame:

Then, lest my life be cropp'd to keep you clear,

By flight, I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.]

Re-enter ANTIOCHUS.

Anf. He hath found the meaning, for the which we

To have his head. (mean)

He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,

Nor tell the world, Antiochus doth sin

In such a loathed manner:

And therefore instantly this prince must die;

For by his fall my honour must keep high.

Who attends on us there?

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. Both your highness enli?

Anf. Thaliard, you're of our chamber, and our mind

Partakes her private actions to your secrecy;

And for your faithfulness we will advance you.

Thaliard, behold, here's poison and here's gold;

We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him;

It fits thee not to ask the reason why,

Because we bid it. Say, is it done?

Thal. My lord,

'Tis done.

Enter a Messenger.

Anf. Enough;

Lest your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.

Mess. My lord, prince Pericles is fled. [Exit.]

Anf. Will live, fly after: and as an arrow, shot

From a well-experienced archer, hits the mark

His eye doth level at, so ne'er return,

Unless thou say, prince Pericles is dead.

Thal. My lord, if I

Can get him once within my pistol's length,

I'll make him sure: so farewell to your highness. [Exit.]

Anf. Thaliard, adieu! till Pericles be dead,

My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Tyre. A Room in the Palace.

Enter PERICLES, HELICANUS, and other Lords

Per. Let none disturb us: Why this charge of thoughts?

The sad companion, dull-eyed melancholy,

By me so used a guest is, not an hour,

In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,

(The tomb where grief should sleep,) can breed me quiet! [them.]

Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun

And danger, which I feared, is at Antioch,

Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here:

Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,

Nor yet the other's distance comfort me.

'Tis then it is thus: the passions of the mind,

That have their first conception by mis-dread,

Have after-nourishment and life by care;

And what was first but fear what might be done,

Grows elder now, and cares it be not done.

And so with me,—the great Antiochus

(Gainst whom I am too little to contend,

Since he's so great, can make his will his act,)

Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;

Nor boots it me to say, I honour him,

If he suspect I may dishonour him:

And what may make him blush in being known,

He'll stop the course by which it might be known;

With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,

And with the ostent of war will look so huge,

Amazement shall drive courage from the state;

Our men be vanquish'd, ere they do resist,

And subjects punish'd, that ne'er thought offence:

Which care of them, not pity of myself,

(Who am no more but as the tops of trees,

Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them,)

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,

And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast!

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,

Peaceful and comfortable!

Hel. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience tongue.

They do abuse the king that flatter him:

For flattery is the bellows blows up sin;

The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,

To which that breath gives heat and stronger glowing;

Whereas reproof, obedient and in order,

Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.

When signior Sooth here does proclaim a peace,

He flatters you, makes war upon your life;

Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please;

I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else; but let your cares o'erlook

What shipping, and what lading's in our haven,

And then return to us. [Exeunt Lords.] Helicanus,

thou

Hast moved us: what seest thou in our looks?

Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,
How durst thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the planets look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment?

Per. Thou know'st I have power
To take thy life.

Hel. (Kneeling.) I have ground the axe myself;
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, prythee, rise;
Sit down, sit down; thou art no flatterer:
I thank thee for it; and high Heaven forbid,
That things should let their ears hear their faults hid!
Fit counsellor, and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom makest a prince thy servant,
What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. With patience bear
Such griefs as you do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus;
Who minister'st a potion unto me,
That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me then: I went to Antioch,
Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Bring arms to princes, and to subjects joys.
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder;
The rest (hark in thine ear) as black as incest;
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth: but thou know'st
'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss. [this,

Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector; and being here,
Bethought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants' fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than their years:
And should he doubt it, (as no doubt he doth,)
That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unmaid open—
To top that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him;
When all, for mine, if I may call't offence,
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:
Which love to all (of which thyself art one,
Who now reprovt me for it)—

Hel. Alas, sir!

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my Musings into my mind, a thousand doubts [cheeks,
How I might stop this tempest, ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to Freely I'll speak. Antioch you fear; [speak,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who, either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,
Or destinies do cut his thread of life.
Your rule direct to any; if to me,
Dax serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in absence—

Hel. We'll mingle bloods together in the earth,
From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tharsus
Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.
The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.
I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;
Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both;
But in our orbs we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,
Thou shew'st a subject's shine, I a true prince.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Tyre. An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this is the court. Here must I kill king Pericles; and if I do not, I am sure to be hanged at home: 'tis dangerous.—Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets. Now do I see he had some reason for it: for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the indenture of his oath to be one.—
Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS, ESCANES, and other Lords

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure.
His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
Doth speak sufficiently; he's gone to travel.

Thal. How! the king gone! (Aside.)

Hel. If farther yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicensed of your loves,
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch—

Thal. What from Antioch? (Aside.)

Hel. Royal Antiochus (on what cause I know not)
Took some displeasure at him; at least he judg'd so:
And doubting lest that he had err'd or sinn'd,
To shew his sorrow, would correct himself;
So puts himself into the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens life or death.

Thal. Well, I perceive (Aside.)

I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, the king it sure must please,
He's escap'd the land, to perish on the sea.—
But I'll present me.—Peace to the lords of Tyre!

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come

With message unto princely Pericles;
But, since my landing, as I have understood
Your lord has took himself to unknown travels,
My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it, since Commended to our master, not to us:
Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,—
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tharsus. A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here,
And by relating tales of other's griefs,
See if 'twill teach us to forget our own?

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench it!

For who digs hills because they do aspire,
Throws down one mountain to cast up a higher.

O my distressed lord, even such our griefs;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mistful eyes,
But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyza,

Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish?

Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our woes
Into the air; our eyes do weep, till lungs

Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; that,
If Heaven slumber, while their creatures want,

They may awake their helps to comfort them.

I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years,
And wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, o'er which I have government,
(A city, on whom plenty held full hand),

For riches, strew'd herself even in the streets;
Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the clouds,
And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at;

Whose men and dames so jetted and adorn'd,
Like one another's glass to trim them by;

Their tables were stored full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on, as delight;

All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. O, 'tis too true.

Cle. But see what Heaven can do! By this our change,
These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air,

Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance,

As houses are defiled for want of use,
They are now starved for want of exercise:

Those palates, who not yet two summers younger,
Must have inventions to delight the taste,

Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it;
Those mothers, who, to nouse up their babes,

Thought nought too curious, are ready now,
To eat those little darlings, whom they loved.

So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife
Draw lots, who first shall die to lengthen life:

Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many sink, yet those which see them fall,

Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true?

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.

Cle. O, let those cities, that of Plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,

With their superfluous riots, hear these tears!
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows, which thou bring'st, in haste,
For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring
A portly sail of ships make hitherward. [shore.

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery,
Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,
Whereas no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear; for, by the semblance
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace,
And come to us as favourers, not as foes.

Cle. Thou speak'st like him's untutor'd to repeat,
Who makes the fairest show, means most deceit,
But bring they what they will, what need we fear?
The ground's the low'st, and we are half way there.
Go tell their general, we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes,
And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord.

[Exit.

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist;
If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships and number of our men
Be, like a beacon fired, to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets:
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load;
And these our ships, you happily may think
Are, like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within,
With bloody views, expecting overthrow,
Are stored with corn, to make your needy bread,
And give them life, who are hunger-starved, half dead.
All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise;
We do not look for reverence, but for love,
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of Heaven and men succeed their evils!
Till when, (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen.)
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept: feast here a while,
Until our stars, that frown, lend us a smile. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I wis, to incest bring;
A better prince, and benign lord,
Prove awful both in deed and word.
Be quiet then, as men should be,
Till be hath pass'd necessity.
I'll shew you those in troubles reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation
(To whom I gave my benison,)
Is still at Tharsus, where each man
Thinks all is writ be spoken can:
And, to remember what he does,
Gild his statue glorious:
But tidings to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?
(Dumb show.)

Enter at one door PERICLES, talking with CLEON; all the Train with them. Enter at another door, a Gentleman, with a letter to Pericles: Pericles shews the letter to Cleon; then gives the Messenger a reward, and knights him. Exeunt Pericles, Cleon, &c. severally.

Gow. Good Helicene hath staid at home,
Not to eat honey, like a drone,
From others' labours: forth he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive;
And to fulfil his prince's desire,
Sends word of all that happens in Tyre:

How Thaliard came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was not best:
Longer for him to make his rest;
He knowing so, put forth to seas,
Where when men been, there's seldom ease;
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,
Make such unquiet, that the ship,
Should house him safe, is wreck'd and split;
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is tost;
All perish of man, of pelf,
Ne aught escapen but himself;
Till fortune, tired with doing bad,
Threw him ashore, to give him glad;
And here he comes: what shall he next,
Pardon old Gower; this long's the text. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Pentapolis. An open Place by the Seaside.

Enter PERICLES, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you:
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your watry grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilche!
2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.
1 Fish. What, Patch-breech, I say!
3 Fish. What say you, master?
1 Fish. Look how thou stirrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a waunion.
3 Fish. Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.
1 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it grieved my heart what pitiful cries they made to us, to help them, when well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.
3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus, how he bounced and tumbled? they say, they are half fish, half flesh: a plague on them, they ne'er come, but I look to be washed. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.
1 Fish. Why, as men do a-land; the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale; 'a plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on a' the land, who never leave gaping, till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, hells, and all.

Per. A pretty moral.

3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man?

3 Fish. Because he should have swallowed me too:
and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind—

Per. Simonides.

3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject of the sea
These fishers tell the infirmities of men;
And from their watry empire recollect
All that may men approve, or men detect!—
Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? if it be a day fits you, scratch it out of the calendar, and nobody will look after it.

Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast—
2 Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea, to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man, whom both the waters and the wind,
In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball
For them to play upon, entreats you pity him;
He asks of you, that never used to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece, gets more with begging, than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes then?

Per. I never practised it.

2 Fish. Nay, then, thou wilt starve sure; for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know; But what I am, want teaches me to think on; A man shrunk up with cold; my veins are chill, And have no more of life, than may suffice To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help; Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die, quoth a? Now gods forbid! I have a gown here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more o'er, puddings and flap-jacks; and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did but crave.

2 Fish. But crave? Then I'll turn craver too, and so I shall 'scape whipping.

Per. Why, are all your beggars whipped then?

2 Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if all your heggars were whipped, I would wish no better office, than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net. [Exeunt two of the Fishermen.]

Per. How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, sir! do you know where you are?

Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good king Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?

1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be so called, for his peaceable reign, and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since from his subjects He gains the name of good, by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey; and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourney for her love.

Per. Did but my fortunes equal my desires, I'd wish to make one there.

1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for — his wife's soul.

Re-enter the two Fishermen, drawing up a net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help! here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 'twill hardly come out. Ha! hot on 't, 'tis come at last, and 'tis turned to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it. Thanks, fortune, yet, that after all my crosses, Thou givest me somewhat to repair myself; And, though it was mine own, part of mine heritage, Which my dead father did bequeath to me, With this strict charge, (even as he left his life), Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield 'Twixt me and death; (and pointed to this brace:)

For that it saved me, keep it; in like necessity, Which gods protect thee from; if may defend thee.

It kept where I kept, I so dearly loved it; Till the rough seas, that spare not any man, Took it in rage, though calm'd, they give't again: I thank thee for't; my shipwreck's now no ill, Since I have here my father's gift by will.

1 Fish. What mean you, sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth, For it was sometime target to a king; I know it by this mark. He loved me dearly, And for his sake, I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court, Where with't I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortunes better,

I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest your debtor.

1 Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady?

Per. I'll shew the virtue I have borne in arms.

1 Fish. Why, do ye take it, and the gods give thee good on't?

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend: 'twas we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain vails. I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe't, I will.

Now, by your fartherance, I am clothed in steel;

And spite of all the rupture of the sea;

This jewel holds his hiding on my arm;

Unto thy value will I mount myself

Upon a courser, whose delightful steps

Shall make the gazer joy to see him tread. — Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided Of a pair of bases.

2 Fish. We'll sure provide; thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair; and I'll bring thee to the court myself.

Per. Then honour he but a goal to my will; This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A public way, or platform, leading to the lists. A pavilion by the side of it, for the reception of the King, Princess, Lords, &c.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISIA, Lords and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph? 1 Lord. They are, my liege; And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them, we are ready; and our daughter, In honour of whose birth these triumphs are, Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature eat For men to see, and seeing wonder at. [Exit a Lord.]

Thai. It pleaseth you, my father, to express My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are A model, which Heaven makes like to itself: As jewels lose their glory, if neglected, So princes their renown, if not respected. 'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain The labour of each knight, in his device.

Thai. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight; he passes over the stage, and his Squire presents his shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father; And the device he bears upon his shield Is a black Æthiop, reaching at the sun; The word, Lux tua vita mihi.

Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you. (The second Knight passes.)

Who is the second, that presents himself?

Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;

And the device he bears upon his shield Is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady: The motto thus, in Spanish, Piu per dulcira que per fuerça. (The third Knight passes.)

Sim. And what's the third?

Thai. The third of Antioch; And his device, a wreath of chivalry: The word, Me pompa proverei apex. (The fourth Knight passes.)

Sim. What is the fourth?

Thai. A burning torch, that's turned upside down; The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.

Sim. Which shews that beauty hath his power and will, Which can as well inflame, as it can kill.

(The fifth Knight passes.)

Thai. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds; Holding out gold, that's by the touchstone tried: The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.

(The sixth Knight passes.)

Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?

Thai. He seems a stranger; but his present is A wither'd branch, that's only green at top;

The motto, In hac spe vivo.

Sim. A pretty moral;

From the dejected state wherein he is, He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish. [shew 1 Lord. He had need mean better than his outward Can any way speak in his just commend:

For, by his rusty outside, he appears To have practis'd more the whipstock, than the lance.

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes

To an honour'd triumph, strangely furnished.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust

Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan The outward habit by the inward man. But stay, the knights are coming; we'll withdraw Into the gallery. [Exeunt.]

(Great shouts, and all cry, The mean knight.)

SCENE III.—The same. A Hall of State. A Banquet prepared.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISIA, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Knights, To say you are welcome, were superfluous.

To pierce upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Wrote more than you expect, or more than 's fit,
Since every worth in shew commends itself.
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are my guests.

Thai. But you, my knight and guest;
To whom this wreath of victory I give,
And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than by merit.
Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;
And here, I hope, is none that envies it.

In framing artists, art hath thus decreed,
To make some good, but others to exceed,
And you're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen o' the feast,

(For, daughter, so you are,) here take your place:
Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides.

Sim. Your presence glads our days; honour we love,
For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

Marsh. Sir, yond's your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.
1 Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen,
That neither in our hearts nor outward eyes,
Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit, sir; sit.

Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,
These rates resist me, she not thought upon.

Thai. By Jove, that is queen of marriage, all the viands that I eat

Do seem unsavoury, wishing him my meat

Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but

A country gentleman;

He has done no more than other knights have done;

Broken a staff, or so; so let it pass.

Thai. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. Yon king's to me, like to my father's picture,
Which tells me, in that glory once he was;

Had orness sit, like stars, about his throne,

And he the sun, for them to reverence.

None, that beheld him, but, like lesser lights,

Did veil their crowns to his supremacy;

Where now his son's a glow-worm in the night,

The which hath fire in darkness, none in light;

Whereby I see that Time's the king of men,

For he's their parent, and he is their grave,

And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights?

1 Knight. Who can be other in this royal presence?

Sim. Here, with a cup that's stored unto the brim,
(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips.)

We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause a while;

You knight, methinks, doth sit too melancholy,

As if the entertainment in our court

Had not as shew might countervail his worth.

Not it not you, Thaisa?

Thai. What is it to me, my father?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter;

Princes, in this, should live like gods above,

Who freely give to every one that comes

To honour them: and princes, not doing so,

Are like to gnats, which make a sound, but kill'd

Are wonder'd at.

Therefore to make 's entrance more sweet, here say,

We drink this standing-bowl of wine to him.

Thai. Alas, my father, it befits not me

Unto a stranger knight to be so bold;

He may my proffer take for an offence,

Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How?

Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thai. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. (Aside.)

Sim. And farther tell him, we desire to know,

Of whence he is, his name and parentage.

Thai. The king my father, sir, has drunk to you.

Per. I thank him.

Thai. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thai. And farther he desires to know of you,

Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name, Pericles;

My education being in arts and arms:—)

Wha, looking for adventures in the world,

Was by the rough seas roft of ships and men,

And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thai. He thanks you grace; names himself Pericles,
A gentleman of Tyre, who only by Misfortune of the seas has been bereft
Of ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I pity his misfortune,
And will awake him from his melancholy.

Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles,
And waste the time, which looks for other revels.

Even in your armours, as you are address'd,
Will very well become a soldier's dance.

I will not have excuse, with saying, this
Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads;

Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.
(The Knights dance.)

So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd.
Come, sir;

Here is a lady that wants breathing too;
And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre

Are excellent in making ladies trip;
And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my lord.

Sim. O, that's as much, as you would be denied
(The Knights and Ladies dance.)

Of your fair courtesy.—Unclasp, unclasp;
Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well,
But you the best. (To Pericles.) Pages and lights conduct

These knights unto their several lodgings: Yours, sir,
We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love,

For that's the mark I know you level at;

Therefore each one betake him to his rest;

To-morrow, all for speeding do their best. [Exeunt

SCENE IV.—Tyre. A Room in the Governor's House

Enter HELICANUS and ESCANES.

Hel. No, no, my Escanes; know this of me,— Antiochus from incest lived not free;

For which, the most high gods not minding longer
To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,

Due to this heinous capital offence;
Even in the height and pride of all his glory,

When he was seated, and his daughter with him,
In a chariot of inestimable value,

A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up
Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk,

That all those eyes adored them, ere their fall,
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Eca. 'Twas very strange.

Hel. And yet but just; for though

This king were great, his greatness was no guard
To bar Heaven's shaft, but sin had his reward.

Eca. 'Tis very true.

Enter Three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference,
Or council, his respect with him, but he

2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve without reproof.

3 Lord. And cursed be he that will not second it.

1 Lord. Follow me then: Lord Helicane, a word.

Hel. With me? and welcome: Happy day, my lords.

1 Lord. Know, that our griefs are risen to the top,

And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your griefs, for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself then, noble Helicane;

But if the prince do live, let us salute him,

Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.

If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;

If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there;

And be resolved, he lives to govern us,

Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,

And leaves us to our free election. [Censure:]

2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our

And knowing this kingdom, if without a head,

(Like stately buildings left without a roof),

Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,

That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign,

We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helicane!

Hel. Try honour's cause; forbear your suffrages;

If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.

Take I your wish, I leap into the seas,

Where's hourly trouble, for a minute's ease.

A twelvemonth longer, let me then endure you
To forbear choice if the absence of your king;

If in which time expired, he not return,

I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.

But if I cannot win you to this love,

Go search like nohlemen, like noble subjects,

And in your search spend your adventurous worth

Whom, if you find, and win unto return,
You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.
1 Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield;
And, since lord Helicane enjoineth us,
We with our travels will endeavour it.
Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands;
When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Exeunt.]SCENE V.—Pentapolis. A Room in the Palace.

Enter SIMONIDES, reading a letter, the Knights meet him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.
Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let you know,
That for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake
A married life.
Her reason to herself is only known,
Which from herself by no means can I get.
2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my lord?
Sim. 'Faith, by no means; she hath so strictly tied
To her chamber, that it is impossible.
One twelve moons more she'll wear Diana's livery;
This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,
And on her virgin honour will not break it.

3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves.

[Exeunt.]

Sim. So,
They're well despatch'd; now to my daughter's letter:
She calls me here, she'll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.
Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with mine;
I like that well;—nay, how absolute she's in 't,
Not minding whether I dislike or no!
Well, I commend her choice;
And will no longer have it be delay'd.
Soft, here he comes;—I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!
Sim. To you as much, sir! I am beholden to you
For your sweet music this last night; my ears,
I do protest, were never better fed
With such delightful pleasing harmony.
Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend;
Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.
Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord.
Sim. Let me ask one thing. What do you think, sir, of My daughter?

Per. As of a most virtuous princess.
Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?
Per. As a fair day in summer; wondrous fair.
Sim. My daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;
Ay, so well, sir, that you must be her master,
And she'll your scholar be; therefore look to it.
Per. Unworthy I to be her schoolmaster.
Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing else.
Per. What's here!

A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre?
'Tis the king's subtilty, to have my life. (Aside.)
O, seek not to intrap, my gracious lord,
A stranger and distressed gentleman,
That never aim'd so high, to love your daughter,
But hent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou art
A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not, sir.
Never did thought of mine levy offence;
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.
Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor!
Sim. Ay, traitor, sir.
Per. Even in his throat, (unless it be the king,)
That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd of a base descent.
I came unto your court, for honour's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove be's honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—
Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter THAISA.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you?

Thai. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make me glad?
Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?—
I am glad of it with all my heart. (Aside.) I'll tame
I'll bring you in subjection.—
Will you, not naving my consent, bestow
Your love and your affections on a stranger?
(Who, for aught I know to the contrary,
Or think, may be as great in blood as I.) (Aside.)
Hear therefore, mistress; frame your will to mine,—
And you, sir, hear you.—Either be ruled by me,
Or I will make you—man and wife.
Nay, come; your hands and lips must seal it too.—
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;—
And for a farther grief,—God give you joy!
What, are you both pleased?

Thai. Yes, if you love me, sir,
Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, I'll see you wed.

Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter GOWAR.

Gow. Now sleep slak'd hath the rout;
No din but snores, the house about,
Made louder by the o'er-fed breast
Of this most pompous marriage feast.
The cat, with eye of burning coal,
Now couches 'fore the mouse's hole;
And crickets sing at th' ovon's mouth,
As the blither for their drouth.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulded;—Be attend,
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly eche:
What's dumb in shew, I'll plain with speech.

[Dumb shew.]

*Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with Attendants; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives Pericles a letter. Pericles shews it to Simonides; the Lords kneel to the former. Then enter THAISA with child, and LYCHORIDA.
Simonides shews his daughter the letter; she rejoices;
she and Pericles take leave of her Father, and depart.
Then Simonides, &c. retire.*

Gow. By many a dearn and painful perch,
Of Pericles the careful search
By the four opposing coignes,
Which the world together joins,
Is made with all due diligence,
That horse, and sail, and high expence,
Can stand the quest. At last from Tyre
(Fame answering the most strong inquire,)
To the court of king Simonides
Are letters brought, the teouor these:
Antiochus and his daughter's dead;
The men of Tyros, on the head
Of Helicane would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
The mutiny there he hastes 't appease;
Says to them, if king Pericles
Come not, in twice six moons, home,
He, obedient to their doom,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y-ravish'd the regions round,
And every one with claps, 'gan sound,
Our heir apparent is a king;
Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?
Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre;
His queen with child makes her desire
(Which who shall cross?) along to go;
(Omit we all their dole and wo.)
Lychorida, her nurse, she takes,
And so to sea. Their vessel shakes
On Neptune's billow; half the flood
Hath their keel cut; but fortune's mood
Varies again; the grizzled north,
Disorges such a tempest forth
That, as a duck for life that dives,
So up and down the poor ship drives,
The lady shrieks, and, well a-near!
Doth fall in travail with her fear!

And what ensues in this fell storm,
Snail, for itself, itself perform.
I will relate, action may Conveniently the rest convey :
Which might not what by me is told.
In your imagination hold
This stage, the ship, upon whose deck
The sea-tost prince appears to speak. [Exit.

SCENE I.

Enter PERICLES, on a ship at sea.

Per. Thou God of this great vast, rebuke these surges,
Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou, that hast
Upon the winds command, bind them in brass, Having call'd them from the deep! O, still thy deaf'ning,
Thy dreadful thunders; gently quench thy nimble,
Sulphurous flashes!—O how, Lychorida,
How does my queen?—Thou storm, thou! venomously
Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard.—Lychorida!—Lucina, O
Divinest patroness, and midwife, gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
Aboard our dancing boat: make swift the pangs
Of my queen's travails!—Now, Lychorida—

Enter LYCHORIDA, with an infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing
Too young for such a place, who, if it had Conceit, would die as I am like to do.
Take in your arms this piece of your dead queen.

Per. How! how, Lychorida!

Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left living of your queen,—
A little daughter; for the sake of it,
Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods!
Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
Recall not what we give, and therein may
Vie honour with yourselves.

Lyc. Patience, good sir
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life!
For a more blust'rous birth had never babe:
Quiet and gentle thy conditions!
For thou art the redeliest welcomed to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding a nativity,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first,
Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit,
With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter two Sailors.

1 Sail. What courage, sir? God save you.

Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw;
It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-nov sea-farer,
I would, it would be quiet.

1 Sail. Slack the bolins there; thou wilt not, wilt thou? Blow and split thyself.

2 Sail. But sea-room, in the brine and cloudy billow
Kiss the moon, I care not.

1 Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard; the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.

1 Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it still hath been observed; and we are strong in earnest. Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard straight.

Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched queen!

Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible child-bed hast thou had, my dear;
No light, no fire; the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time
To give thee bellow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ooze;
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And eye-remaining lamps, the helching whale,
And humming water must overwhelm thy corpse,
Laying with simple shells. Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Alexander
Bring me the satin coffin: lay the babe
Upon the pillow; hie thee, whilst I say priestly farwell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit Lychorida.]

2 Sail. Sir, we have a cleft beneath the hatches caulk'd and bitum'd ready.

Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say what coast is this

2 Sail. We are near Tharsus.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner,
Alter thy course for Tyre. When canst thou reach it?

2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O make for Tharsus.

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyrus: there I'll leave it
At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good mariner;
I'll bring the body presently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House.

Enter CERIMON, a Servant, and some persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter PHILEMON.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men;
It hath been a turbulent and stormy night.

Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as this,
Till now, I ne'er endured.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;
There's nothing can be miuster'd to nature,
That can recover him. Give this to the 'pothecary.
And tell me how it works. (To Philemon.)

[Exeunt Philemon, Servant, and those who had been shipwrecked.]

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Good morrow, sir.

2 Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen,

Why do you stir so early?

1 Gent. Sir,

Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals did seem to rend,
And all to topple; pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

2 Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so early;
'Tis not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well.

1 Gent.—But I much marvel that your lordship having

Rich tiro about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.

It is most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches; careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have (Together with my practice) made familiar
To me and to my aid, the blest infusions
That dwell in vegetables, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the disturbances
That nature works, and of her cures; which give me
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death. [forth

2 Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus pour'd
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restored:
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall never—

Enter two Servants, with a chest.

Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even now

Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest;
'Tis of some wreck.

Cer. Set it down, let's look on it.

2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate'er it be,
'Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight;
If the sea's stomach be o'ercharged with gold,
It is a good constraint of fortune, that
It belches upon us.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord

Cel. How close 'tis caulk'd and bitum'd!—
Did the sea cast it up!

Sere. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open,
Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it.
O you most potent gods! What's here? a corpse!

1 Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and entreausured

With bags of spices full! A passport too!

Apollo. perfect me in the characters!
(Unfolds a scroll.)

Here I give to understand, (Reads.)

(If e'er this coffin drive a land,)

I, king Pericles, have lost

This queen, worth all our mundane cost.

Who finds her, give her burying.

She was the daughter of a king:

Besides this treasure for a fee,

The gods requite his charity!

If thou livest, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for wo!—This chanced to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;

For look, how fresh she looks!—They were too tough,

That threw her in the sea. Make fire within;

Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,

And yet the fire of life kindle again

'Tbe overpress'd spirits. I have heard

Of an Egyptian, had nine hours lien dead,

By good appliance was recovered.

Enter a Servant, with boxes, naphkins, and fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths.—

The rough and woful music that we have,

Cause it to sound, 'beseech you.

The viol once more!—How thou stirr'st, thou block!

The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—

Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes; a warmth

Breathes out of her; she hath not been entranced

Above five hours. See, how she gins to blow

Into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The Heavens, sir,

Through you, increase our wonder, and set up

Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,

Her eye-lids, cases to those heavenly jewels

Which Pericles hath lost,

Begun to part their fringes of bright gold;

The diamonds of a most praised water

Appear, to make the world twice rich. O live,

And make us seem to hear your fate, fair creature,

Rare as you weep to be. (She moves.)

Thai. O dear Diana,

Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?

2 Gent. Is not this strange?

1 Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, gentle neighbours;

Send me your hands; to the next chamber bear her.

Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,

For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come,

And Æsculapius guide us!

[Exeunt, carrying Thaisa away.]

SCENE III.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter PERICLES, CLEON, DIONYZA, LYCHORIDA, and MARINA.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;

My twelvemonths are expired, and Tyros stands

In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,

Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods

Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt you mortally,

Yet glauce full wau'd'ringly on us.

Dion. O your sweet queen!

That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,

To have bless'd mine eyes!

Per. We cannot but obey

The powers above us. Could I rage and roar

As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end

Must be as 'tis. My babe Marins (whom

For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so,) here

I charge your charity withal, and leave her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord:
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,

(For which the people's prayers still fall upon you,)

Must in your child be thought on. If neglecton

Should therein make me vile, the common body,

By you relieved, would force me to my duty:

But if to that my nature need a spur,

The gods revenge it upon me and mine,

To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you:

Your honour and your goodness teach me credit,

Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,

By bright Diana, whom we honour all,

Unscissor'd shall this hair of mine remain.

Though I shew will in 't. So I take my leave.

Good madam, make me blessed in your care

In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,

Who shall not be more dear to my respect,

Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.

Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge o' the shore;

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune, and

The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace

Your offer. Come, dear'st madam.—O, no tears,

Lychorida, no tears:

Look to your little mistress, on whose grace

You may depend hereafter. Come, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House.

Enter CERIMON and THAISA.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,

Lay with you in your coffer: which arc now

At your command. Know you the character?

Thai. It is my lord's.

That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,

Even on my yearning time; but whether there

Deliver'd or no, by the holy gods,

I cannot rightly say: But since king Pericles,

My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again,

A vest livery will I take me to,

And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as you speak,

Diana's temple is not distant far,

Where you may 'hide until your date expire.

Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine

Shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks, that's all;

Yet my good will is great, though the gift small.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Imagine Pericles at Tyre,

Welcomed to his own desire.

His woful queen leave at Ephesus,

To Dian there a votress,

Now to Marina bend your mind,

Whom our fast growing scene must find

At Thar-us, and by Cleon train'd

In music, letters: who hath gain'd

Of education all the grace,

Which makes her both the heart and place

Of general wonder. But alack!

That monster envy, of the wrack

Of earned praise, Marina's life

Seeks to take off by treason's knife.

And in this kind hath our Cleon

One daughter, and a wench full grown.

Even ripe for marriage fight; this maid

Hight Philoten: and it is said

For certain in our story, she

Would ever with Marina be;

Be't when she weaved the sleided silk

With fingers, long, small, white as milk;

Or when she would with sharp need wound

The cambric, which she made more sound

By hurting it: or when to the net

She sung, and made the night-bird mute

That still records with moan; or when
She would wit, rich and constant pea
Vail to her mistress Dian; still
This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute Marina: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cimon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter.
The sooner her vile thoughts to stead,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead;
And cursed Dionyza hath
The pregnant instrument of wrath
Prest for this blow. The unborn event
I do commend to your content:
Only I carry winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;
Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my way.
Dionyza does appear,
With Leonine, a murderer. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Tharsus. An open Place, near the Sea-shore.

Enter DIONYZA and LEONINE.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do it:
'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing if the world so soon,
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom,
Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her. Here
Weeping she comes for her old nurse's death.
Thou art resolved?

Leon. I am resolved.

Enter MARINA, with a basket of flowers.

Mar. No, no, I will rob Tellus of her weed,
To strew thy green with flowers; the yellows, blues,
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall, as a chaplet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer days do last. Ah me! poor maid,
Born in a tempest, when my mother died,
This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirling me from my friends.

Dion. How now, Marina! why do you keep alone?
How chance my daughter is not with you? Do not Consume your blood with sorrowing; you have
A nurse of me. Lord! how your favour's changed
With this unprofitable woe! Come, come;
Give me your wreath of flowers, ere the sea unar it.
Walk forth with Leonine: the air is quick ther', Piercing, and sharpens well the stomach. Come:—
Leonine, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you;

I'll not hereave you of your servant.

Dion. Come, come;
I love the king your father, and yourself,
With more than foreign heart. We every day
Expect him here: when he shall come and find
Our paragon to all reports, thus blasted,
He will repent the breadth of his great voyage;
Blame both my lord and me, that we have ta'en
No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you,
Walk, and be cheerful once again; reserve
That excellent complexion, which did steal
The eyes of young and old. Care not for me;
I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go;
But yet I have no desire to it.

Dion. Come, come; I know 'tis good for you.
Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least;
Remember what I have said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.
Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while;
Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood;
What! I must have a care of you.

Mar. Thanks, sweet madam.— [Exit Dionyza.]

Is this wind westerly that blows?

Leon. South-west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.

Leon. Was't so?

Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear,

But cried, good heaven! to the sailors, galling
His kingly hands with hauling of the ropes;
And, clasping to the mast, endured a sea
That almost burst the deck, and from the ladder-tackle
Wash'd off a canvass-climber: Ha! says one,
Will out? and, with a dropping industry,
They skip from stern to stern: the boatswain whistles,
The master calls, and trebles their confusion.

Leon. And when was this?

Mar. It was, when I was born:
Never was waves nor wind more violent.

Leon. Come, say your prayers speedily.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,
I grant it: Pray; but be not tedious.
For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.
Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?
Now, as I can remember, by my troth,
I never did her hurt in all my life;
I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn
To any living creature: believe me, la,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wept for it. How have I offended,
Wherein my death might yield her profit, or
My life imply her danger?

Leon. My commission
Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.
You are well-favour'd, and your looks foreshow
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,
When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:
Good sooth, it shew'd well in you; do so now:
Your lady seeks my life; come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,
And will despatch.

Enter Pirates, whilst Marina is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain! (Leonine runs away.)
2 Pirate. A prize! a prize!
3 Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part. Come, let's have her aboard suddenly.

[Exit Pirates with Marina.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Re-enter LEONINE.

Leon. These roving thieves serve the great pirate
Valdes;
And they have seized Marina. Let her go:
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear she's dead,
And thrown into the sea. But I'll see farther;
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd, must by me be slain. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Mitylene. A Room in a Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and BOULT.

Pand. Boul.

Boul. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this mart, by being too weuchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore, let's have fresh ones, whate'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Bawd. Thou say'st true: 'tis not the bringing up of poor bastards, as I think, I have brought up some eleven—

Boul. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again.
But shall I search the market?

Bawd. What else, man? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.

Pand. Thou say'st true; they are too unwholesome, o' conscience. The poor Transilvanian is dead, that lay with the little baggage.

Boul. Ay, she quickly popp'd him; she made him roast-meat for worms;—but I'll go search the market.

Pand. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over. [Exit.]

Baud. Why, to give over, I pray you? is it a shame to get when we are old?

Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity; nor the commodity wages not with the danger; therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep our door hatch'd. Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods, will be strong with us for giving over.

Baud. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.

Pand. As well as we? ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade;—it's no calling;—but here comes Boult.

Enter the Pirates, and BOULT, dragging in MARINA.

Boult. Come your ways. (To Marina.) My masters, you say she's a virgin?

Pirate. O sir, we doubt it not.

Boult. Master, I have gone thorough for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Baud. Boult, has she any qualities?

Boult. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no farther necessity of qualities can make her if he refused.

Baud. What's her price, Boult?

Boult. I cannot be baited one doit of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment. [Exeunt Pander and Pirates.]

Baud. Boult, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity; and cry, He that will give most, shall have her first. Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boult. Performance shall follow. [Exit.]

Mar. Alack, that Leonine was so slack, so slow!

(He should have struck, not spoke;) or that these (Not enough barbarous,) had not overboard [Pirates, thrown me to seek my mother!

Baud. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Baud. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Baud. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault

To 'scape his hands where I was like to die.

Baud. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Baud. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Baud. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Baud. Marry, whip thee, gosling: I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bow'd as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Baud. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up.—Boult's returned.

Enter BOULT.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?

Boult. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice.

Baud. And I pry'thee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boult. 'Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so water'd, that he went to bed to her very description.

Baud. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruffon.

Boult. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that covers i' the hams?

Baud. Who? monsieur Verole's?

Boult. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Baud. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here be does but 'repair it. I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boult. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should lodge them with this sign.

Baud. Pro's you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me; you must seem to do that fearfully, which you commit willingly; to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pity in your lovers. Seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mar. I understand that not.

Boult. O, toke her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Baud. Thou say'st true, i' faith, so they must: for your bride goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boult. 'Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargain'd for the joint,— Baud. Thou may'st cut a morsel off the spit.

Boult. I may so.

Baud. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boult. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Baud. Boult, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have; you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Boult. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not awake the beds of eels, as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly-inclined. I'll bring home some tonight.

Baud. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, Untied I still my virgin knot will keep.

Diana, bid my purpose!

Baud. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter CLEON and DIONYZA.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O *Dionyz*a, such a piece of slaughter The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world, I'd give it to undo the deed. O lady, Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess To equal any single crown of the earth.

I the justice of compare! O villain Leonine, Whom thou hast poison'd too!

If thou hadst drunk to him, it had been a kindness Beoming well thy feat: what canst thou say, When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates, To foster it, nor ever to preserve. She died by night; I'll say so. Who can cross it?

Unless you play the impious innocent, And for an honest attribute, cry out, She died by foul play.

Cle. O, go to. Well, well, Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think The pretty wrens of Tharsus will fly hence, And open this to Pericles. I do shame To think of what a noble strain you are, And of how cold a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding Who ever but his approbation aided, Though not his pre-consent, he did not flow From honourable courses.

Dion. Be it so then: Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead, Nor none can know, Leonine being gone. She did disdain my child, and stood between Her and her fortunes: None would look on her, But east their gazes on Marina's face; Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a malkin, Not worth the time of day. It pierced me thorough; And though you call my course unnatural, You not your child well loving, yet I find, It hurts me, as an enterprise of kindness, Perform'd to your sole daughter.

Cle.

Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles, What should he say? We wept after her heave, And even yet we mourn: her monument Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs

In glittering golden characters express
A general praise to her, and care in us
At whose expense 'tis done.

Cle. Thou art like the harpy,
Which, to betray, doth wear an eagle's face,
Seize with an eagle's talon.

Dion. You are like one, that superstitiously
Doth swear to the gods, that winter kills the flies;
But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the monument of Marina at Tharsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make Sail seas in cockles, have, and wish but for't; [short:]
Making, (to take your imagination,)
From bourn to bourn, region to region.

By you being pardon'd, we commit no crime
To use one language, in each several clime,
Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you,
To learn of me, who stand 't' the gaps to teach you
The stages of our story. Pericles

Is now again thwarting the wayward seas,
(Attended on by many a lord and knight.)
To see his daughter, all his life's delight.
Old Escanes, whom Helicæus late
Advanced in time to great and high estate,
Is left to govern. Bear you it in mind,
Old Helicæus goes along behind.

Well-sailing ships, and bounteous winds, have brought
This king to Tharsus, (think his plot thought;)
So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow on,)
To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.
Like notes and shadows see them move awhile;
Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

(Dumb show.)

Enter at one door. Pericles with his Train; CLEON and DIONYZA at the other. Cleon shows Pericles the tomb of Marina: wherewith Pericles makes lamentation, puts on sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then Cleon and Dionysa retire.

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show?
This horror'd passion stands for true old wo;
And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,
With sighs shot through, and biggest tears o'er-shower'd,
Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears
Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;
He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears
A teiopest, which his mortal vessel tents,
And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit
The epitaph for Marina writ
By wicked Dionysa.

(Reads the inscription on Marina's monument.)

The fairest, sweetest, and best, lies here,
Who wither'd in her spring of year,
She was of Tyrus, the king's daughter,
On whom foul death hath made this slaughter:
Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,
Thetis, being proud, swallow'd some part o' the earth
Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd,
Hath Thetis' birth-child on the heavens besow'd:
Wherefore she does (and swears she'll never stint)
Make raging battery upon shores of fint.
No visor does become black villainy,
So well as soft and tender flattery.
Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,
And bear his courses to be ordered
By lady fortune; while our scenes display
His daughter's wo, and heavy well-a-day,
In her unholty service. Patience then,
And think you now are all in Mitylene. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Mitylene. A Street before the Brothel.

Enter, from the brothel, two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Did you ever hear the like?
2 Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.
1 Gent. But to have divinity preached there! did you ever dream of such a thing?
2 Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdyhouses: Shall we go hear the vestals sing?
1 Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous; but I am out of the road of rutting, for ever. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. A Room in the Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and BOLT.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Fy, fy upon her; she is able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation. We must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fitment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-reacons, her prayers, her knees:
that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should chappen a kiss of her.

Boult. 'Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll dishonour us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swearers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. 'Faith, there's no way to be rid on't, but by the way to the pox. Here comes the lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and low, if the peevish haggage would but give way to customers.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now? How a dozen of virginities?

Bawd. Now, the gods to bless your honour!

Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may say so: 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would — but there never came her like in Mitylene.

Lys. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou wouldst say —

Bawd. Your honour knows what 'tis to say, well enough.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth.

Boult. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but —

Lys. What, pr'ythee?

Boult. O sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk; — never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. 'Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you; — leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a while and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Bawd. First, I would have you note, that this is an honourable man. (To Mar. whom she takes aside.)

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern this country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. 'Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? he will lute your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Bawd. My lord, she's not paced yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together,

[Exeunt Bawd, Pander, and Boult.]

Lys. Go the ways. — Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. What I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else, look friends upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place. Come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, shew it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good That thought you worthy of it.

Lys. How's this? how's this? — some more; — be sage.

Mar. For me, That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune Hath placed me here within this loathsome sty, Where, since I came, diseases have been sold Dearer than physic, — O that the good gods Would set me free from this unhallow'd place, Though they did change me to the meanest bird That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think Thou couldst have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou couldst.

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind, Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee: Persever still in that clear way thou goest, And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, he you thoughten That I came with no ill intent: for to me The very doors and windows savour vilely. Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue, and I doubt not but thy training hath been noble. — Hold; here's more gold for thee. —

A curse upon him, die he like a thief, That robs thee of thy goodness? If thou hear'st from It shall be for thy good. [Exit.]

(As Lysimachus is putting up his purse, BOULT enters.)

Boult. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Avaunt, thou damned door-keeper! Your house,

But for this virgin that doth prop it up, Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away! [Exit.]

Boult. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope, shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your way. We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Bawd.

Bawd. How now! What's the matter?

Boult. Worse and worse, mistress; she has here spoken holy words to the lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. O abominable!

Boult. She makes our profession as it were to stink, for the face of the gods.

Bawd. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boult. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too.

Bawd. Boult, take her away; use her at thy pleasure; crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.

Boult. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Bawd. She conjures; you away with her. Would she had never come within my doors! Marry hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of women-kind? Marry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays! [Exit.]

Boult. Come, mistress: come your way with me.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boult. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee, tell me one thing first.

Boult. Come now, your one thing.

Mar. What canst thou wish thine enemy to be?

Boult. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art, since they do better thee in their command. Thou hold'st a place, for which the pain'd'st fiend of hell would not in reputation change; Thou'rt the damn'd door-keeper to every coast, That hither comes inquiring for his rib; To the choleric fasting of each rogue thy ear is tiable; thy very food is such As hath been helch'd on by infected lungs.

Boult. What would you have me? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for three loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the world to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou deest. Empty Old receptacles, common sewers, of filth; Serve by indenture to the common hangman; Any of these ways are better yet than this: For that which thou professes, a baboon, Could he but speak, would own a name too dear. O that the gods would safely from this place Deliver me! Here, here is gold for thee. If that thy master would gain aught by me, Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance, With other virtues, which I'll keep from hoast; And I will undertake all these to teach. I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again, And prostitute me to the basest groom That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But, amongst honest women? Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent; therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can; come your ways. [Exit.]

ACT V.

Enter GOWR.

Gow. Marina thus the brothel 'scapes, and chances Into an honest house, our story says.

She sings like one immortal, and she dances As goddess-like to her admir'd lays:

Deep clerks she dumbs; and with her neeld composes Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch or berry;

That even her art sisters the natural roses;

Her inkle, silk, twin with the rubied cherry: That pupils lacks she none of noble race,

Who pour their honny on her; and her gain She views the cursed bawd. Here we her place;

And to her father turn our thoughts again, Where we left him, on the sea. We there him lost;

Whence, driven before the winds, he is arriv'd Here where his daughter dwells; and on this coast

Suppose him now at anchor. The city striv'd God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence Lysimachus our Tyrian ship espies, His hanners sable, trimm'd with rich expense;

And to him in his barge with fervour hies. In your supposing once more put your sight;

Of heavy Pericles think this the bark: Where, what is done in action, more, if might,

Shall be discovered; please you sit, and hark. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—On board Pericles' Ship, off Mitylene.

A close pavilion on deck, with a curtain before it; Pericles within it, reclining on a couch. A barge lying beside the Tyrian vessel.

*Enter two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian vessel, the other to the barge: to them HELICANUS.*

Tyr. Sail. Who's the lord Helicanus? he can resolve you. (To the sailor of Mitylene.)

O, here he is.—

Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene;

And in it is Lysimachus the governor,

Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?

Hel. Tox he have his. Gall up some gentlemen.

Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter two Gentlemen

I Gent. Doth your lordship call?

Hel. Gentlemen,

There is some of world would come aboard: I pray you, To greet them fairly.

(The Gentlemen and the two Sailors descenda, and go on board the barge.)

*Enter, from thence, LYSIMACHUS and Lords; the Tyrian Gentlemen, and the two Sailors.*

Tyr. Sail. Sir,

This is the man that can, in aught you would,

Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! The gods preserve you!

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,
And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.
Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,
Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
I made to it, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, sir, what is your place?

Lys. I am governor of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir,
Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;
A man, who for this three months hath not spoken
To any one, nor taken sustenance,
But to prorogue his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperature?

Hel. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat;
But the main grief of all springs from the loss
Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then?

Hel. But bootless is your sight; he will not speak
To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him, sir: (Pericles discovered.) this
Was a goodly person,
Till the disaster, that, one mortal night,
Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir, king, all hail! the gods preserve you! Hail,
Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

Lord. Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I durst wager,
Would win some words of him.

Lys. 'Tis well thought.

She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other choice attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,
Which now are midway stopp'd:
She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow maidens, now within
The leafy shelter, that abuts against
The island's side.

(He whispers one of the attendant Lords.)

[Exit Lord, in the barge of Lysimachus.]

Hel. Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit
That bears recovery's name. But, since your kindness
We have stretch'd thus far, let us hearken you farther,
That for our old we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O sir, a courtesy,

Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every graft would send a caterpillar,
And so infect our province. — Yet once more
Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir, I will recount it; —
But see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the barge, Lord, MARINA, and a Young Lady.

Lys. O, here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one! —
Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. A gallant lady.

Lys. She's such, that were I well assured she came
Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish
No better choice, and think me rarely wed. —
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:
If that thy prosperous-artificial feat
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her,
And the gods make her prosperous: (Marina stings.)

Lys. Mark'd he your music?

Lys. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear: —

Per. Hum! ha!

Mar. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gazed on, comet-like: she speaks,
My lord, that, maybe, hath endured a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath rooted out my parentage,

And to the world and awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude. — I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak. (Aside.)

Per. My fortunes — parentage — good parentage —
To equal mine! — was it not thus? what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,
You would not do me violence.

Per. I do think so.

I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me. —
You are like something that — What country-woman?
Here of these shores?

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am greet with you, and shall deliver weeping,
My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square brows.

Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;
As silver-voiced; her eyes as jewel-like,
And eased as — in pace another Juno;
Who starves — she feeds, and makes them hungry.
The more she gives them speech. — Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stronger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achieved you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?

Mar. Should I tell my history,
'T would seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Pr'ythee speak;
Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Modest as justice, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crown'd truth to dwell in: I'll believe thee,
And make my senses credit thy relation,

To points that seem impossible for thou look'st
Like one I loved indeed. — What were thy friends?
Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceived thee,) that thou camest
From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st
Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal mine,
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing, indeed,
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story;
If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look
Like Patience, gazing on kings' graves, and smiling
Extremity out of act. — What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin?
Recount, I do beseech thee; come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, sir, is Marina.

Per. O, I am mark'd,
And thou by some incens'd god sent hither
To make the world laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good sir,
Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient;
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name Marina,
Was given me by one that had some power;
My father, and a king.

Per. How! a king's daughter?

Mar. And call'd Marina?

Per. You said you would believe me;
But, not to be a troubler of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are no fairy?
No motion? — Well, speak on. — Where were you born?
And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Call'd Marina,
For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea? thy mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychorida hath oft Deliver'd weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little!
This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep
Did mock sad fools withal: this cannot be.
My daughter's hurried. (Aside.) Well: — where were you bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mar. You'll scarce believe me; were hest I did give
Per. I will believe you by the syllable [o'er.
 Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:—
 How came you in these parts? where were you bred?
Mar. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave me;
 Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
 Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd
 A villain to attempt it, who having drawn,
 A crew of pirates came and rescued me,
 Brought me to Mitylene. But now, good sir, Whither will you have me? Why do you weep? It may be,
 You think me an impostor: no, good faith:
 I am the daughter to king Pericles,
 If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!
Hel. Calls my gracious lord?
Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
 Most wise in general: Tell me, if thou caust,
 What this maid is, or what is like to be,
 That thus hath made me weep?
Hel. I know not; but Here is the regent, sir, of Mitylene,
 Speaks nobly of her.

Lys. She would never tell
 Her parentage; being demanded that,
 She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir;
 Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
 Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me,
 O'erbear the shores of my mortality,
 And drown me with their sweetness.—O come hither,
 Thou that beget'st him that did thee beget;
 Thou that wast horn at sea, buried at Tharsus,
 And found at sea again!—O Helicanus,
 Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as long
 As thunder threatens us: This is Marina.—
 What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,
 For truth can never be confirm'd enough,
 Though doubts did ever sleep.

Mar. First, sir, I pray,
 What is your title?
Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
 (As in the rest thou hast been godlike perfect)
 My drown'd queen's name? thou art the heir of king—
 And another life to Pericles thy father. [doms,

Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter, than
 To say, my mother's name was Thaisa?
 Thaisa was my mother, who did end,
 The minute I began.

Per. Now, blessing on thee, rise; thou art my child.
 Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus,
 'Not dead at Tharsus, as she should have been,
 By savage Cleon,) she shall tell thee all;
 When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge,
 She is thy very princess.—Who is this?

Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mitylene,
 Who, hearing of your melancholy state,
 Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you, sir.
 Give me my robes; I am wild in my beholding.
 O Heavens bless my girl! But hark, what music?
 Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him
 O'er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt,
 How sure you are my daughter.—But what music?
Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. None?
 The music of the spheres: list, my Marina.
Lys. It is not good to cross him; give him way.
Per. Rarest sounds!

Do ye not hear?
Lys. Music? my lord, I hear—
Per. Most heavenly music;
 It nips me unto list'ning, and thick slumber
 Hangs on mine eye-lids; let me rest. (He sleeps.)
Lys. A pillow for his head;
 (The curtain before the Pavilion of Pericles is closed.)

So leave him all.—Well, my companion-friends,
 If this but answer to my just belief,
 I'll well remember you.

[Exit Lysimachus, Helicanus, Marina, and attendant Lady.]

SCENE II.—The same.

PERICLES on the deck asleep; DIANA appearing to him as in a vision.

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus: hie thee thither,
 And do upon mine altar sacrifice.
 There, when my maiden priests are met together,
 Before the people all,
 Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:

To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's, call,
 And give them repetition to the life.
 Perform my bidding, or thou livest in wo:
 Do't and be happy, by my silver bow,
 Awake, and tell thy dream. (Diana disappears.)
Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentive,
 I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, and MARINA.

Hel. Sir,
Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike
 The inhospitable Cleon; but I am
 For other service first: toward Ephesus
 Turn our blown sails; eftsoons I'll tell thee why.—
 (To Helicanus.)
 Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,
 And give you gold for such provision
 As our intents will need?
Lys. With all my heart, sir; and when you come ashore,

I have another suit.
Per. You shall prevail,
 Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems
 You have been noble towards her.
Lys. Sir, lend your arm.
Per. Come, my Marina. [Exit.]

Enter GOWER, before the temple of Diana at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;
 More a little, and then done.
 This, as my last boon, give me,
 (For such kindness must relieve me,)
 That you aptly will suppose
 What pageantry, what feats, what shows,
 What minstrelsy, and pretty din,
 The regent made in Mitylin,
 To greet the king. So he has thrived,
 That he is promised to be wived,
 To fair Marina: but in no wise,
 Till he hath done his sacrifice,
 As Dian bade: whereto being bound,
 The interim, pray you, all confound.
 In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd,
 And wishes fall out as they're will'd.
 At Ephesus, the temple see,
 Our king, and all his company,
 That he can hither come so soon,
 Is by your fancy's thankful boon. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Temple of Diana at Ephesus:
 THAISA standing near the Altar, as High Priest-tress; a number of Virgins on each side; CERIMON and other inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter PERICLES, with his Train; LYSIMACHUS,
 HELICANUS, MARINA, and a Lady.

Per. Hail, Dian! To perform thy just command,
 I here confess myself the king of Tyre;
 Who, frighted from my country, did wed
 The fair Thaisa, at Peutapolis.
 At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth
 A maid child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,
 Wears set thy silver livery. She at Tharsus
 Was nursed with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
 He sought to murder: but her better stars
 Ridd her to Mitylene; against whose shore
 Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us,
 Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thai. Voice and favour!
 You are, you are—O royal Pericles!— (She faints.)
Per. What means the woman? she dies! help, gentlemen!

Cer. Noble sir,
 If you have told Diana's altar true,
 This is your wife.
Per. Reverend appearer, no;
 I threw her o'erboard with these very arms.

Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.
Per. 'Tis most certain.
Cer. Look to the lady;—O, she's but o'erjoy'd.
 Early, one blast'ring morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I oped the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and placed her
 Here in Diana's temple.

Per. May we see them?
Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house, Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is Recover'd.
Thai. O, let me look!
 If he be none of mine, my sanctity

Will to my sense bend no licentious ear,
But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,
A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa?
Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead
And drown'd.

Per. Immortal Dian!
Thai. Now I know you better.—

When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring.
(Shows a ring.)

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness

Makes my past miseries sport: You shall do well,
That on the touching of her liss I may Melt, and no more be seen. O come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Mar. My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.
(Kneels to Thaisa.)

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina,
For she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd, and mine own!

Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thai. I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre,

I left behind an ancient substitute.

Can you remember what I call'd the man?
I have named him oft.

Thai. 'Twas Helicanus then.

Per. Still confirmation:
Embrace him, dear Thaisa; this is he.
Now do I long to hear how you were found;
How possibly preserved; and whom to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord: this man,
Through whom the gods have shewn their power; that
From first to last resolve you. [can

Per. Reverend sir,
The gods can have no mortal officer

More like a god than you. Will you deliver
How this dead queen re-lives?

Cer. I will, my lord.
Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shewn you all was found with her;
How she came plac'd here within the temple;
No needful thing omitted.

Per. Praise Diana!

I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer
My night oblations to thee. Thaisa,
This prince, the fair-betroth'd of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,
This ornament that makes me look so dismal,
Will I, my loved Marina, clip to forin;
And what these fourteen years no razor touch'd,
To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit,
Sir, that my father's dead.
Per. Heavens make a star of him! Yet there, my We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves [queen,
Will in that kingdom spend our following days;
Our son and daughter shall in Tyre reign.
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way. [Exeunt.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. In Antioch, and his daughter, you have heard
Of inoustrous lust the due and just reward:

In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen
(Although assail'd with fortune fierce and keen)
Virtue preserved from fell destruction's blast,
Led on by Heaven, and crown'd with joy at last.

In Helicanus may you well descry
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears,
The worth that learned charity eye wears.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their curs'd deed, and honour'd name
Of Pericles, to rage the city turn;
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seem'd so content
To punish them: although not done, but meant.
So on your patience evermore attending,
New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending.
[Exit Gower.

Trojan and Greek Soldiers, and Attendants

SCENE, — Troy, and the Grecian Camp before it.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Frangt with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: Sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forward towards Phrygia; and their vow is made,

To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come;
And the deep-drawing barks do there discharge
Their warlike fraughtage; Now on Dardon plain
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions; Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbrida, Ilius, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with massy staples,

And responsive and fulfilling bolts.
 Scorn up the sons of Troy,
 Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
 On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
 Sets all on hazard!—And hither am I come
 A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
 Of author's pen, or actor's voice; but suited
 In like conditions as our argument,—
 To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
 Leaps o'er the vanot and firstlings of those broils
 Gunning in the middle; starting thence away
 To what may be digested in a play.
 Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
 Now good, or had, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter TROILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Tro. Call here my varlet, I'll unarm again;
 Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
 That find such cruel battle here within?
 Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
 Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength.

Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;
 But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
 Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance;
 Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
 And skill-less as unpractised infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this; for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word—hereafter the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to hurt your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,
 Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;
 And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
 So, traitor! when she comes!—when is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my heart,
 As wedg'd with a sigh, would rive in twain;
 Lost Hector or my father should perceive me,
 I have (as when the sun doth light a storm)
 Dared this sigh in wrinkle of a smile;
 But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,
 Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, (well, go to,) there were no more comparison between the women.—But, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her.—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit; but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
 When I do tell thee, There my hopes lie drown'd,
 Reply not in how many fathoms deep
 They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
 In Cressid's love: Thou answer'st, She is fair;
 Point'st in the open ulcer of my heart
 Her eyes, her hair, her cheeks, her gait, her voice;
 Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
 In whose comparison all whites are ink,
 Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure
 The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense
 Hard as the palm of ploughman! This thou tell'st me,
 As true thou tell'st me, when I say—I love her;
 But saying, thus, instead of oil and balm,
 Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me,
 The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. 'Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is; if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus! How now, Pandarus?

Pan. I have had my labour for my travel: ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you: gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour. [me?]

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father: let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me; I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit Pandarus. An alarm.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair. When with your blood you daily paint her thus. I cannot fight upon this argument; It is too starved a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me!

I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar;

And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,

As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.

Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,

What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?

Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl;

Between our Ilium, and where she resides,

Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;

Ourselves, the merchant; and this sailing Pandar,

Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarm. Enter ENEAS.

Ene. How now, prince Troilus? wherefore not asfold?

Tro. Because not there: This woman's answer sorts, For wemush it is to be from thence.

What news, Eneas, from the field to day?

Ene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Eneas?

Ene. By whom, Eneas? Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn;

Paris is gored with Menelaus' horn. (Alarm.)

Ene. Hark! what good sport is out of town to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if would I might, were may,—

But, to the sport abroad;—Are you bound thither?

Ene. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Street.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale,

To see the battle. Hector, whose patience

Is, as a virtue, fix'd, to-day was moved;

He chid Andronche, and struck his armourer;

And, like as there were husbandry in war,

Before the sun rose, he was harness'd light.

And to the field goes he; where every flower

Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw

In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this: There is among the

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;

They call him Ajax.

Cres. Good; and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,

And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions; he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant; a man, into whom nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue, that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attain, but he carries some stein of it: He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: He hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or pluriud

Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say, he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid: What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came? Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone: but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so; Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too: he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that: and there is Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus; I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man, if you see him?

Cres. Ay; if ever I saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,— Cres. So he is.

Pan. —'Condition, I had gone bare-foot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself.—Would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; Time must friend, or end: Well, Troilus, well,—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale, when the other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities;—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour, (for so 'tis, I must confess,)—Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief, Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think, Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into a compass'd window,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will 'he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Pan. But to prove to you, that Helen loves him;—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy!—How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an' 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then:—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,— Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh to think how she tickled his chin;—Indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But, there was such laughing;—Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes:—Did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus's chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true: make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband? The forked one, quoth he; pluck it out, and give it him. But there was such laughing; and Heien so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laugh'd, that it pass'd.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true; he will weep you, an' 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an' 'twere a nettle against May. (A retreat sound.)

Pan. Hark, they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass towards Ilium? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

ÆNEAS passes over the stage.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Pan. That's Æneas: Is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you. But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

ANTENOR passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor; he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough; he's one of the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll shew you Troilus anon; if he see me, you shall see him ned at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes over.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; There's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector;—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is 'a not! It does a man's heart good.—Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there! There's no jesting; there's laying on; take 't off who will, as they say: there be backs!

Cres. Be those with swords?

PARIS passes over.

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not: an the devil come to him, it's all one: By god's lid, it does one's heart good:—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: look ye yonder, niece: is 't not a gallant man too, is 't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said, he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! 'would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon

Cres. Who's that?

HELENUS passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel, where Troilus is:—That's Helenus;—I think he went not forth to-day:—That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no:—yes, he'll fight indifferently well:—I marvel, where Troilus is!—Hark: do you not hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus: 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry.

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mirk him; note him;—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece: look you, how his sword is hoodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's; And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three-and-twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Forces pass over the Stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die if the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look: the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles; a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a sorry camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man; and then to be haked with no date in the pie,—for then the man's date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; and upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: If I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come: [Exit Boy.]

I doubt, he he hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle.—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a hand.

[Exit Pandarus.]

Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love's full sacrifice,

He offers in another's enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be;

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing:

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing!

That she, beloved, knows nought, that knows not this,— Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:
That she was never yet, that ever knew
Love got so sweet, as when desire did sue:—
Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,— Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech:
Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon's Tent.

Trumpets. Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?

The ample proposition, that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below,

Falls in the promised largeness: checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd;

As knots, by the confuſſ of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us,

That we come short of our suppose so far,

That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand;

Sith every action, that hath gone before,

Whereof we have record, trial did draw

Bias and thwart, not answering the aim,

And that unbodied figure of the thought,

That gave 't surmiſed shape. Why, then, you princes,

Do you with checks abash'd behold our works;

And think them shames, which are, indeed, nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove,

To find perſiſtive conſtancy in men?

The fineness of which metal is not found

In fortune's love: for then, the bold and coward,

The wise and fool, the artist and unread,

The hard and soft, seem all affined and kin:

But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan

Puffing at all, winnows the light away;

And what hath mass or matter, by itself

Lies, rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply

Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance

Lies the true proof of men: The sea being smooth,

How many shallow bauble boats dare sail

Upon her patient breast, making their way

With those of nobler hulk?

But let the ruffian Bores once enrage

The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold

The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,

Bounding between the two moist elements,

Like Perseus' horse: Where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak timber'd sides but even now

Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbour fled,

Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so

Doth valour's shew, and valour's worth, divide,

In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and brightness,

The herd hath more annoyance by the breeze,

Than by the tiger: but when the splitting wind

Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,

And flies fled under shade, Why, then, the thing of courage,

As roused with rage, with rage doth sympathize,

And with an accent tuned in self-same key,

Returns to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon,—

Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,

Heart of our numbers, sole and only spirit,

In whom the tempers and the minds of all

Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.

Besides the applause and approbation

The which,—most mighty for thy piece and sway,—

(To Agamemnon.)

And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,—

(To Nestor.)

I give to both your speeches,—which were such,

As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece

Should hold up high in brass; and such again,

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,

Should with a bond of air (strong as the axle-tree

On which heaven rides,) knit all the Greekish ears

To his experienced tongue,—set let it please both,—

Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be 't of less expect

That matter needless, of importless hurden,

Divide thy lips; than we are confident,

When rank Therakites opes his mastiff jaws,

We shall hear music, wit, and music.

Ulysses. Troy, ~~rest~~ upon his basis, had been down,
 And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
 But for these instances.
 The speciality of rule hath been neglected:
 And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand
 Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
 Whence that the general is not like the hive,
 To whom the foragers shall all repair,
 What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,
 The unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask.
 The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,
 Observe degree, priority, and place,
 Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
 Office, and custom, in all line of order;
 And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
 In noble eminence enthroned and sphered
 Amidst the other; whose med'cinable eye
 Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
 And posts like the commandment of a king,
 Sans check, to good and bad: But, when the planets,
 In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
 What plagues, and what portents? what mutiny?
 What raging of the sea? shaking of earth?
 Commotion in the winds? frights, changes, horrors,
 Divert and crack, rend and deracinate?
 The unity and married calm of states
 Quite from their fixture? O, when degree is shaken,
 Which is the ladder of all high designs,
 The enterprise is sick! How could communities,
 Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
 Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
 The primogenitive and due of birth,
 Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
 But by degree, stand in authentic place?
 Take but degree away, untune that string,
 And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
 In mere oppugnancy: The bounded waters
 Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
 And make a sop of all this solid globe:
 Strength should be lord of imbecility,
 And the rude son should strike his father dead:
 Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong,
 (Between whose endless jar justice resides,)
 Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
 Then every thing includes itself in power,
 Power into will, will into appetite;
 And appetite, an universal wolf,
 So doubly seconded with wit and power,
 Must make perforce an universal prey,
 And last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
 This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
 Follows the choking.
 And this neglect of degree it is,
 That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
 It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd
 By him one step below; he, by the next;
 That next, by him beneath; so every step,
 Exemplary by the first pace, that is sick
 Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
 Of pale and bloodless emulation:
 And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
 Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
 Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.
Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
 The fever, wherof all our power is sick.
Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
 What is the remedy?
Ulysses. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns
 The sinew and the forehead of our host,—
 Having his ear full of his airy fame,
 Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
 Lies mocking our designs: With him, Patroclus,
 Upon a lazy bed, the long-day day
 Breaks scurril jests;
 And with ridiculous and awkward action,
 (Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,)
 He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
 Thy topless deputation he puts on;
 And, like a strutting player,—whose comelit
 Lies in his hamstrings, and doth think it rich
 To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
 Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,—
 Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming
 He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
 'Tis like a chime a-mending; with terms unquarred,
 Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd,
 Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff,
 The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
 From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
 Cries—Excellent!—'tis Agamemnon just—
Now play me Nestor:—hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he, being 'drest to some oration,
 That's done:—as near as the extremest ends

Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and his wife:
 Yet good Achilles still cries, Excellent!
 'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm,
 And then, forthwith, the faint defects of age
 Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,
 And with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget,
 Shake in and out the rivet:—And at this sport,
 Sir Valour dies; cries, O! enough, Patroclus;—
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my steel!—And in this fashion
 All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
 Severals and generals of grace exact,
 Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
 Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
 Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
 As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twin (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
 With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
 Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
 In such a rein, in full as proud a place
 As broad Achilles: keeps his tent like him;
 Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war,
 Bold as an oracle; and sets Theristes
 (A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint,)
 To match us in comparisons with dirt:
 To weaken and discredit our exposure,
 How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulysses. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
 Count wisdom as no member of the war;
 Foretell prescience, and esteem no act
 But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
 That do contrive how many hands shall strike.
 When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure
 Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight.—
 Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
 They call this,—bed-work, mappery, closet war:
 So that the ram, that batters down the wall,
 For the great swing and rudeness of his poize,
 They place before his hand, that made the engine;
 Or those, that with the fineness of their souls
 By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
 Makes many Thetis' sons. (Trumpet sounds.)
Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Men. From Troy,
Agam. What would you 'fore our tent?
Æne. Is this Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray?
Agam. Even this.
Æne. May one, that is a herald, and a prince,
 Do a fair message to his kingly ears?
Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
 'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
 Call Agamemnon head and general.
Æne. Fair leave, and large security. How may
 A stranger to those most imperial looks
 Know them from eyes of other mortals?
Agam. How?
Æne. Ay;

I ask, that I might waken reverence,
 And hid the cheek be ready with a blush,
 Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
 The youthful Phœbus:
 Which is that god in office, guiding men?
 Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?
Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy
 Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as dehonair, unarm'd,
 As bending anels; that's their fame in peace:
 But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
 Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and Jove's accord,

Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas,
 Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!
 The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
 If that the praised himself bring the praise forth:
 But what the repining enemy commends,
 That breath fame follows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas?
Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.
Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?
Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.
Agam. He hears nought privately, that comes from Troy.
Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him:
 I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;
 To set his sense on the attentive bent,
 And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind ;
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour :
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents ;—
And every Greek of mettle let him know,
What Troy means fairly, shall be spoke aloud.
(Trumpet sounds.)

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy
A prince call'd Hector, (Priam is his father,)
Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown ; he bade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords !
If there be one, among the fair'st of Greece,
That holds his honour higher than his ease ;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril ;
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear ;
That loves his mistress more than in confession,
(With truant vows to her own lips he loves.)
And dare avow her beauty and her worth,
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms ;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love :
If any come, Hector shall honour him ;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sun-burn'd, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, lord Æneas ;
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home : But we are soldiers ;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love !
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,

That one meets Hector ; if none else, I am he.
Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd ; he is old now ;
But, if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man, that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, Tell him from me,—
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver ;
And in my vanbrace put this wither'd brawn ;
And, meeting him, will tell him, that my lady
Was fairer than his grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world : His youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Æne. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth !
Ulyss. Amen.

Agam. Fair lord Æneas, let me touch your hand ;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir,
Achilles shall have word of this intent ;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent ;
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but Ulysses and Nestor.]

Ulyss. Nestor,—
Nest. What says Ulysses ?
Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,
Be you my time to bring it to some shap.

Nest. What is't ?
Ulyss. This 'tis :
Blunt wedges rive hard knots : The seeded pride,
That hath to this maturity blown up,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how ?
Ulyss. This challenge, that the gallant Hector sends
However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up :
And, in the publication, make no strain,
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya,—though, Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough,—will, with great speed of judgment,
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you ?
Nest. Yes,
It is most meet : whom may you else oppose,
That can from Hector bring those honours off,
If not Achilles ? Though 't be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells ;
For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute
With their first palate : And trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly proved
In this wild action : for the success,

Although particular, shall give a scantling
Of good or bad unto the general ;
And in such indexes, although small tricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is supposed,
He, that meets Hector, issues from our choice,
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election ; and doth both,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues : Who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence a conquering part,
To steel a strong opinion to themselves ?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments.
In no less working, than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech ;—
Therefore, 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell ; if not,
The lustre of the better shall exceed,
By shewing the worst first. Do not consent,
That ever Hector and Achilles meet ;
For both our honour and our shame, in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange followers. [they ?]

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes : what are Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
We e he not proud, we all should share with him :

But he already is too in-olent ;
And we were better parch in Afric sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector fair : If he were foil'd,
Why, then we did our main opinion crush
In faint of our best man. No, make a lottery ;
And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector : Among ourselves,
Give him allowance for the better man,
For that will physic the great Myrmidon,
Who broils in dull applause ; and make him fall
His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices : If he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still,
That we have better men. But, hit or miss,
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,—
Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,
Now I begin to relish thy advice ;
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon : go we to him straight.
Two curs shall tame each other : Pride alone
Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Grecian Camp

Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils ? full, all over, generally ?

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. And those boils did run ?—Say so,—did not the general run then ? were not that a botchy core ?

Ajax. Dog.
Ther. Then would come some matter from him ; I see none now.

Ajax. Thou hitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear ?
Feel then. (Strikes him.)

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord !

Ajax. Speak then, thou unsalted leaven, speak ; I'll beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness ;
but, I think, thy horse will sooner can an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou ? a red murrain of thy jade's tricks !

Ajax. Toad-stool, learn me the proclamation,— Ther. Dost thou think, I have no sense, thou strik'st me thus ?

Ajax. The proclamation,—
Ther. Thou art proclaim'd a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not ; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee ; I would make thee the bathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursons, thou strik'st as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,— Ther. Thou grumblest and ralest every hour on Achilles ; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would punt thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur!

(Beating him.)

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinege may tutor thee: Thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here put to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur! (Beating him.)

Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? wherefore do you thus? How now, Thersites? what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do; What's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I do so.

Ther. But yet, you look not well upon him; for, whoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have hobbled his brain, more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax,—who wars his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

(Ajax offers to strike him, Achilles interposes.)

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you there.

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl, go learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go, to, go.

Ther. I serve thee voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so?—a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; 'a were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy, ere your grandsires had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth: To, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace.

Ther. I will hold my peace, when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents; I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our host,

That Hector, by the first hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twist our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms, That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare Maintain—I know not what; 'tis trash: Farewell.
Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?
Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery; otherwise, He knew his meaning.

Ajax. O, his meaning you—I'll go learn more of it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent, Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks: Deliver Helen, and all damage she—As honour, loss of time, travel, expense, Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consumed In hot digestion of this cornorant war,— Shall be struck off—Hector, what say you to't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I, As far as toucheth my particular, yet,

Dread Priam, There is no lady of more softer bowels, More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,

More ready to cry out—Who knows what follows?

Than Hector is: The wound of peace is surety,

Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd

The beacon of the wise, the tent, that searches

To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go;

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tittle soul, 'mongst many thousand dimes,

Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours;

If we have lost so many tents of ours,

To guard a thing not ours; not worth to us,

Had it our name, the value of one ten,

What merit 'is in that reason, which denies

The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fy, fy, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,

So great as our dread father, in a scale

Of common ounces? will you with counters sum

The past-proportion of his infinite?

And buckle-in a waist most fathomless,

With spans, and inches so diminutive

As fears and reasons? fy, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel, though you hate so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them. Should not our father

Bear the great sway of his affairs with reason,

Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest,

You put your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm;

You know, a sword, employ'd, is perilous,

And reason flies the object of all harm:

Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds

A Grecian and his sword, if he do set

The very wings of reason to his heels;

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,

Or like a star dis-orb'd?—Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates, and sleep: Manhood and honour

Should have bare hearts, would they but fat their

thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect

Make livers pale, and lusthood deject.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost

The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;

It holds its estimate and dignity

As well wherein 'tis precious of itself

As in the prizer: 'tis mad idolatry,

To make the service greater than the god;

And the will doties, that is attributive

To what infectionally itself affects,

Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election

Is led on in the conduct of my will;

My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

Of will and judgment: How may I avoid,

Although my will distaste what it elected,

The wife I chose? there can be no evasion

To blench from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,

When we have sold them them; nor the remainder viands

We do not throw in unrespective steve,

Because we now are full. It was thought meet,

Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:

Your breath with full consent bellied his sails:
The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,
And did him service: he touch'd the ports desired;
And, for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive,
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness
Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the mourning.
Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,
And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,
(As you must needs, for you all cried—Go, go,)
If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize,
(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands
And cried—Inestimable!) why do you now
The issue of your proper wisdoms rate;
And do a deed, that fortune never did,
Bigger the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land! O theft most base;
'Tis that we have stolen which we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. (Within.) Cry, Trojans, cry!
Tri. What noise? what shriek is this?
Tro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.
Cas. (Within.) Cry, Trojans!
Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.
Hect. Peace, sister, peace.
Cas. Virgins, and boys, mid-age and wrinkled elders,
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
Cry. Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Cry. Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a wo:
Cry. Cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.]
Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains
Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel,
Which hath our several honours all engaged
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us
Such things, as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings, as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas, can these my single arms?
What propugnation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Tri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a heauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wiped off, in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransom'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up
On terms of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this
Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw;
When Helen's defended, nor none so noble,
Whose life we'll bestow'd, or death unfeared,
Where Helen is the subject: then, I say,

Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,—but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege, do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves,
All dues be render'd to their owners: Now,
What nearer debt in all humanity,
Than wife is to the husband? If this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection;
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same;
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: 'Tis thus to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hec-tor's opinion
Is this, in way of truth; yet, nevertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:
Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame, in time to come, canonize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promised glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus.—
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertised, their general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites? what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! 'would, it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me: 'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles, — a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus; if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons, and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache! — for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a pack-t. I have said my prayers; and devil envy, say amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites? Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation; but it is no matter; Thissell upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! Heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she, that lays thee out, says — thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen.

Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout! Wast thou in prayer?
Ther. Ay; the Heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Therites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what's Agamemnon?

Patr. Thy commander, Achilles;—then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Therites. Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy kinsman, Patroclus: Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayest tell, that knowest.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles: Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool; I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proceed, Therites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Therites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Therites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover.—It suffices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody:—Come in with me, Therites. [Exit.]

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such kusvery! all the argument is, a cuckold, and a whore; a good quarrel, to draw enulous factions, and to bleed to death upon. Now the dry scriptio on the subject! and war, and lechery, confound all! [Exit.]

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill disposed, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him, that we are here.

He shent our messengers; and we lay by

Our appointments, visiting of him:

Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think

We dare not move the question of our place,

Or know not what we are.

Patr. Ulysses. I shall say so to him. [Exit.]

Ulyss. We saw him ~~at~~ the opening of his tent; He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: But why, why? let him shew us a cause.—A word, my lord. [Takes Agamemnon aside.]

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Nest. Who? Therites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument; Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish than their faction: But it was a strong composure, a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity, that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say,—he is much sorry, If any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state, To call upon him; he hopes, it is no other, But, for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.

Agem. Hear you, Patroclus:—

We are too well acquainted with these answers;

But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,

Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Which attribute he hath; and much the reason

Why we ascribe it to him: yet all his virtues,—

Not virtuously on his own part beheld,—

Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss;

Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot unspiced. Go and tell him, We come to speak with him: And you shall not sin, If you do say—we think him over-proud, And under-honest; in self-assumption greater, Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than him—Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on; [self Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His pettish lures, his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add, That, if he overhold his price so much, We'll uone of him; but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report—Bring action hither, this cannot go to war: A stirring dwarf we do allowance give Before a sleeping giant;—Tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied, We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter.

[Exit Ulysses.]

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say— he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtue's the fairer. He, that is proud, eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. And yet he loves himself: Is it not strange?

[Aside.]

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none; But carries on the stream of his dispose, Without observance or respect of any, In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request, Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake He makes important: Possess'd he is with greatness; And speaks not to himself, but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath; imagined worth Holds in his blood such swoll and bold discourse, That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts, Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages, And batters down himself: What should I say? He is so plaguy proud, that the death-tokens of it Cry—No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent: 'Tis said, he holds you well; and will he led, At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so! We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes When they go from Achilles: Shall the proud lord, That hates his arrogance with his own sear, And never suffers matter of the world Enter his thoughts,—save such as do revolve And ruminate himself,—shall he be worshipp'd Of that we hold an idol more than he?

No, this thrice-worthy and right-valiant lord Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquired; Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit, As amply titled as Achilles is,

By going to Achilles: That were to enlarge his fat-already pride; And add more coals to Cancer, when he burns With entertaining great Hyperion.

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid; And say in thunder—Achilles, go to him.

Nest. O, this is well; he roos the vein of him. [Aside.]

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

[Aside.]

Ajax. If I go to him, with my arm'd fist I'll pash Over the face.

Agam. O, no. You shall not go.

[Exit.]

Ajax. An he be proud with me. I'll pheeze his pride ;
Let me go to him.

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow,—

Nest. How he describes Himself! (Aside.)

Ajax. Can he not be sociable ?

Ulyss. The raven (Aside.)

Chides blackness. I will let his humours blood.

Ajax. He'll be physician. That should be the patient.

(Aside.)

Ajax. An all men,
Were o' my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. (Aside.)

Ajax. He should not bear it so,
He should eat swords first : Shall pride carry it ?

Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half. (Aside.)

Ulyss. He'd have ten shares. (Aside.)

Ajax. I'll knead him, I'll make him supple :—

Nest. He's not yet thorough warm : force him with praises :

Pour in, pour in ; his ambition is dry. (Aside.)

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

(To Agamemnon.)

Nest. O noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—But 'tis before his face ;

I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so ?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with
I would, he were a Trojan ! [us !]

Nest. What a vice

Were it in Ajax now—

Ulyss. If he were proud ?

Dio. Or covetous of praise ?

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne ?

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected ?

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure ;

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck :

Famed be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice-famed, beyond all erudition :

But he that disciplined thy arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give him half : and, for thy vigour,

Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield

To sinewy Ajax. I'll not praise thy wisdom,

Which like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts : Here's Nestor,—

Instructed by the antiquary times,

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise ;—

But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

As green as Ajax', and your brain so temper'd,

You should not have the eminence of him,

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father ?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be ruled by him, lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here, the hart Achilles

Rears thicket. Please it our great general

To call together all his state of war ;

Fresh kings are come to Troy : To-morrow

We must with all our main of power stand fast :

And here's a lord,—come knights from east to west,

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep :

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant.

Pan. Friend ! you ! pray you, a word : Do not you follow the young lord Paris ?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You do depend upon him, I mean ?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You do depend upon a noble gentleman ; I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised ?

Pan. You know me, do you not ?

Serv. Falth, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better : I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in a state of grace. (Music within)

Pan. Grace ! not so, friend ; honour and lordship are my titles.—What music is this ?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir ; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians ?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to ?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend ?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir ?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another ; I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning : At whose request do these men play ?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir : Marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person ; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul,—

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida ?

Serv. No, sir, Helen : Could you not find out that by her attributes ?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus : I will make a complimentary assauil upon him, for my business seeths.

Serv. Sudden business ! there's a stewed phrase, indeed !

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company ! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them ! especially to you, fair queen ! fair thoughts be your fair pillow !

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—
Fair prince, he is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin : and, by my life, you shall make it whole again ; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance :—Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth ; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord ! well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen :—

My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word ?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out : we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.

—But (marry) thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My lord Pandarus ; honey-sweet lord,—

Par. Go to, sweet queen, go to :—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody : If you do, our melancholy upon your head !

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen ; that's a sweet queen, i' faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn ; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words ;
no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you, that, if the king
call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen ?—my very, very sweet queen ?

Pan. What exploit 's in hand ? where sups he to-night ?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen ?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wide ; come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say—
Cressida ? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy ! what do you spy ?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.

Pan. He ! no, she'll none of him ; they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this ; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pr'thée now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: 'tis love will undo us all.

O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, 'f' faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so;

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh, love, how

Shoots buck and doe:

The shaft confounds

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!

Yet that, which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! ha! he!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, 'f' faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: Is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have arm'd to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit.]

(A retreat sounded.)

Par. They are come from field: let us to Priam's hall,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you, To help unarm our Hector: His stubborn buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd, Shall more obey than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews: you shall do more Than all the island kings, disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant, Paris: Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty, Gives us more palm in beauty than we have; Yea, o'ershines ourself,

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Pandarus' Orchard.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant, meeting.

Pan. How now? where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. O, here he comes.—How now, how now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.]

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door, Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks, Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon, And give me swift transportation to those fields, Where I may wallow in the lily beds Proposed for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus, From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here 'f' the orchard, I'll bring her straight. [Exit.]

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet,

That it enchants my sense: What will it be,

When that the watry palate tastes indeed

Love's thrice-reputed nectar? death, I fear me;

Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,

Too subtle-potent, tuned too sharp in sweetness,

For the capacity of my ruder powers:

I fear it much; and I do fear besides,

That I shall lose distinction in my joys;

As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps

The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be willy now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain—she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow. [Exit.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom: My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse; And all my powers do their bestowing lose, Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Hara she is now: swear the oaths now to har, that you have sworn to ma.—What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways;—an you draw backward, we'll put you 'f' the fills.—Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on; and kiss the mistress. How now, a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ara I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks 'f' the river; go to, go to.

Tro. You have beraft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds; but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's—In witness whereof the parties interchangeably— Come in, come in: I'll go set a fire. [Exit.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. Cressida, how often have I wish'd me thus!

Cres. Walk'd, my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abrupture? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes!

Tro. Fears make devils cherubims; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without; in all Cupid's pageantry this is presented no monster.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear; in all Cupid's pageantry this is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; think it harder for our mistrass to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstruosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voices of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Ara there such? such are not we: Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have praise in present; we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what ever can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that; if my lord get a hoy of you, you'll give him me: Be true to my lord; if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too; our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won: ere they are ury, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to ma now, and brings me heart:—

Prince Troilus, I have loved you night and day For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to scam won; but I was won, my lord.

With the first glance that ever—Pardon me;—
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much
But I might master it—in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother: See, we fools!
Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?
But, though I loved you well, I wou'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man;
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;
For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent! See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel: Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, if faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
'Twas not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss:
I am ashamed,—O Heavens! what have I done?
For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning.—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun
Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave,
To be another's fool. I would he gone:—
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I shew more craft than love;
And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts: But you are wise;
Or else you love not; for to be wise, and love,
Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O, that I thought it could be in a woman,
(As, if it can, I will presume in you.)
To feed her eye her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays!
Or, that persuasion could but this convince me,—
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love;
How were I then uplifted! but, alas,
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars, who shall he most right!
True swains in love shall, in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want smiles, truth tired with iteration,—
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory,
From false to false among false maids in love,
Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or step-mate to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressid.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand; here, my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all—Pandars; let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will shew you a chamber and a bed, which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away.
And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES,
NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things, to Jove
I have abandon'd Troy, left my possessions,
Incurr'd a traitor's name; exposed myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sequest'ring from me all,
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise.
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf. [demand.]

Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make
Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you, (often have you thanks therefor,) Desired my Cressid in right great exchange.

Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him he sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomed bear him.
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have
What he requests of us. Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal, bring word if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.
Tro. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their Tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands 't the entrance of his tent:—
Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:—
I will come last: 'Tis like, he'll question me,
Why such unplausible eyes are bent, why turn'd on him?
If so, I have device and cunning,
To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink;
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To shew itself but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along:—
So do each lord; and either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more
Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?
You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us?

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam.

The better.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.]

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you? [Exit.]

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit.]

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were used to
To send their smiles before them to Achilles;

To come as humbly, as they used to creep
To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,

Must fall out with men too: What the declined is,
 He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
 As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
 Shew not their mealy wings, but to the summer;
 And not a man, for being slippy man,
 Hath any honour; but honour for those honours
 That are without him, as place, riches, favour,
 Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
 Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
 The loss that leas'd on them as slippery too,
 Do one pluck down another, and together
 Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
 Fortune and I are friends; I do enjoy
 At ample point all that I did possess,
 Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find out
 Something not worth in me such rich beholding
 As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
 I'll interrupt his reading.—
 How now, Ulysses?

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son?

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here
 Writes me, That man—how dearly ever parted,
 How much in having, or without, or in,—
 Cannot make head to have that which he hath,
 Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection;
 As when his virtues shining upon others
 Heat them, and they retort that heat again
 To the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.
 The beauty that is borne here in the face.
 The bearer knows not, but commends itself
 To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself
 (That most pure spirit of sense,) behold itself,
 Not going from itself; but eye to eye opposed
 Salutes each other with each other's form.
 For speculation turns not to itself,

Till it hath travell'd, and is married there,
 Where it may see itself: this is not strange at all

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,
 It is familiar; but at the author's drift:
 Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves—
 That no man is the lord of any thing, (Though in and of him there be much consisting,) Till he communicate his parts to others:
 Nor doth he of himself know them for aught,
 Till he behold them form'd in the applause,
 Where they are extended; which, like an arch, rever-
 The voice again; or, like a gate of steel, [reverses
 Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
 His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this;
 And apprehended here immediately
 The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
 That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most subject in regard, and dear in use!
 What things again in most dear in the esteem,
 And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow,
 An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
 Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
 While some men leave to do!
 How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
 Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes!
 How one man eats into another's pride,
 While pride is fasting in his wantonness!
 To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
 They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder;
 As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
 And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I do believe it: for they pass'd by me,
 As misers do by beggars; neither gave to me
 Good word, nor look: What, are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
 Wherein he puts alma for oblivion,
 A great-sized monster of Ingratitudes:
 Those scraps are good deeds past; which are devour'd
 As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
 As done: Perséverance, dear my lord,
 Keeps honour bright: To have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
 In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
 For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
 Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path;
 For emulation hath a thousand sons,
 That one by one pursue: If you give way,
 Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
 Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
 And leave you hindmost.—
 Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,
 Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
 O'er-run and trampled on: Then what they do in present,

Though less than your' in past, must o'ertop yours:
 For time is like a fashionable boat,
 That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand;
 And with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
 Grasps in the comer: Welcome ever smiles,
 And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was!

For beauty, wit,
 High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
 Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
 To envious and calumniating time.
 One touch of nature makes the whole world kin—
 That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds;
 Though they are made and moulded of things past;
 And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
 More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.

The present eye praises the present object:
 Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
 That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
 Since things in motion sooner catch the eye,
 Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
 And still it might; and yet it may again,
 If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
 And case thy reputation in thy tent;
 Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
 Made eminent missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
 And drove great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacy
 I have strong reasons.

Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
 The reasons are more potent and heroidal:
 'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
 With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha! known?

Ulyss. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state,
 Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold;
 Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps;
 Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the gods,
 Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.
 There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state;
 Which hath an operation more divine,
 Than breath, or pen, can give expression to:
 All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
 As perfectly is ours, as yours, my lord;
 And better would it fit Achilles' much,
 To throw down Hector, than Polyxena:
 But it must grieve young Pyrrhus, now at home,
 When fame shall in our islands sound her trumpet,
 And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,—
Great Hector's sister did Achilles win;
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.
 Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
 The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break. [Exit.]

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I moved you:
 A woman impudent and mannish grown
 Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
 In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this;
 They think, my little stomach to the war,
 And your great love to me, restrains you this:
 Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak woman Cupid
 Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
 Be shook to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honour by him.

Achil. I see, my reputation is at stake;

My fame is shrewdly gored.

Patr. O, then beware; these
 Those wounds heal ill, that men do give themselves:

Omission to do what is necessary

Seals a commission to a blank of danger;

And danger, like an ague, subtly taints

Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus;

I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him

To invite the Trojan lords after the combat,

To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,

An appetite that I am sick withal,

To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;

To talk with him, and to behold his visage,

Even to my full of view. A labour saved!

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector;
 and is so prophetically proud of a heroidal cudgelling, that he roves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be ?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock, a stride, and a stand; ruminates like an hostess, that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not shew without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck in the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory. He knows not me: I said, Good-morrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon. What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? He is grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Ther-sites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: Tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent:—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none, unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd; and I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.]

Ther. 'Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Street.

Enter at one side, ÆNEAS, and Servant with a torch: at the other, PARIS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMEDES, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there?

Dei. 'Tis the lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Par. Had I so good occasion to lie long.

As you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business

Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Di. That's my mind too.—Good-morrow, lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas; take his hand:

Witness the process of your speech, wherein

You told—how Diomed, a whole week by days,

Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir,

During all question of the gentle truce:

But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance,

As heart can think, or courage execute.

Di. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health;

But when contention and occasion meet,

By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life,

With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly

With his face backward.—In humane gentleness,
Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life,
Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear,
No man alive can love in such a sort,
The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Di. We sympathize:—Jove, let Æneas live,

If to my sword his fate be not the glory,

A thousand complete courses of the sun!

But, in mine emulous honour, let him die,

With every joint a wound; and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Di. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despicable gentle greeting.

The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—

What business, lord, so early? [not.

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know

Par. His purpose meets you; 'twas to bring this

To Calchas' house; and there to render him, [Greek

For the enfrued Antenor, the fair Cressid.

Let's have your company; or, if you please,

Haste there before us: I constantly do think,

(Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,)

My brother Troilus lodges there to-night;

Rouse him, and give him note of our approach,

With the whole quality wherefore: I fear,

We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you;

Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece,

Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;

The bitter disposition of the time

Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Æne. Good-morrow, all. [Exit.]

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; 'faith, tell me true

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,—

Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best,

Myself, or Menelaus?

Di. Both alike;

He merits well to have her, that doth seek her

(Not making any scruple of her sojourn)

With such a hell of pain, and world of charge;

And you as well to keep her, that defend her

(Not palating the taste of her dishonour)

With such a costly loss of wealth and friends:

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up

The lees and dregs of a flat tainted piece;

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins

Are pleased to breed out your inheritors;

Both merits poised, each weighs not less nor more;

But he as he, the heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Di. She's bitter to her country: Hear me, Paris,—

For every false drop in her bawdy veins

A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple

Of her contaminated carriage weight,

A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak,

She hath not given so many good words breath,

As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do,

Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy;

But we in silence hold this virtue well.—

We'll not commend what we intend to sell.

Here lies our way. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Court before the House of Pandarus.

Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;

He shall unboil the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;

To bed, to bed: Sleep kill those pretty eyes,

And give as soft attachment to thy senses,

As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good-morrow then.

Tro. Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you awery of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,

Waked by the lark, hath roused the ribald crows,

And dreaming night will bide our joys no longer,

I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights so

As tedious as hell; but flies the grasps of love, [stays,

With wings more momentary-swift than thought.

You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Pr'ythee tarry;—

You men will never tarry.—

O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off, [sup.

And then you would have tarried. Hark! there's one

Par. (Within.) What, are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:
I shall have such a life.—

Pan. How now, how now? how go maidenheads?—
Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!
You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what:
what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; besbrow your heart! you'll ne'er
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia!
—hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him! (Knocking.)

Cres. Did I not tell you?—'would be were knock'd o' the head!—

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceived, I think of no such thing.— (Knocking.)

How earnestly they knock!—pray you, come in;
I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exeunt Troilus and Cressida.]

Pan. (Going to the door.) Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now?
what's the matter?

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas? By my troth,
I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord, do not deny him;
It doth import him much, to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know,
I'll be sworn:—For my own part, I came in late:
What should he do here?

Æne. Who!—nay, then:—

Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are 'ware:

You'll be so true to him, to be false to him:

Do not you know of him, yet go fetch him hither;

Go.

As Pandarus is going out, enter TROILUS.

Tro. How now? what's the matter?

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash: There is at hand

Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,

The Grecian Diomed, and our Autenor

Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith,

Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,

We must give up to Diomedes' hand

The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Æne. By Priam, and the general state of Troy:

They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them: and, my lord Æneas,

We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exeunt Troilus and Æneas.]

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad.

A plague upon Antenor! I would they had broke's neck?

Enter CRESSIDA.

Cres. How now? What is the matter? Who was here?

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord gone?

Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. 'Would I were as deep under the earth as

I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. Prythee, get thee in; 'Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew thou wouldst be his death:—O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees,

I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus; 'twill be his death;

will be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father;

I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me,

As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood,

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,

Do to this body what extremes you can;

But the strong base and building of my love

Is as the very centre of the earth,

Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in and weep:—

Pan. Do, do. [Cres. goes]

Cres. Tear thy bright hair, and scratch my praised

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart

With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Before Pandarus' House.

Enter PARIS, TROILUS, ÆNEAS, DEIPHOBUS,

ANTENOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd

Of her delivery to this valliant Greek

Comes fast upon:—Good my brother Troilus,

Tell you the lady what she is to do,

And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk in to her house;

I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:

And to his hand when I deliver her,

Think it an altar; and thy brother Troilus

A priest, there offering to it his own heart. [Exit.]

Par. I know what 'tis to love;

And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help!—

Please you, walk in, my lords. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in Pandarus' House.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?

The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,

And violenteth in a sense as strong

As that which causeth it: How can I moderate it?

If I could temperize with my affection,

Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,

The like allayment could I give my grief:

My love admits no qualifying dross:

No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah, sweet ducks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! (Embracing him.)

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too: O heart,—as the goodly saying is,—

—O heart, O heavy heart,

Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

Where he answers again,

Because thou canst not ease thy smart,

By friendship, nor by speaking.

There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse;
we see it, we see it.—How now, lamia?

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,

That the best gods—as angry with my fancy,

More bright in zeal than the devotion which

Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods any?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A bateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance

Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by

All time of pause, rudely be gules our lips

Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents

Our lock'd embraces, strangles our dear vows

Eren in the birth of our own labouring breath:

We two, that with so many thousand sighs

Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves

With the rude brevity and discharge of one.

Injurious Time now, with a robber's haste,

Crans his rich thievery up, he knows not how:

As many farewells as be stars in heaven.

With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles us up into a loose adieu;

And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,

Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Æne. (Within.) My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: Some say, the Genius

Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.—
But them have patience; she shall be anon.
Par. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root! [Exit.]

Cres. I must then to the Greeks?

Tr. No remedy.
Cres. A woful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!—
When shall we see again?

Tr. Hear me, my love; Be thou but true of heart,—

Cres. I true? how now? what wicked deem is this?

Tr. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us:

I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to death himself,

That there's no maculation in thy heart:

But, be thou true, say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation; be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be exposed, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent! but, I'll be true.

Tr. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tr. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true, again?

Tr. Hear why I speak it, love:

The Grecian youths are full of quality;

They're loving, well composed, with gifts of nature
And swelling o'er with arts and exercise; [flowing,]

How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy

(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin),
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tr. Die I a villain then!

In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit; I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavoit, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:
But I can tell, that in each grade of these

There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil,
That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tr. No.

But something may be done, that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,

When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeable potency.

Æne. (Within.) Nay, good my lord.—

Tr. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. (Within.) Brother Troilus!

Tr. Good brother, come you hither;

And bring Æneas, and the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tr. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault;

While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;

Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.

Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit
Is—plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTEONOR, DEIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady,
Which for Antenor we deliver you:

At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand;

And, by the way, possess thee what she is.

Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,

Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe,
As Priam is in Ilium.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tr. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the zeal of my petition to thee,
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Plute, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not moved, prince Troilus:
Let me be privileged by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust: And know you, lord,

I'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
She shall be prized; but that you say—be't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour,—no.

Tr. Come, to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed,
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.—
Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend; and see our needful talk.

[Exit Troilus, Cressida, and Diomed.]

(Trumpet heard.)

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore in ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault: Come, come, to field with Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth, and single chivalry. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The Grecian Camp. Lists set out.

Enter AJAX, armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES,
PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NES-
TOR, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair,
Anticipating time with starting courage,
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax: that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse,
Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy sphered bias cheek
Out-swells the colick of puff'd Aquilon:
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blind;
Thou blow'st for Hector. (Trumpet sounds.)

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not yon Diomed, with Calchas' daughter

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the me: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDE with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;
'Twere better, she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—
So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips fair lady:
Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now:
For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment;
And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorn!
For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this, mine:
Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Patr. Paris, and I, kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir:—Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live,
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not: for, you know, 'tis true,
That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fillip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—
May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg then.

Ulyss. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word;—I'll bring you to your father.
[Diomed leads out Cressida.]

Nest. A woman: of quick sense.

Ulyss. Fy, fy upon her!
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,

Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game. (Trumpet within.)

All. The Trojan's trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter HECTOR, armed; AENEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Aene. Hail, all the state of Greece! what shall be done
To him that victory commands? Or do you purpose
A victor shall be known? will you, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other; or shall they be divided
By any voice or order of the field?
Hector bode ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Aene. He cares not, he'll obey conditions.

Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprising
The knight opposed.

Aene. If not Achilles, sir,

What is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

Aene. Therefore Achilles: But, whate'er, know this;—
In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all.

The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,

And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy.

This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:

In love whereof, half his Hector stays at home;

Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek

This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.

Achil. A maiden battle thou?—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter DIOMED.

Agam. Here is Sir Diomed:—Go, gentle knight,

Stand by our Ajax: as you and lord Aeneas

Consent upon the order of their fight,

So be it; either to the uttermost,

Or else a breath: the combatants being kin,

Half stuns their strife before their strokes begin.

(Ajax and Hector enter the lists.)

Ulyss. They are opposed already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same, that looks so heavy?

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;

Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word;

Spouting in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;

Not soon provoked, nor, being provoked, soon calm'd:

His heart and hand both open, and both free;

For what he has, he gives: what thinks, he shows;

Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,

Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath:

Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;

For Hector in his blaze of wrath, subscribes

To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,

Is more vindicative than jealous love:

They call him Troilus; and on him erect

A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.

Thus says Aeneas: one, that knows the youth

Even to his inches, and, with private soul,

Did in great Ilium thus translate him to me.

(Alarm. Hector and Ajax fight.)

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;

Awake thee.

Agam. His blows are well disposed:—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. (Trumpets cease.)

Aene. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more;—

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,

A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;

The obligation of our blood forbids

A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:

Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so,

That thou couldst say—This hand is Grecian all,

And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg

All Greek; and this all Troy; my mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister

Bounds in my father's; by Jove's multipotent,

Thou shouldst not beat me from a Greekish member

Wherein me sword had not in pressure made

Of our rank cut: But the just gods gainsay.

That any deep thou borrow'st from thy mother,

My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword

Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:

By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;

Hector would have them fall upon him thus:

Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:

I came to kill thee, cousin, and hear hence

A great addition earned in thy death

Hect. Next Neoptolemus so mirable

(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O yes Cries, This is he.) could promise to himself

A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Aene. There is expectation here from both the sides,

What farther you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;

The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell,

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,

(As said I have the chance.) I would desire

My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles

Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me:

And signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part;

Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;

I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;

But for Achilles, my own searching eyes,

Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one

That would be rid of such an enemy;

But that's no welcome: Understand more clear,

What's past, and what's to come, is strew'd with husks

And formless ruin of oblivion;

But in this extant moment, faith and troth,

Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,

Bids thee, with most divine integrity,

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. My well-famed lord of Troy, no less to you.

(To Troilus.)

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Whom must we answer?

Men. The noble Menelaus,

Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!

Mock not, that I affect the untreaded oath;

Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:

She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,

Labouring for destiny, make the crew way;

As through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen

Thou hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed, [thee,

Despising many forfeits and subduements,

When thou hast hung thy advanced sword 'n the air,

Not letting it decline on the declined;

That I have said to some my standers-by,

Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!

And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,

When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,

Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;

But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,

I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,

And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;

But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,

Never like thee: Let an old man embrace thee;

And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Aene. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,

Thou hast so long walk'd band in hand with time:—

Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would, my arms could match thee in content

As they contend with thee in courtesy. [Iion,

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha!

By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow.

Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time—

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,

When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, lord Ulysses, well.

Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,

Since first I saw yourself and Diomed

In Ilium, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:

My prophecy is but half his journey yet;

For yonder walls, that perily front your town,

Yon towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,

Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you:

There they stand yet; and modestly I think,

The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood. The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses, thou!—
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perused thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time,

I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport, thou'lt read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand'st.

Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you Heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him? whether there, there, or there?
That I may give the local wound a name;
And make distinct the very breach, whereout
Hector's great spirit flew: Answer me, Heavens!

Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man,

To answer such a question. Stand again:

Think't thou to catch my life so pleasantly,

As to pronounce in nice conjecture,

Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I did not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well;

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;

But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee everywhere, yea, o'er and o'er.—

You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,

His insolence draws folly from my lips;

But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,

Or may I never — Do not chafe thee, cousin; —

And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,

Till accident, or purpose, bring you to't:

You may have every day enough of Hector,

If you have stomach; the general state, I fear,

Can scarce entertain you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field;

We have had petting wars, since you refused

The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector?

To-morrow, do I meet thee, fell as death;

To-night, all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.

Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent;

There in the full convive we: afterwards,

As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall

Concur together, severally entreat him.—

Beat loud the tabourines, let the trumpets blow,

That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all but Troilus and Ulysses.]

Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,

In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus:

There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;

Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth,

But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view

On the fair Cressid.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,

After we part from Agamemnon's tent,

To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.

As gentle tell me, of what honour was

This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there,

That waits her absence?

Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting shew their scars,

A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?

She was beloved, she loved; she is, and doth;

But, still, sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.—

Patroclus. Let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter THERSITES.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy?

Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and Idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, Adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Pr'ythee be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! What's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now the rotten diseases of the south, the guts-griping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads of gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold

palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, limekilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ach, and the rivelled fee-simple of the letter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meapest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt; you whoreson

Indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sieve silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou?

Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies; diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch egg!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite-

From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.

Here is a letter from queen Hecuba;

A token from her daughter, my fair love;

Both taxing me, and gaging me to keep

An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:

Fall, Greeks; fall, fame; honour, or go, or stay;

My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.—

Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent;

This night in banquetting must all be spent.—

Away, Patroclus. [Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.]

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen.

Here's Agamemnon, — an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: And the goodly transformation of Jupiter

there, his brother, the bull, — the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds; a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg, — to what form, but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox: to an ox, were nothing;

he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a itchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care; but to be Menelaus, —

I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites: for I care not to be the louse of a Lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hey-day!

spirits and fires!

Enter HECTOR, TROIUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and

DIOMED, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 'tis;

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So, now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night,

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks'

Men. Good night, my lord. [General.]

Hect. Good night, sweet Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night,

And welcome, both to those that go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Menelaus.]

Achil. Old Nestor tarrys; and you too, Diomed,

Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Di. I cannot, lord; I have important business,

The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulyss. Follow his torch, he goes
To Calchas' tent; I'll keep you company.

(Aside to Troilus.)

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect.

And so good night.

[Exit Diomed; Ulyss. and Tro. following.]

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt Achilles, Hector, Ajax, and Nestor.]

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-bearded rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabler the bound; but when he performs, astronomers forget it; it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him: they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. Before Calchas' Tent.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?

[Within.] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance; after them THERSITES.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

Tro. Cressid, come forth to him!

Dio. How now, my charge?

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.]

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres.

Remember?—yes.

Dio.

Nay, but do then;

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List!

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres.

I'll tell you what:

Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn.—

Cres. In faith, I cannot: What would you have me

Ther. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open. [do?]

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I pr'ythee, do not hold me to mine oath;

But bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro.

Hold, patience!

Ulyss.

How now, Trojan?

Cres.

Diomed,—

Dio. No, no, good night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulyss. You are moved, prince; let us depart, I pray lest your displeasure should enlarge itself [you,

To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss.

Now, good my lord, go off:

You flow to great destruction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pr'ythee, stay.

Ulyss.

You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by bell, and all bell's torments,

I will not speak a word.

Dio.

And so, good night.

Cres.

Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro.

Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss.

Why, bow now, lord!

Tro.

By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres.

Guardlan!—why, Greek!

Dio.

Pho, pho! adieu; you partier.

Cres.

In faith, I do not; come hither once again.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something; will you you will break out. [go?]

Tro.

She strokes his cheek!

Ulyss.

Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word: There is between my will and all offence.

A guard of patience;—stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump, and potato finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!

Dio. But will you then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one.

[Exit.]

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro.

Fear me not, my lord,

I will not be myself, nor have cognition

Of what I feel; I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now.

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Tro. O beauty! where's thy faith?

Ulyss.

My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve; Behold it well.

He loved me—O false wench!—Give't me again.

Dio.

Who was't?

Cres.

No matter, now I have't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night:

I pr'ythee, Diomed, visit me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens;—Well said, whetstone.

Dio.

I shall have it.

Cres.

What, this?

Dio.

Ay, that.

Cres. O, all you gods!—O pretty, pretty pledge!

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee, and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,

And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,

As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;

He, that takes that, must take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed: 'faith, you

I'll give you something else. [sball not;]

Dio.

I will have this; whose was it?

Cres.

'Tis no matter.

Dio.

Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will

But, now you have it, take it.

Dio.

Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yonder,

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;

And grieve his spirit, that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the devil, and worst it on thy horn,

It should be challenged.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—And yet it is

I will not keep my word. [not;]

Dio.

Why then, farewell!

Thou shalt never mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go;—one cannot speak a word,

But it straight starts you.

Dio.

I do not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that, that likes not you, pleases me best.

Dio.

What, shall I come? the hour?

Cres.

Ay, come;—O Jove!—

Do come;—I shall be plagued.

Dio.

Farewell till then.

Cres.

Good night. I pr'ythee come.—

[Exit Diomed.]

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Ah! poor our sex! this fault in us I find,

The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads, must err; O then conclude,

Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude. [Exit.]

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more

Unless she said. My mind is now turn'd whore.

Ulyss. All's done, my lord.

Tro.

It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But, if I tell how these two did co-act,

Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,

An esperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert the attest of eyes and eare;

As if those organs had deceptive functions,

Created only to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?

Ulyss.

I cannot conjure, Trojans.

Tro.

She was not, sure.

Ulyss.

Most sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.
Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.
Tro. Let it not be believed for womanhood!
 Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
 To stubborn critics, — apt, without a theme,
 For depravation, — to square the general sex
 By Cressid's rule; rather think this not Cressid.
Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?
Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.
Ther. Will he swagger himself out on his own eyes?
Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
 If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
 If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimony,
 If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
 If there be rule in unity itself;
 This was not she. O madness of discourse,
 That cause sets up with and against itself!
 Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt
 Without perdition, and loss assume all reason
 Without revolt; this is, and is not, Cressid!
 Within my soul there doth commence a fight
 Of this strange nature, that a thigh inseparate
 Divides more wider than the sky and earth;
 And yet the spacious breadth of this division
 Admits no orifice for a point, as subtle
 As is Arachne's broken web, to enter.
Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;
 Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:
Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;
 The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolved, and loosed;
 And with another knot, five-finger tied,
 The fractions of her faith, oris of her love,
 The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
 Of her ex-cis'd faith, are bound to Diomed.
Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half-attach'd
 With that which here his passion doth express?
Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulg'd well
 In characters as red as Mars his beard
 Inflamed with Venus; never did young man fancy
 With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.
 Hark, Greek; — As much as I do Cressid love,
 So much by weight hate I her Diomed;
 That sleeve is mine, that he'll bear on his helm;
 Were it a casque composed by Vulcan's skill,
 My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout,
 Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
 Constraining'd in mass by the almighty sun,
 Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
 In his descent, than shall my prompted sword
 Falling on Diomed.
Ther. He'll tickle it by his conceit.
Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!
 Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
 And they'll seem glorious.
Ulyss. O, contain yourself;
 Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter AENEAS.

Aen. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:
 Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
 Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.
Tro. Have with you, prince: — My courteous lord,
 Farewell, revot'd fair! — and, Diomed, [adieu —
 Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!
Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.
Tro. Accept distracted thanks.
 [Exeunt Troilus, Aeneas, and Ulysses.
Ther. 'Would, I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven: I would bode, I would bode.
 Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than be for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery;
 still wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: A burning devil take them. [Exit.

SCENE III. — Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,
 To stop his ears against admonishment?
 Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.
Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in;
 B. all the everlasting gods, I'll go.
And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the Hect. No more, I say. [day.
 Enter CASSANDRA.
Cas. Where is my brother Hector?
And. Here, sister: arm'd, and bloody in intent:
 Consort with me in loud and dear petition,
 Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd

Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
 Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.
Cas. O, it is true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!
Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother,
Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.
Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
 They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
 Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.
And. O! be persuaded: do not count it holy
 To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
 For we would give much, to use violent thefts,
 And rob in the behalf of charity.
Cas. It is the purpose, that makes strong the vow;
 But vows, to every purpose, must not bold:
 Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;
 Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
 Life every man holds dear; but the dear man
 Holds honour far more precious-dear than life.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight to-day?
And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit Cassandra.
Hect. No, 'faith, young Troilus; do thy harness.
 I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry: [youth
 Let grow thy snews till their knots be strong,
 And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.
 Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,
 I'll stand, to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
 Which better fits a lion, than a man.
Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.
Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall,
 Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
 You bid them rise, and live.
Hect. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by Heaven, Hector.
Hect. How now? how now?
Tro. For the love of all the gods,
 Let's leave the hermit pity with our mother;
 And when we have our armours buckled on,
 The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
 Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from rub.

Hect. Fy, savage, fy!
Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.
Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.
Tro. Who should withhold me?
 Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
 Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;
 Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
 Their eyes o'ergal'd with recourse of tears;
 Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
 Opposed to hinder me, should stop my way,
 But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast;
 He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,
 Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
 Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go hack:
 Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;
 Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
 Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt,
 To tell thee — that this day is ominous:
 Therefore, come back.

Hect. Aeneas is a field;
 And I do stand engaged to many Greeks,
 Even in the faith of valour, to appear
 'This morning to them.

Pri. But thou shalt not go.
Hect. I must not break my faith.
 You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
 Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
 To take that course by your consent and voice,
 Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him.
And. Do not, dear father.
Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
 Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit Andromache.
Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl
 Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector,
 Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!
 Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
 Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
 How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth!
 B-hold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement,
 Like witless antics, one another meet.
 And all cry — Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

Tro. Away!—Away!—

Cas. Farewell.—Yet, soft: Hector, I take my leave: Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. [Exit.]

Hect. You are amazed, my liege, at her exclaim: Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and fight; Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee! [Exeunt severally Priam and Hector.]

Tro. They are at it; hark I Proud Diomed, believe, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As Troilus is going out. enter. from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter from you' poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pau. A whoreson p'tisick, a whoreson rascally p'tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days. And I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart! [Tearing the letter.]

The effect doth operate another way.—Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.—My love with words and errors still she feeds; But edifies another with her deeds. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE IV.—Between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there, in his helm; I would fain see them meet; that that same Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoresmasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, on a sleeveless errand. O the other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals,—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor; and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a black-herry. They set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft I here come sleeve, and t'other.

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for, shouldst thou take the river Styx, I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire: I do not fly; but advantageous care Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian! now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve! [Exeunt Troilus and Diomedes, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greek, art thou for Hector's Art thou of blood, and honour? [match?]

Ther. No, no: I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee:—live. [Exit.]

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me. But a plague break thy neck, for frightening me! What's become of the wenching rogues? I think, they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse; Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid: Fellow, commend my service to her beauty; Tell her, I have chastised the amorous Trojan, And am ner knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit.]

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon Hath Doreus prisoner;

And stands colossus-wise, waving his beams, Upon the pashed corpses of the kings Epistrophus and Cediüs: Polixenes is slain; Amphimachus, and Thoas, deadly hurt; Patroclus 'a'en, or slain; and Palamedes Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers; haste we, Diomed, To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nes. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles; And bid the snail-paced Ajax arm for shame.— There is a thousand Hector's in the field: Now here he fights on Galathea his horse, And there lacks work; anon, he's there afoot, And there they fly, or die, like scalded sculls Before the belching whale; then is he yonder, And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge, Fall down before him, like the mower's swath: Here, there, and every where, he leaves, and takes; Dexterity so obeying appetite, That what he will, he does; and does so much, That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulys. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance: Patroclus' wounds have roused his drowsy blood, Together with his mangled Myrmdois, That noseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come to him, Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend, And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it, Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day Mad and fantastic execution; Engaging and redeeming of himself, With such a careless force, and forceless care, As if that luck, in very spite of cunning, Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit.]

Dio. Ay, there, there. [Exit.]

Nes. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou boy-queller, shew thy face; Know what it is to meet Achilles angry. Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, shew thy head

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?

Ajax. What wouldst thou?

Dio. I would correct him. [office.]

Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my Ere that correction: Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O traitor Diomed?—turn thy false face, thou traitor,

And pay thy life thou ow'st me for my horse!

Dio. Ha! art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone; stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize, I will not look upon.

Tro. Come hoth, you cogging Greeks; have at you both. [Exeunt fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yes, Troilus? O well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee:—Ha!—Have at thee Hect. Pause, if thou wilt. [Hector.]

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.

Be happy, that my arms are out of use:

My rest and negligence befriended thee now,

But thou anon shalt hear of me again;

Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit.]

Hect. Fare thee well:—

I would have been much more a fresher man, Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother?

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Eneas: Shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him; I'll be taken too,
Or bring him off!—Fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.]

Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark!—
No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it:—wilt thou not, beast, abide?
Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The same.

Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons:
Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath;
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your arms.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:—
It is decreed—Hector tho' great must die. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—The same.

Enter MENELAUS and PARIS, fighting; then THERSITES.

Ther. The cuckold, and the cuckold-maker are at it:
Now, bull! now dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now my doublehenn'd sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:—'ware horns, ho!
[Exeunt Paris and Menelaus.]

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.
Ther. What art thou?
Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.
Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous in us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment: Farewell, bastard.
Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Another part of the Field.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life,
Now is my day's work done: I'll take good breath:
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!
(Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.)

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the veil and dark'ning of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.
Hect. I am unarm'd; forego this 'vantage, Greek.
Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek.
(Hector falls.)
So, Ilion, fall thou next! Now, Troy, sink down;
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
O, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.
(A retreat sounded.)

Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.
Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.
Achil. The dragon wing of night o'er spreads the earth,
And, stickler-like, the armies separates.
My half-suppl'd sword, that frankly would have fed,
Pleased with this dainty hit, thus goes to bed.—
(Shoos his sword.)
Come, tie his body to his horse's tail;
Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—The same.

Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?
Nest. Peace, drums,
(Within.) Achilles
Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!
Dio. The bruit is—Hector's slain, and by Achilles.
Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be!
Great Hector was as good a man as he.
Agam. March patiently along:—Let one be sent
To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—
If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.
[Exeunt, marching]

SCENE XI.—Another part of the Field

Enter AENEAS and Trojans.

Aene. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field:
Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.
All. Hector?—The gods forbid!
Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,
In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful field.—
Frown on, you Heavens, effect your rage with speed!
Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!
I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destruction on!
Aene. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.
Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so:
I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?
Let him, that will a screech-owl eye he call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:
There is a word will Priam turn to stone;
Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,
Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,
Scare Troy out of itself. But, march, away:
Hector is dead; there is no more to say.
Stay yet;—You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you!—And thou, great-sized
No space of earth shall sunder our two hates; [coward
I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth gobins swift as frenzy thoughts.—
Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward wo.
[Exeunt Aeneas and Trojans.]

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side
PANDARUS.

Pan. But hear you, hear you!
Tro. Hence, broker lackey! ignomy and shame
Pursue thy life, and live eye with thy name.
[Exit Troilus]
Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones!—O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised!
O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a work, and how ill requited! Why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?—Let me see:—

Pull merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey, and his sting;
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fall.—
Goon traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths

As many as be bere of pander's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall:
Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made:
It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss:
Till then I'll sweet, and seek about for ease;
And, at that time, hequeath you my diseases. [Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you are well.

Poet. I have not seen you long; How goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that's well known.

But what particular rarity? what strange,
Which manifold record not matches? See,
Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power
Hath conjured to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; t'other's a jeweller.

Mer. O, 'tis a worthy lord!

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were,

To an untirable and continue goodness:

He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here.

Mer. O, pray, let's see 't; For the lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate: But, for that—

Poet. When we for recompense have praised the vile,
It stains the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good.

Mer. 'Tis a good form.

(Looking at the jewel.)

Jew. And rich; here is a water, look you.

Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication
To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.

Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes
From whence 'tis nourish'd: The fire i' the flint
Shows not, till it be struck; our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies
Each bound it chafes. What have you there? [forth?

Pain. A picture, sir.—And when comes your book?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.
Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis; this comes of well and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: How this grace
Speaks his own standing! what a mental power
This eye shoots forth! how big imagination
Moves in this lip! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.

Here is a touch: Is 't good?

Poet. I'll say of it,

It tutors nature: artificial strife
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, and pass over.

Pain. How this lord's follow'd!

Poet. The senators of Athens;—Happy men!

Pain. Look, more! [visitors.

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of
I have, in this rough work, shaped out a man,
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug
With amplest entertainment: My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax: no level'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold;
But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I'll unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,
To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Than to abhor himself: even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be throned: The base o' the mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states: amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
One do I personate of lord Timon's frame,
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her:
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceived to scope.

This throne, this fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on.

All those, which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value,) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood,

Spurns down her late beloved, all his dependants,
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Paen. 'Tis common :
A thousand moral paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune
More-pregnantly than words. Yet you do well,
To shew lord Timon, that mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpet sounds. Enter TIMON, attended: the Servant of Ventidius talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you ?
Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord : five talents is his debt ;
His means most short, his creditors most strait ;
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up ; which failing to him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius ! Well ;
I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he must need me. I do know him
A gentleman, that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have : I'll pay the debt, and free him.
Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him.
Tim. Commend me to him ; I will send his ransome ;
And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me :—
'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour ! [Exit.]

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.
Tim. Freely, good father.
Old Ath. Thou hast a servant named Lucilius.
Tim. I have so : What of him ?
Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before
Tim. Attends he here, or no ?—Lucilius ! [thee.]

Enter LUCILIUS.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.
Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift ;
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
Than one which holds a treacher.

Tim. Well ; what farther ?
Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got ;
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost.
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love : I pr'y thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort ;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.
Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon :
His honesty rewards him in itself.
Tim. It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him ?
Old Ath. She is young, and apt :
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth.

Tim. (To Lucilius.) Love you the maid ?
Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.
Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choo-e
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband ?
Old Ath. Three talents, on the present ; in future all.
Tim. This gentleman of mine hath served me long ;
To build his fortune, I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter :
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.
Tim. My hand to thee ; mine honour on my promise.
Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship : Never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you !

[Exeunt Lucilius and old Athenian.]

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship !
Tim. I thank you ; you shall hear from me anon :
Go not away.—What have you there, my friend ?
Paen. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The painting is almost the natural man ;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside : These pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work ;

And you shall find, I like it : wait attendance
Till you hear farther from me.

Paen. The gods preserve you !
Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen. Give me your hand ;
We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord ? dispraise ?
Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.
If I should pay you for 't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclue me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those which sell, would give : But you well know,
Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters : believe 't, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd.
Mer. No, my good lord ; he speaks the common
Which all men speak with him. [trouque,]
Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid ?

Enter APEMANTUS.

Jew. We will bear, with your lordship.
Mer. He'll spare none.
Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus ?
Apem. Till I be gentle, stay for thy good morrow ;
When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.

Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves ? thou know'st Apem. Are they not Athenians ? [them not.]
Tim. Yes.
Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus.
Apem. Thou knowest, I do ; I call thee by thy name.
Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.
Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whither art going ?
Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.
Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.
Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus ?
Apem. The best, for the innocence.
Tim. Wrought he not well, that painted it ?
Apem. He wrought better, that made the painter ; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Paen. You are a dog.
Apem. Thy mother's of my generation : What's she,
if I be a dog ?

Tim. Will dine with me, Apemantus ?
Apem. No ; I eat not lords.
Tim. An thou shouldst, thou'dst anger ladies.
Apem. O, they eat lords ; or they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.
Apem. So thou apprehend'st it : Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus ?
Apem. Not so well as plaiu-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth ?
Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet ?
Poet. How now, philosopher ?
Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one ?
Apem. Yes.
Poet. Tuen I lie not.
Apem. Art not a poet ?
Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest ; look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.
Poet. That's not feign'd, he is so.
Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour : He, that loves to be flattered, is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord !

Tim. What wouldst do then, Apemantus ?
Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself ?
Apem. Ay.
Tim. Wherefore ?
Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.—Art not thou a merchant ?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.
Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not !
Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.
Apem. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee !

Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that ?
Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and
Some twenty horse, all of companionship.
Tim. Pray, entertain them : give them guide to us,
[Exeunt some attendants.]

You must needs dine with me :—Go not you hence,

Till I have thank'd you; and, when dinner's done,
Shew me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.

Enter ALCIBIADES, with his company.

Most welcome, sir! (They salute.)

Apem. So, so; there!—
Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—
That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves,
And all this court'sy! The strain of man's bred out
Into baboon and monkey.

Alcib. Sir, you have saved my longing, and I feed
Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir:
Ere we depart, we'll share a hourous time
In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but Apemantus.]

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou, that still omit'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy hiding; make the requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee
hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.

[Exit.]

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we
And taste lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes [in,
The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no need, but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,
That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud music. A great Banquet served in; FLAVIUS and others attending: then enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, LUCIUS, LU-CULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian
Senators, with VENTIDIUS and Attendants.
Then comes, dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, 't hath pleased the gods remember

My father's age, and call him to long peace.

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:

Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound

To your free heart, I do return those talents,

Doubled, with thanks, and service, from whose help

I derived liberty.

Tim. O, by no means,

Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love;

I gave it freely ever; and there's none

Can truly say, he gives, if he receives:

If our betters play at that game, we must not dare

To imitate them: Faults, that are rich, are fair.

Ven. A noble spirit.

(They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.)

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony

Was but devised at first, to set a gloss

On faint deeds, hollow welcomes,

Recanting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shewn;

But where there is true friendship, there needs none.

Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,

Than my fortunes to me. (They sit.)

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it! hang'd it, have you not?

Tim. O Apemantus? you are welcome.

Apem. No,

You shall not make me welcome;

I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fr, thou art a churl; you have got a humour

Does not become a man; 'tis much to blame:—

They say, my lords, that ira furor brevis est,

But you'd man's ever angry.

Go, let him have a table by himself;

For he does neither affect company,

Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine own peril, Timon;

I come to observe: I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian;

therefore welcome: I myself would have no power:

pr'y thee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choke me, for I should

Ne'er flutter thee.—O you gods! what a number

Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not?

It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat

In one man's blood; and all the madness is,

He cheers them up too.

I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:

Methinks, they should invite them without knives;

Good for their meat, and safer for their lives,

There's much example for't: the fellow, that

Sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges

The breath of him in a divided draught,

Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been proved.

If I

Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals;

Lest they should spy my windpippe's dangerous notes:

Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way

A brave fellow!—he keeps his tides well. Timon,

Those healths will make thee, and thy state, look ill.

Here's that, which is too weak to be a siner.

Honest water, which ne'er left man in the mire:

This, and my food, are equals; there's no odds.

Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS'S GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf:

I pray for no man but myself:

Grant I may never prove so fond,

To trust man on his oath or bond;

Or a harlot for her weeping;

Or a dog, that seems a sleeping;

Or a keeper with my freedom;

Or my friends, if I should need 'em.

Amen. So fall to't!

Rich men sin, and I eat root.

(Eats and drinks.)

Much good dieh thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field

now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of eunemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there's no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. 'Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then; that then thou mightst kill 'em, and bid me to em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you. How had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for them; and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are horn to do benefits: and what better or proper can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's for-times! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be born!

Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weep'st to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes,

And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you moved me much.

Apem. Much! (Tucket sounded.)

Tim. What means that trumpet?—How now?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? What are their wills?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter CUPID.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely To gratulate thy plentiful bosom. The ear, Taste, touch, smell, all pleased from thy labile rise; They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let them have kind admittance:

Music, make their welcome.

[Exit Cupid.]

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you are beloved.

Music. Re-enter CUPID, with a masque of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing, and playing.

Apen. Hey-day, what a sweep of vanity comes this They dance! they are mad women. [way!]

Like madness is the glory of this life,

As this pomp shews to a little oil, and root.

We make ourselves fools, to disport ourselves;

And spend our flatteries, to drink those men;

Upon whose age we void it up again.

With poisonous spite and envy. Who lives, that's not

Depraved, or depraves? who dies, that bears

Not one spurn to their graves of their friends' gift?

I should fear, those, that dance before me now,

Would one day stamp upon me: It has been done;

Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of TIMON; and to shew their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies.

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,

Which was not half so beautiful and kind;

You have added worth unto 't, and lively lustre,

And entertain'd me with mine own device;

I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.

Apen. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy: and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle hanquet

Attends you: Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exit Cupid and Ladies.]

Tim. Flavius,—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour: (Aside.)

Else I should tell him,—Well,—'faith, I should,

When all's spent, he'd be cross'd then, an he could.

This pity, bounty had not eyes behind;

That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.

[Exit, and returns with the casket.]

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my friends, I have one word

To say to you;—Look you, my good lord, I must Entreat you, honour me so much, as to Advance this jewel;

Accept, and wear it, kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,

Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee:

I pry'thee, let us be provided

To shew them entertainment.

Flav. I scarce know how. (Aside.)

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honour, the lord Lucius, Out of his free love, hath presented to you Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver,

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Enter a third Servant.

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be received, Not without fair reward.

Flav. (Aside.) What will this come to?

He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer.

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,

To shew him what a beggar his heart is.

Being of no power to make his wishes good;

His promises fly so beyond his state,

That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes

For every word; he is so kind, that he now

Pays interest for 't; his land's put to their books.

Well, 'would I were gently put out of office,

Before I were forced out.

Happier is he that has no friend to feed,

Than such as do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit]

Tim. You do yourself.

Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits:—

Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember me, my lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser

I rode on: it is yours, because you liked it!

2 Lord. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no

Can justly praise, but what he does affect: [Exit]

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;

I'll tell you true. I'll call on you.

All Lords. None so welcome

Tim. I take all and your several visitations

So kind to bear, 'tis not enough to give;

Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends,

And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich,

It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living

Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast

Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defiled land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so

Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd.—

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights!

1 Lord. The best of happiness.

Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exit Alcibiades, Lords, &c.]

Apen. What a coil's here!

Serving of heels, and jutting out of bums!

I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums

That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dregs;

Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs.

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.

Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen,

I'd be good to thee.

Apen. No, I'll nothing: for,

If I should be hired too, there would be none left

To rail upon thee; and then thou wouldst in the faster.

Thou givest so long, Timon, I fear me, thou

Wilt give away thyself in paper shortly:

What need these feasts, pomps, and vain glories?

Tim. Nay,

An you begin to rail once on society,

I am sworn, not to give regard to you.

Farewell; and come with better music. [Exit.]

Apen. So;—

Thou'lt not hear me now,—thou shalt not then,—I'll lock

Thy heaven from thee. O, that men's ears should be

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Lidorus

He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,

Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motto

Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,

And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold :
If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more
Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,
Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight,
And able horses : No porter at his gate ;
But rather one that smiles, and still invites
All that pass by. It cannot hold ; no reason
Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho !
Caphis, I say !

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir : What is your pleasure ?
Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord Timon ;
Impörtune him for my moneys ; be not ceased
With slight denial ; nor then silenced, when—
Commend me to your master — and the cap
Plays in the right hand thus : — but tell him, strrah,
My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
Out of mine own ; his days and times are past,
And my reliences on his fracted dates
Have smit my credit : I love and honour him ;
But must not break my back, to heal his finger ;
Immediate are my needs ; and my relief
Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Get you gone :
Put on a most importunate aspect,
A visage of demand ; for, I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.
Sen. I go, sir ? — take the bonds along with you,
And have the dates in compt.
Caph. I will, sir.
Sen. Go. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop ! so senseless of expense,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of riot : Takes no account
How things go from him ; nor resumes no care
Of what is to continue : Never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
What shall be done ? He will not hear, till feel :
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting.
Fy, fy, fy, fy !

Enter CAPHIS, and the Servants of Isidore and Varro.

Caph. Good even, Varro : What
You come for money ?
Var. Serv. Is't not your business too ?
Caph. It is ; — and yours too, Isidore ?
Isid. Serv. It is so.
Caph. 'Would we were all discharged !
Var. Serv. I fear it.
Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,
Mv Alcibiades.—With me ? What's your will ?
Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.
Tim. Dues ? Whence are you ?
Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.
Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new days this month :
My master is awaked by great occasion,
To call upon his own ; and humbly prays you,
That with your other noble parts you'll suit,
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,
I pry thee, but repair to me next morning.
Caph. Nay, good my lord,—
Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.
Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good lord,—
Isid. Serv. From Isidore ;
He humbly prays your speedy payment.—

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants.—
Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks,

And past,—
Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord ;
And I am sent expressly to your lordship.
Tim. Give me breath :—
I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on ;
[Exeunt Alcibiades and Lords.]
I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray you ;
(To Flavius.)

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd
With clamorous demands of dote-broke bonds,
And the detention of long-since-due debts,
Against my honour ?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,
The time is unagreeable to this business :
Your importunity ceases, till after dinner ;
That I may make his lordship understand
Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends :
See them well entertain'd.
Flav. I pray, draw near. [Exit.]

Enter APEMANTUS and a Fool.

Caph. Stav, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus : let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.
Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog !
Var. Serv. How dost, fool ?
Ape. Dost dialogue with thy shadow ?
Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.
Ape. No ; 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

(To the Fool.)
Isid. Serv. (To Var. Serv.) There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Ape. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now ?
Ape. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues, and users' men ! bawds between gold and want !

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus ?
Ape. Asses.
All Serv. Why ?
Ape. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen ?
All Serv. Gramercies, good fool : How does your mistress ?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. 'Would, we could see you at Corinth.

Ape. Good ! Gramercy.

Enter PAGE.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.
Page. (To the Fool.) Why, how now, captain ?
what do you in this wise company ? — How dost thou, Apemantus ?

Ape. 'Would, I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Prythee, Apemantus, read me the superscrip-tion of these letters ; I know not which is which.
Ape. Canst not read ?

Page. No.
Ape. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hang'd. This is to lord Timon ; and this to Alcibiades. Go ; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Then wast whelped a dog ; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.
[Exit Page.]

Ape. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there ?
Ape. If Timon stay at home.—You three erse three usurers ?

All Serv. Ay ; 'would they served us !
Ape. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men ?
All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant :
My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry ; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly : The reason of this ?

Var. Serv. I could render one.
Ape. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster, and a knave ; which, notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool ?
Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit ; sometime, it appears like a lord ;
sometime, like a lawyer ; sometime like a philosopher ;
with two stones more than his artificial one : He is very often like a knight ; and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.
Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man : as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Ape. That answer might have become Apemantus.
All Serv. Aside, aside : here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Apen. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exeunt Apemantus and Fool.
Flav. Pray you, walk near, I'll speak with you anon.

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this Had you not fully laid my state before me; [time, That I might so have rated my expense, As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me, At many leisures I proposed.

Tim. Go to: Perchance, some single vantages you took, When my indisposition put you back; And that unaptness made your minister, Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord! At many times I brought in my accounts, Laid them before you; you would throw them off, And say, you found them in mine honesty. When, for some trifling present, you have bid me Return so much, I have shook my head, and wept; Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you To hold your hand more close: I did endure Not seldom, nor no slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate, And your great flow of debts, My dear-loved lord, Though you hear now (too late!) yet now's a time, The greatest of your having lacks a half To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engaged, some forfeited and gone; And what remains will hardly stop the mouth Of present dues: the future comes apace: What shall defend the interim? and at length How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacædæmon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word; Were it all yours to give it in a breath, How quickly were it gone!

Tim. You tell me true, Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood, Call me before the exactest auditors, And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me, When all our offices have been oppress'd With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept With drunken spilt of wine; when every room Hath blaz'd with lights, and brav'd with minstrelsy; I have retired me to a wasteful cock, And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Pr'ythee, no more. Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord! How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants This night engulged! Who is not Timon's? What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon? Ah! when the means are gone, that buy this praise, The breath is gone whereof this praise is made: Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers, These flies are cough'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no farther: No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart; Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given. Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack, To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart; If I would broach the vessels of my love, And try the argument of hearts by borrowing, Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use, As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts! Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd,

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: You shall perceive, bow you Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends. Within there, ho!—Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You, to lord Lucius,—

To lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his Honour to-day;—You, to Sempronius; Commend me to their loves; and, I am proud, say, That my occasions have found time to use them Toward a supply of money: let the request Be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius, and lord Lucullus? humph!

Tim. Go you, sir, (to another Serv.) to the senators, (Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing,) bid 'em send o' the instant A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold, (For that I knew it the most general way,) To them to use your signet, and your name; But they do shake their heads, and I am here No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can it be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice, That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable, But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—but Something hath been amiss—a noble nature May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity— And so, intending other serious matters, After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions, With certain half-caps, and cold-moving nods, They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!— I pr'ythee, man, look cheerly: These old fellows Have their ingratitude in them hereditary: Their blood is caked, 'tis cold, it seldom flows; 'Tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind; And nature, as it grows again toward earth, Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.— Go to Ventidius,—(To a Serv.) Pr'ythee, (To Flav.) be not sad,

T'hou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak, No blame belongs to thee:—(To Serv.) Ventidius lately

Buried his father; by whose death he's stepp'd Into a great estate; when he was poor, Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends, I clear'd him with five talents: Greet him from me; Bid him suppose, some good necessity Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd With those five talents—that bad, (to Flav.) give it these fellows To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak, or think, That Timon's fortunes' none of his friends can sink.

Flav. I would, I could not think it; that thought is bounty's foe: Being free itself, it thinks all others so. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Lucullus's House, FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. (Aside.) One of lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right: I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night.—Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—(Exit Servant.)—And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir. And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty hox, sir; which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him; nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him on 't; and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less; and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his; I have told him on 't, but I could never get him from it.

Re-enter Servant with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise, Here 's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—(To the Servant, who goes out.)—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidaires for thee; good hoy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Fiam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ; And we alive, that lived? Fly, damned baseness, To him that worships thee.

Lucul. Ha! now I see, thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. (Throwing the money away.)

Fiam. May these add to the number that may seal'd Let molten coin be thy damnation, [thee] Thou disease of a friend, and not himself! Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights? O you gods, I feel my master's passion! This slave Unto his honour, has my lord's meat in him: Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment, When he is turn'd to poison? O, may diseases only work upon't! And, when he is sick to death, let not that part of nature, Which my lord paid for, be of any power To expel sickness, but prolong his hour! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Public Place.

Enter LUCIUS, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1 Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours; now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fly no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that, not long ago, one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and shewed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

2 Stran. I tell you, denied, my lord.
Luc. What a strange case was that? now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man? there was very little honour shewed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him, and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord: I have sweet to see his honour.—My honoured lord,—

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well:—Commend me to thy honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—
Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he's ever sending: How shall I thank him, think'st thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me; he cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous,

I should not urge it half so faithfully.
Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disfigure myself against such a good time, when I might have shewn myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour!—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do't; the more beast, I say:—I was sending to use lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Commend me heartily to his good lordship; and I hope, his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind:—And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I will look you out a good turn, Servilius.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk, indeed; And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed.

[Exit Lucius.]

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Stran. Ay, too well.

1 Stran. Why, this

Is the world's soul; and just of the same piece is evers flatterer's spirit. Who can tell him His friend, that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: He ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treats upon his lip: And yet, (O, see the monstrousness of man, When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!) He does deny him, in respect of his, What charitable men afford to beggars.

2 Stran. Religion groans at it.

1 Stran. For mine own part,

I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me, To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation, And the best half should have return'd to him, So much I love his heart: But, I perceive, Men must learn now with pity to dispense; For policy sits above conscience. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Sempronius's House.

Enter SEMPRONIUS, and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in't? Humph! Bove all others?

He might have tried lord Lucius, or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison: All these three Owe their estates unto him.

Ser. O my lord, They have all been touch'd, and found base metal; for They have all denied him.

Sem. How! they have denied him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him?

And does he send to me? Three? humph!—It shews but little love or judgment in him.

Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians, Thrive, give him over; Must I take the cure upon me?

He has much disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at him, That might have known my place: I see no sense for't,

But his occasions might have woo'd me first; For, in my conscience, I was the first man

That e'er he took gift from him: And does he think so backwardly of me now,

That I'll requite it last? No: So it may prove An argument of laughter to the rest,

And I amongst the lords be thought a fool. I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum,

He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake; I had such a courage to do him good. But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join; Who bates mine honour, shall not know my coin.

[Exit.]

Ser. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; be crossed himself by't; and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked; like those, that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire. Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled, Save the gods only: Now his friends are dead,

Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd

Now to guard sure their master.

And this is all a liberal course allows; Who cannot keep his wealth, must keep his house.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter two servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting TITUS, HORTENSIUS, and other Servants to Timon's Creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius?

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and, I think,

One business does command us all; for mine

Is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours,

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. And sir

Philotus too!

Phi. Good-day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on't; he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter with

You must consider, that a prodigal course [him:

Is like the sun's; but not, like his, recoverable.

I fear,

'Tis deepest winter in lord Timon's purse:

That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet

Find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll shew you how to observe a strange event.

Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,

For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shews,

Timon in this should pay more than he owes:

And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels,

And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge, the gods can witness:

I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,

And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns:

What's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sum,

Your master's confidence was above mine;

Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: 'Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship: 'pray, signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows, you are too diligent. [Exit Flaminius.

Enter FLAVIUS, in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so?

He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flav. Ay,

If money were as certain as your waiting,

'Twere sure enough. Why then prefer'd you not

Your sums and bills, when your false masters eat

Of my lord's meat? Then they could smile and fawn

Upon his debts, and take down th' interest [wrong,

Into their gluttonous maws. You do yourselves but

To stir me up: let me pass quietly:

Believe 't, my lord and I have made an end;

I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. If 'twill not,

'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knives. [Exit.

1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier'd worship murther?

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. O, here's Servilius: now we shall know Some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen,

To repair some other hour, I should much

Derive from it: for, take it on my soul,

My lord leans wond'rously to discontent.

His comfortable temper has forsook him;

He is much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not

And, if it be so far beyond his health, [sick:

Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts,

And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for an answer, sir.

Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help! — my lord! my lord!

Enter TIMON, in a rage; FLAMINIUS following.

Tim. What, are my doors opposed against my pas-

Have I been ever free, and must my house [sage?

Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?

The place, which I have feasted, does it now,

Like all mankind, shew me an irou heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.

Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our hills.

Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me to the girdle.

Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,—

Tim. Cut my heart in sums.

Tit. Mine, fifty talents.

Tim. Tell ont my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that.—

What yours?—and yours?

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall on you!

[Exit.

Hor. 'Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money; these debts may well be called desperate ones; for a madman owes 'em. [Exit.

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the Creditors!—devils. [slaves:

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so:—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my friends again,

Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:

I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul;

There is not so much left, to furnish out

A moderate table.

Tim. Be 't not in thy care; go.

I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide

Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. The Senate-House

The Senate sitting. Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to't; the fault's

Bloody; 'tis necessary he should die:

Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate

I Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;

For pity is the virtue of the law,

And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time, and fortune, to lie heavy

Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,

Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth:

To those that, without heed, do plunge into it.

He is a man, setting his fate aside,

Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice;

[An honour in him, which buys out his fault.]

But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but proved an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair;
Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born:
He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breathe; and make his wrongs
His outides; wear them like his raiment, carelessly;
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,
What folly 'tis, to hazard life for ill?

Alcib. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;
To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me,
If I speak like a captain.—
Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threatenings? sleep upon it,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats
Without repugnance? but if there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we Abroad? why then, women are more valiant,
'Tis stay at home, if bearing carry it,
And the ass, more captain than the lion; the felon,
Loaden with irons, wiser than the judge,
If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,
As you are great, be pitifully good:
Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest guilt;
But, in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just.
To be in anger, is impiety;
But who is man, that is not angry?
Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain? his service done
At Lacedæmon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, he's done fair service,
And slain in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made plentiful wounds?
2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em, he Is a sworn rioter; he's a sin that often
Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner:
If there were no foes, that were enough alone
To overcome him: in that beastly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions: 'Tis infern'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.
My lords, if not for any parts in him,
(Though his right arm might purchase his own time,
And be in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both:
And, for I know, your reverend ages love
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all
My honour to you, upon his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or brother,
He forfeits his own blood, that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen. What?

Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me;
It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue, and be denied such common grace:
My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect:
We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me?

Banish your dotage; banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If, after two days' shine, Athens contains thee, Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,

He shall be executed presently. [Exit Senators.]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you!
I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,

While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest; I myself
Rich only in large hurts;—All those, for this?
Is this the balsam, that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? ha! banishment?
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd;
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.
'Tis honour, with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House.

Music. Tables set out. Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.
2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered. I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so. He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?

2 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter TIMON, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both.—And how fare you?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship.

Tim. (Aside.) Nor more willingly leaves winter;
such summer-birds are men.—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile; if they will fare so harshly on the trumpet's sound: we shall to 't presently.

1 Lord. I hope, it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah, my good friend! what cheer?

(The banquet brought in.)
2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on 't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—

Tim. Let it notumber your better remembrance.—
Come, bring in all together.

2 Lord. All covered dishes!

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money, and the season can yield it.

1 Lord. How do you? What 's the news?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is banished: Hear you of it?

1 & 2 Lord. Alcibiades banished!

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 Lord. How? how?

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will 't hold? will 't hold?

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and so—

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat coolere we can agree upon the first place. Sit, sit.—The gods require our thanks.

You, great Benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves proud; but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another : for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved, more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains. If there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be — as they are. — The rest of your fees, O gods, — the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people, — what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends, — as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing they are welcome.

Uncover dogs, and lap.

(The dishes uncovered are full of warm water.)

Some speak. What does his lordship mean ?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never behold, You knat of mouth-friends ! smoke, and luke-warm water

Is your perfection. This is Timon's last ; Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces

(Throwing water in their faces.)

Your reeking villainy. Live loath'd, and long, Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears, You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies, Cap-and-knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks ! Of man and beast the infinite malady Crust you quite o'er ! — What, dost thou go ? Soft, take thy physic first, — thou too, — and thou — [Throws the dishes at them, and drives them out.

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none. —

What, all in motion ? Henceforth be no feast,

Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.

Burn, house ; sink, Athens ! henceforth hated he Of Timon, man, and all humanity. [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords ?

2 Lord. Know you the quality of lord Timon's fury ?

3 Lord. Pish ! did you see my cap ?

4 Lord. I have lost my gown.

3 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and nought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat. — Did you see my jewel ?

4 Lord. Did you see my cap ?

2 Lord. Here 'tis.

4 Lord. Here lies my gown.

1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad.

3 Lord. I feel't upon my hones.

4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall, That girdlest in those wolves ! Dive in the earth, And fence not Athens ! Matrons, turn incourtinent ; Obedience fail in children ! slaves, and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench, And minister in their steads ! to general filths Convert o' the instant green virginity ! Do't in your parent's eyes ! bankrupt, hold fast ; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And cut your trusters' throats ! bound servants, steal ! Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law ! maid, to thy master's bed ; Thy mistress is o' the brothel ! son of sixteen, Pluck the lued crutch from the old limping sire, With it beat out his brains ! piety, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood, Instruction, manners, mystery, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries, And yet confusion live ! — Plagues, incident to men, Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripe for stroke ! thou cold scaltica, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners ! lust and liberty Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth ; That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot ! itches, blains, Sow all the Athenian bosoms ; and their crop Be general leprosy ! breath infect breath ; That their society, as their friendship, may

Be merely poison ! Nothing I'll bear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town ! Take thou that too, with multiplying banners ! Timon will to the woods ; where he shall find The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind. The gods confound (hear me, ye good gods all,) The Athenians both within and out that wall ! And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow To the whole race of mankind, high and low ! Amen. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with two or three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward, where's our master ?

Are we undone ? cast off ? nothing remaining ?

Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you ? Let me be recorded by the righteous gods, I am as poor as you.

1 Serv. Such a house broke ! So noble a master fallen ! All gone ! and not One friend, to take his fortune by the arm, And go along with him !

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs From our companion, thrown into his grave ; So his familiars to his buried fortunes Slink all away ; leave their false vows with him, Like empty purses pick'd : and his poor self, A dedicated beggar to the air, With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty, Walks, like contempt, alone. — More of our fellows, Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery, That see I by our faces ; we are fellows still, Serving alike in sorrow ; Leak'd is our bark, And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck, Hearing the surges threat : we must all part Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all, The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you. Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake, Let's yet be fellows ; let's shake our heads, and say, As 'twere a knell unto our master's fortunes, We have seen better days. Let each take some ; (Giving them money.)

Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more : Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[Exeunt Servants.

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us ! Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt, Since riches point to misery and contempt ? Who'd be so mock'd with glory ? or to live But in a dream of friendship ?

To have his pomp, and all what state compounds, But only painted, like his varnish'd friends ? Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart ; Undone by goodness ! Strange, unusual blood, When man's worst sin is, he does too much good ! Who then dares to be half so kind again ? For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men. My dearest lord, — bless'd, to be most accursed, Rich, only to be wretched ; — thy great fortunes Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord ! He's flung in rage from this ungrateful seat Of monstrous friends ; nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it. I'll follow, and inquire him out : I'll serve his mind with my best will : Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Woods.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth Rotten humidity ; below thy sister's orb Infect the air ! Twinn'd brothers of one womb, — Whose procreation, residence, and birth, Scarce is dividant, — touch them with several fortunes ; The greater scorns the lesser : Not nature, To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune, But by contempt of nature. Raise me this beggar, and denude that lord ; The senator shall bear contempt hereditary, The beggar native honour. It is the pasture lards the brother's sides, The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright.
 And say, This man's a flatterer! if one be,
 So are they all; for every grize of fortune
 Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
 Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique;
 There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
 But direct villainy. Therefore, be abhorr'd
 All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
 His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:
 Destruction fang mankind!—Earth, yield me roots!
 (Digging.)

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
 With thy most operative poison! What is here?
 Gold? Thy yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods,
 I am no idle votarist. Roots, you clear heavens!
 Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul,
 fair,
 Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.
 Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods? Why
 this
 Will lug your priests and servants from your sides;
 Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads;
 This yellow slave
 Will knit and break religions; bless the accursed;
 Make the hoar leprosy adored; place thieves,
 And give them title, knee, and approbation,
 With senators on the bench; this is it,
 That makes the wappen'd widow weep again;
 She, whom the spital-house, and ulcerous sores
 Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
 To the April day again. Come, damned earth,
 Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds
 Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
 Do thy right nature.—(March afar off.)—Ha! I drum.
 —Thou'rt quick,
 But yet I'll bury thee: Thou'lt go, strong thief,
 When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:—
 Nay, stay thou out for earnest. (Keeping some gold.)

Enter ALCIBIADES, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; PHRYNIA and TIMANDRA.

Alcib. What art thou there?
 Speak.
Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart,
 For shewing me again the eyes of man!
Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee,
 That art thyself a man?
Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.
 For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,
 That I might love thee something.
Alcib. I know thee well;
 But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Tim. I know thee too; and more, than that I know
 thee,
 I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
 With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules:
 Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
 Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine
 Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
 For all her cherubin look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off!
Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns
 To thine own lips again.
Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:
 But then renew I could not, like the moon;
 There were no suns to borrow of.
Alcib. Noble Timon,
 What friendship may I do thee?
Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.
Alcib. What is it, Timon?
Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: If Thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for Thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee,
 For thou'rt a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.
Tim. Thou saw'st them when I had prosperity.
Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed time.
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.
Timandra. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world
 Voted so regardfully?
Tim. Art thou Timandra?
Timandra. Yes.
Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use
 thee;

Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
 Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves
 For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheeked youth
 To the tub-fast, and the diet.
Timandra. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits
 Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.—
 I have but little gold of late, brave Timon,
 The want whereof doth daily make revolt
 In my penurious band: I have heard and grieved,
 How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,
 Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
 But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon thee.—
Tim. I prythee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.
Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
Tim. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.
Alcib. Why, fare thee well:
 Here's some gold for thee.
Tim. Keep't, I cannot eat it.
Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—
Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?
Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.
Tim. The gods confound them all! thy conquest; and
 Thee after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib. Why me, Timon?
Tim. That,
 By killing villains, thou wast born to conquer
 My country.
 Put up thy gold: Go on,—here's gold,—go on;
 Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
 Will o'er some high-civiled city hang his poison
 In the sick air: Let not thy sword skip one:
 Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
 He's an usurer: Strike me the counterfeit matron;
 It is her habit only that is honest,
 Herself's a bawd: Let not the virgin's cheek
 Make soft thy trechant sword; for those milk-paps,
 That through the window-bars bore at men's eyes,
 Are not within the leaf of pity writ,
 Set them down horrible traitors: Spare not the babe,
 Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their mercy;
 Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
 Hath doubtfully pronounced thy throat shall cut,
 And mince it sans remorse: Swear against objects;
 Put armour on thine ears, and on thine eyes;
 Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maiden, nor babes,
 Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,
 Shall pierce a jot. There's no lot to pay thy soldiers:
 Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,
 Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me,
 Not all thy counsel.

Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, Heaven's curse upon thee!
Phr. & Timan. Give us some gold, good Timon:
 Hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade,
 And to make whores, a bawd. Hold up, you sluts,
 Your aprons mountant: You are not oatable,—
 Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear,
 Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues,
 The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths,
 I'll trust to your conditions: Be whores still;
 And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you,
 Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up;
 Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
 And be no turncoats: Yet may our pains, six months,
 Be quite contrary: And thatch your poor thin roofs
 With burdens of the dead;—some that were hang'd,
 No matter;—wear them, betray with them: whore still;

Paint, till a horse may mire upon your face:
 A pox of wrinkles!

Phr. & Timan. Well, more gold:—What then?—
 Believe't, that we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim. Consumptions sow
 In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shins,
 And mar men's spurring.—Crack the lawyer's voice,
 That he may never more false title plead,
 Nor sound his quilllets shrilly; hoar the flamen,
 That scolds against the quality of flesh,
 And not believes himself; down with the nose,
 Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away
 Of him that his particular to foreseee,
 Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate
 ruffians bald;

And let the unscar'd braggarts of the war
 Derive some pain from you: Plague ail;
 That your activity may defeat and quell
 The source of all erection.—There's more gold:—
 Do you damn others, and let this damn you,
 And ditches grave you all!

Phr & Timan. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.

Tim. More whore, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens. Farewell, Timon;

If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more.

Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alcib. Call'st thou that harm?

Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away,

And take thy heagles with thee. We but offend him.

Strike.

[Drum beats. Exeunt Alcibiades, Phrynia, and Timandra.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness, Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou,

(Digging.)

Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd, Engenders the black toad, and adder blue, The gilded newt, and eyesless venom'd worm, With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven, Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy piteous bosom one poor root! Insear thy fertile and conceivous womb, Let it no more bring out ingrateful man! Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears; Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face Hath to the marbled mansion all above Never presented!—O, a root,—Dear thanks! Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas; Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts, And morsels unctuous, greases his pure uind, That from it all consideration slips!

Enter APEMANTUS.

More man? Plague! plague!

Apem. I was directed hither; men report,

Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use a dog.

Tim. 'Tis then, because thou dost not keep a dog,

Whom I would imitate: Consumption catch thee!

Apem. 'Tis in this nature but affected;

A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung

From change of fortune. Why this spade? this place?

This slave-like habit? and these looks of care?

Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft;

Hug their diseased perfumes, and bare forgot

That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods,

By putting on the cunning of a carper.

Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive

By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee;

And let his very breath whom thou 'lt observe,

Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain,

And call it excellent: Thou wast told thus;

Thou givest thine ears, like tapsters, that bid welcome,

To knaves, and all approachers: 'Tis most just,

That thou turn rascal, hadst thou wealth again.

Rascals should have 't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself;

A madman so long, now a fool: What, think'st

That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,

Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moss'd trees,

That have outlived the eagle, page thy heels,

And skip, when thou point'st out? Will the cold brook,

Candied with ice, candle thy morning taste,

To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Call the creatures,

Whose naked natures live in all the spite,

Of wreakful heaven; whose bare unhouss'd trunks,

To the conflicting elements exposed,

Answer mere nature,—bid them flatter thee;

O! thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee: Depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say, thou art a caltiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's.

Dost please thyself in't?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour-old habit on

To castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou

Dost it enforcedly; thou 'dst courtier he again,

Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery

Outlives uncertain pomp, is crowd'd before:

The one is filling still, never emptye; The other, at high wish: Best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst, content.

Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom fortune's tender arm

With favour never clasps'd; but bred a dog.

Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath, proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords

To such as may the passive drugs of it

Freely command, thou wouldst have plunged thyself

In general riot; melted down thy youth

In different beds of lust; and never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd

The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,

Who had the world as my confectionary;

The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;

That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves

Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush

Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare

For every storm that blows;—I, to bear this;

That never knew but better, is some burden:

Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time

Hath made thee hard in 't. Why shouldst thou hate me?

They never flatter'd thee: What hast thou given?

If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag,

Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff

To some she beggar, and compounded thee

Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!

If thou hadst not been horn the worst of men,

Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

Apem. I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now;

Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee,

I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—

That the whole life of Athens were in this!

Thus would I eat it. (Eating a root.)

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast

(Offering him something.)

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but butch'd;

If not, I would it were.

Apem. What wouldst thou have to Athens?

Tim. Three thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best, and truest:

For here it sleeps, and does no hire'd harm.

Apem. Where liest o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou n' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather where I eat it.

Tim. 'Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medal for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a medal?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hadst hadt meddlers sooner, thou shouldst have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the tinnus themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world,

Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A basely ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee: and still thou lived'st but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be killed by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotiun; and thy defence, absence. What beast couldst thou be that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation?

Apem. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou mightst have hit upon it here: The common-wealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet, and a painter: The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog than a peasant.

Apem. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.

Apem. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains, that do stand by thee, are pure.

Apem. There is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee.—

I'll beat thee—but I should infect my hands.

Apem. I would, my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a manky dog!

Choler does kill me, that thou art alive;

I swoon to see thee.

Apem. 'Would thou wouldst hurst!

Tim. Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose

A stone by thee. (Throws a stone at him.)

Apem. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Apem. Toad!

Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!

[Apemantus retreats backward, as going.]

I am slok of this false world; and will love nought

But even the mere necessities upon it.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;

Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat

Thy grave-stone dally: make thine epitaph,

That death in me at others' lives may laugh.

O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce

(Looking on the gold.)

'Tis natural son and sire! thou bright defiler

Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!

Thou ever young, fresh, loved, and delicate wooer,

Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow

That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,

That soldier'st close impossibilities,

And makest them kiss! that speak'st with every tongue,

To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!

Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue

Set them into confounding odds, that beasts

May have the world in empire!

Apem. 'Would 'twere so;—

But not till I am dead!—I'll say, thou hast gold:

Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

Tim. Throng'd to?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Thy hack, I pr'ythee.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery!

Tim. Long live so, and so die!—I am quit.—

[Exit Apemantus.]

More things like men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder: The mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

2 Thief. It is noised, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him; if he care not for 't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously re-serve it, how shall 't get it?

2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him 'tis hid.

1 Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thief. 'Tis his description.

3 Thief. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too, and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.

Why should you want? Behold the earth hath roots?

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs:

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;

The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush

Lays her full mess before you. Want? why want?

1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water,

As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes.

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con,

That you are thieves profess'd; that you work not

In holier shapes: for there is houndless theft

In limited professions. Rascal thieves,

Here's gold! Go, suck the subtle blood of the grape,

Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,

And so 'scape hanging: trust not the physician;

His antidotes are poison, and he slays

More than you rob: take wealth and lives together;

Do villainy, do, since you profess to do't,

Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery:

The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction

Robs the vast sea; the moon's an arrant thief,

And her pale fire she snatches from the sun;

The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves

The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief,

That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen

From general excrement: each thing's a thief;

The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power

Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves; away;

Rob one another. There's more gold: Cut throats;

All that you meet are thieves: To Athens, go,

Break open shops; nothing can you steal,

But thieves do lose it: Steal not less, for this

I give you; and gold confound you howsoever.

Amen. (Timon retires to his cave.)

3 Thief. He has almost charmed me from my profes- sion, by persuading me to it.

1 Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens: There is no time so miserable, but a man may be true.

[Exit Thieves.]

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O you gods!

Is von despised and ruinous man my lord?

Full of decay and falling? O monument

And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd!

What an alteration of honour has

Desperate want made!

What viler thing upon the earth, than friends,

Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends!

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,

When man was wish'd to love his enemies:

Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo

Those that would mischief me, than those that do!

He has caught me in his eye; I will present

My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,

Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

TIMON comes forward from his cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir?

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men;

Thou, if thou grant'st thou'rt man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then

I know thee not: I ne'er had honest man

About me, I; all that I kept were knaves,

To serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,

Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief

For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep?—Come nearer;—then

I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st

Plinty mankind; whose eyes do never give,

But thorough lust, and laughter. Pity's sleeping;

Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord,

To accept my grief, and whilst this poor wealth lasts,

To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now so comfortable? It almost turns my dangerous nature wild. Let me behold Thy face.—Surely this man was born of woman.—Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, Perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one; No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.—How fain would I have hated all mankind, And thou redeem'st thyself: But all, save thee, I fell with curses. Methinks, thou art more honest now than wise; For, by oppressing and betraying me, Thou mightst have sooner got another service: For many so arrive at second masters, Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true, [For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,] Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous, If not a usuring kindness; and as rich men deal gifts, Exceeding in return twenty for one? Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast Doubt and suspect, alas, are placed too late: You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast: Suspect still comes, where an estate is least. That which I shew, Heaven knows, is merely love, Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind, Care of your food and living: and, believe it, My most honour'd lord, For any benefit that points to me, Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange For this one wish, That you had power and wealth To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so!—Thou singly honest man, Here, take—the gods out of my misery Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy: But thus condition'd: Thou shalt build from men; Hate all, curse all; shew charity to none; But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone, Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs What thou deniest to men; let prisons swallow them, Debts wither them: Be men like blasted woods, And may diseases lick up their false bloods! And so, farewell, and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay, And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hastest Curses, stay not; fly, while thou'rt bless'd and free: Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter: TIMON behind, unseen.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Tim. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore, 'tis not amiss, we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will shew honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air of the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act: and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity; with a discovery of the infinite dainties that follow youth and opulence.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Will thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him: Then do we sin against our own estate, When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Pain. True; When the day serves, before black-corner'd night, Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold, That he is worshipp'd in a baser temple Than where swine feed! 'Tis thou that rigg'st the bark, and plough'st the foam; Settled admir'd reverence in a slave: To thee be worship! and thy saluts for aye Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey! 'Fit I do meet thee. (Advancing.)

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master.

Tim. Have I once lived to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir, Having often of your open bounty tasted, [Hearing you were retired, your friends fall'n off, Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits! Not all the whips of Heaven are large enough— What! to you! Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence To their whole being! I'm rapt, and cannot cover The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't the better: You, that are honest, by being what you are, Make them best seen and known.

Pain. He, and myself, Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts, And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men,

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite you?

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men: You have heard that I have gold;

I am sure you have: speak truth: you are honest men. Pain. So it is said, my noble lord: but therefore Came not my friend nor I.

Tim. Good honest men!—Thou draw'st a counterfeit Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best; Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, sir, as I say:—And, for thy fiction, (To the Poet.)

Why, thy verses swell with stuff so fine and smooth, That thou art even natural in thine art.— But, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends, I must needs say, you have a little fault: Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I, You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour,

To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knave,

That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dissemble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,

Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd,

That he's a made-up villain.

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,

Rid me these villains from your companies:

Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught,

Confound them by some course, and come to me,

I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this, but two in com-
